LEAVES OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. WOODRUFF, at the request of Mr. MICHENER, on account of illness.

Mr. MONTAGUE, for three days, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. DOYLE, for 10 days, on account of illness.
Mr. BELL, for five days, on account of important business.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15712, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand that when the committee rose the last time the bill was under consideration the Clerk had read up to and including line 11 on page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 12, line 11, strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided further, That none of the money appropriated in this act shall be used to pay any officer or enlisted man on the retired list of the Army who is in the employ of the United States and whose salary for such employment exceeds $2,500 per annum."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not germane. I shall reserve the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no. If the gentleman wants to make the point of order, let us dispose of that now.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the amendment correctly, it is apparently to limit the purposes for which these funds shall be used, but the practical effect of the amendment is to change substantive law, the law governing the payments to retired officers. For that reason I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, and that while upon its face it is a limitation, yet nevertheless it changes existing law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the question of germaneness does not enter into this at all at this time. The amendment is purely a limitation upon the appropriation, and the Chair has nothing else to do but to observe the paragraph following the one just read, which is a similar limitation and which has been passed on repeatedly on this very bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California wish to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. BARBOUR. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York seems to the Chair clearly a limitation, and a proper limitation from a parliamentary standpoint. It refers only to the money appropriated in this bill and limits the purposes for which this money may be expended. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the purpose of my amendment is simply to prevent the drawing of two pays by retired officers of the Army. Recently there has been an epidemic of young retired officers getting from $3,000 to $3,500 and $4,000 retired pay entering the employment of the United States and receiving an additional Government pay. Now, it is very difficult for a man in civil life to enter into competition with Army officers drawing two pays. If an Army officer is physically incapacitated so that he can not work for the United States Government and he is retired for that reason and receives a pension, it seems strange that the next week he can turn around and obtain employment by the same Government and receive pay for his services, thereby receiving two salaries.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is that occurring at the present time of the year or last year or two years ago?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is going on right now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Men getting two salaries after they are retired?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What officers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why we had General Andrews on retired pay, we had Major Mills, Barnett——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Government is employing them after they are retired?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; that is going on right now, and it is manifestly unfair that other men have to come in and compete with those men who for some reason or other are preferred. Now, this ought to be stopped.

I provide in my amendment a limitation on the appropriation prohibiting the payment of retired pay to those receiving an additional Government salary of $2,500. I do not want to hurt the old soldier who is getting $30 a month pension and perhaps has a position as watchman or janitor paying him $1,200 or $1,500 a year. That is not the purpose of my amendment. Its purpose is to put an end to practically young men who manage to be retired drawing a good pension and then immediately obtaining other Government employment. A youngster entering the Army at 22 retires at about 55 on three-fourths of his base pay, and if he has the slightest disability he may retire at 40 or 45 years of age. Gentlemen, you provide in this bill millions of dollars of pensions for officers on three-quarters base pay and allow them to retire after actual 30 years' service and sometimes less. We have on the Speaker's table a bill and a rule providing for its consideration at any time that it is called up giving the civil-service employees a slight increase in retired pay and even then the maximum would be only $1,200, and we can not get a vote on it. Our whole retirement system is inconsistent and unjust. The poor civil-service employees, who pay for most of the cost, can not even obtain a maximum of $1,200, and Army officers are retired at comparatively young age on handsome pensions.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. HUDSON. Under the gentleman's proviso about what salary will be paid the retired officer when he gets——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, it depends upon the position with the Government he may obtain.

Mr. HUDSON. I thought possibly the gentleman had figured out as to what the average would be. In other words, suppose you take the retired officer who goes back into service and accepts a salary on which he could not live and——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But you expect everybody else to do it, that is my point. That is exactly my point. If a man in my district and your district or my State and your State enters the Government service and takes a position that pays a certain salary and a retired officer comes in and takes over a job and also gets his retired pay, of course it is discrimination against the citizens of your State and my State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would ask for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. NEWTON. Can the gentleman in the course of his study of this question tell the committee about how many officers who are drawing retired pay who are now working for the Government and receiving more than $2,500?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The number has nothing to do with it. There should not be one.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman is proposing an amendment here and asking the committee to pass upon it. Now, it seems to me it is rather pertinent to ascertain whether there are any who are drawing the pay and how many there are.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There are some.

Mr. NEWTON. If there are, who are they and how many of them are there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The personality of the officers has nothing to do with it.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes; but who they are and how many there are has something to do with it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it is wrong for one, it is wrong for 100,000.

Mr. BACON. I do not think the gentleman has made a careful study of this question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This question has been put before the committee from year to year.

Mr. BACON. Why has not the gentleman made some investigation of this subject, so that he could give us some facts? Does the gentleman know of any case? Can the gentleman give us some numbers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that it is contrary to the law for any civil employee of the United States to draw two salaries unless he happens to be a retired officer of the Army or Navy—then an exception is made and the retired officer is permitted to draw two pays. These men are favored. It is unjust. It is not right. The exception to the law is contrary to its very spirit and purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose a man is an officer at 22 years of age. When under the law does he retire?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It might be after 30 years, or 20 years, or 15 years if he has had some slight disability. If a man loses a finger or has a slight disability, he can retire on three-quarters pay. Such officers do not contribute a cent to the officers' retirement fund, whereas in the civil service employees contribute to their retirement fund and receive a most measly allowance?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is his allowance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The retired officer's allowance is three-quarters of his pay at the time of retirement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I think the discussion of this amendment shows the unwisdom of trying to legislate—and that is the character of this amendment, legislation—on an appropriation bill. Questions have been asked here going right to the merits of the whole proposition, upon which we have been unable to get any information at all, and for that reason it is unwise to undertake to change substantive law that has been in effect for years by an amendment under the guise of a limitation on an appropriation bill.

Here is a question that is important: As to the merits of it we do not know, because the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], when asked material questions, did not have the information desired. It seems to me that a proposition of this kind should be made in the regular way and brought in here as legislation and considered by the House as legislation, so that the House could be fully advised as to what the effect of the legislation will be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill appropriating millions of dollars for retired pay if he knows the number of retired officers drawing retired pay.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know how many are drawing retired pay and other pay in addition thereto.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman should know.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman from New York is the proponent of this amendment, and he should know.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from California is protecting this retired pay and he has brought in an appropriation covering it. His attention was drawn to it before. If the gentleman does not know what is going on, it is his responsibility and not mine.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give way for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me first finish my statement. The gentleman from New York has offered an amendment, and the burden is on him to give the information desired respecting it. This appropriation bill is brought in here making the same provision as has been provided for years past. The gentleman from New York wants to change it. If the House wants to change it without studying the effect of it, it can do so. The burden here is on the gentleman who offered the amendment to give the facts and figures to sustain his amendment. The law on the subject is this. I read:

Double salaries: Unless otherwise specifically authorized by law, no money appropriated by any act shall be available for payment to any person receiving more than one salary when the combined amount of said salaries exceeds the sum of $2,000 per annum. (R. S., sec. 1763; May 10, 1916, c. 117, sec. 6, 39 Stat. 120; Aug. 29, 1916, c. 417, 39 Stat. 582.)

Now, there is an exception to that law, evidently passed for some purpose, and the exception is section 59. I read:

Same; exceptions; retired officers and enlisted men of Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or officers and enlisted men of militia. Section 58 of this title shall not apply to retired officers or enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or to officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia and Naval Militia in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia. (May 10, 1916, c. 117, sec. 6, 39 Stat. 120; Aug. 29, 1916, c. 417, 39 Stat. 582.)

When that law was passed, for some reason an exception was made in these cases, but we have not had an opportunity to find out the reason. This amendment of the gentleman from New York comes in under the guise of a limitation to strike out that exception.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. When was that law passed?

Mr. BARBOUR. In 1916.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The appropriation has been made from year to year?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. The appropriation has been made from year to year. A few years ago there was incorporated in the appropriation bill this provision, and it has been carried in this bill ever since:

None of the money appropriated in this act shall be used to pay any officer on the retired list of the Army who for himself or for others engages in the selling, contracting for the sale of, negotiating for the sale of, or furnishing to the Army or the War Department any supplies, materials, equipment, lands, buildings, plants, vessels, or munitions. None of the money appropriated in this act shall be paid to any officer on the retired list of the Army who, having been retired before reaching the age of 64, is employed in the United States or its possessions by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association regularly or frequently engaged in making direct sales of any merchandise or material to the War Department or the Army.

That is to keep a retired officer of the Army from going to work for some commercial concern that sells materials to the Army and drawing his retired pay at the same time.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. And dealing with his former associates in the Army.

Mr. BARBOUR. And dealing with his former associates in the Army, as the gentleman from Texas suggests. That bars them from engaging in that kind of an activity.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is nothing which prevents an officer from waiving his pay and then dealing with his former associates?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; that can be done.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That being so, how can the gentleman distinguish between the limitation in his own bill and my limitation?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think the gentleman's limitation applies to retired officers engaged in the business of selling supplies and materials to the War Department. My understanding is that there are certain officers of the Government, who are retired Army officers, whose salaries are fixed at a certain amount; they draw their retired pay, but they do not draw the full amount of their other salary; they draw their retired pay and enough in addition to make up what their salary would be. I understand that is true in the case of the Director of the Budget, who is a retired Army officer, and if my information is correct that is true in the cases of other officers. So it is apparent on the face of it that there are many questions involved here, and if anything of this kind is to be done we should take time to look into the matter and see what the effect of such action will be.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. It appears to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York has some merit in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. As I say, it looks to me as though this amendment may have some merit in it, but from the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee it seems to me the amendment ought not to be voted into this bill at this time but that there ought to be some consideration given to the proposition, because, as I say, on the face of it it appears to have some merit in it. However, I would not want to vote for this amendment in face of what the chairman of the subcommittee has said.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With all due deference to the chairman, he has not said very much with reference to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF COURTS-MARTIAL

For expenses of courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, boards, and compensation of reporters and witnesses attending same, contract stenographic reporting services, and expenses of taking depositions and securing other evidence for use before the same, $80,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that in line 12, page 13, after the word "commissions" the word "retiring" has been omitted. The law provides for retiring boards; but on page 13, line 12, after the word "commissions" the word "retiring" is omitted. On August 8, 1928, the Comptroller General rendered a decision in this respect and certain gentlemen in the War Department wish to nullify that decision by having the new change in language. When the matter was before the subcommittee the members of the subcommittee admitted it was legislation. In addition, I have a letter here from the office of the Judge Advocate General in which they also admit that it is legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. JAMES. I do.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated the purpose of this. The committee made the change in the bill at the request of these officials of the War Department who were hampered by this decision of the Comptroller General. I think the point of order is good, if the gentleman insists on it. I would like to offer the suggestion, though, Mr. Chairman, that the paragraph itself has legislation in it. For instance, the paragraph provides for contract stenographic reporting services, which, I understand, are not authorized by law but have been carried in this bill for years as a formal matter; and the matter objected to by the gentleman from Michigan as being legislation is legislation in a section that is in itself legislation and has been heretofore carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California concede the point of order?

Mr. BARBOUR. I concede the point of order; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] make his point of order against one word or against the entire paragraph?

Mr. JAMES. I make the point of order because the word "retiring" has been omitted. It will be satisfactory to me if the chairman of the subcommittee would offer an amendment putting back the word "retiring."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Where would that word go in the paragraph?

Mr. JAMES. It has been omitted from line 5 after the word "commissions."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How does the gentleman from Michigan suggest that it should read?

Mr. JAMES. "Retiring boards."

Mr. BURTNESS. In other words, if the gentleman will permit, there is now authority to pay these expenses for retiring boards, but no legislative authority for boards other than retiring boards; that is the actual situation?

Mr. JAMES. That is right; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Michigan objects to the entire paragraph on account of the one offending word or does the gentleman simply make a point of order against one word?

Mr. JAMES. I make the point of order against the word "retiring."

The CHAIRMAN. That word is not in the paragraph.

Mr. JAMES. It ought to be in the paragraph. I make the point of order against the word "boards."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the word "boards" goes out of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

APPREHENSION OF DESERTERS, ETC.

For the apprehension, securing, and delivering of soldiers absent without leave and of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $10 to each prisoner discharged otherwise than honorably upon his release from confinement under court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge, $110,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 13, line 20, strike out "$50" and insert in lieu thereof "$10"; and on page 14, line 2, strike out "$110,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 13, in line 20, strike out "$50" and insert in lieu thereof "$10"; and on page 14, in line 2, strike out "$110,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to the great Appropriations Committee, which has a complete monopoly on all knowledge, military and otherwise, and resents any suggestions, I want to point out to the committee the grave abuses that exist in the apprehension of deserters and the payment of these rewards; particularly is this so in the large cities where the "desertion business" has developed into a regular industry.

Young men are enticed from their posts or ships, encouraged to desert, in some cases employment is found for them, and when the statutory period expires making them deserters they are apprehended by the same men who enticed them to desert and turned back for the sole purpose of obtaining this reward. Everybody in the Army knows this is so. Yes; I would say to the committee, if I may be permitted, that I simply tremble in fear every time I take the floor and make the slightest suggestion to the Committee on Appropriations.

The gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] just a moment ago made a speech which was the best argument for my amendment, and then urged the House to vote it down. Then he criticized the gentleman from New York because he did not give sufficient facts, but the gentleman from California, with all his hearings here [exhibiting], thousands of pages, did not know anything about the whole retirement system in the United States Army. The law he quoted proved conclusively the unfair exception made in favor of retired Army officers.

Now, gentlemen, there is a bad condition concerning desertion in the Army. As pointed out a few days ago on the floor of the House, in speaking of the desertions, they give us the figures in percentages, because 5 per cent does not sound like very much; but there were over 5,000 desertions in one year—over one entire regiment of your entire Army deserted in one year.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will there be more or less desertion if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think there will be less. I think it is worth while trying for a year. I really believe in a great many of the desertions the boys are enticed to go away and are then brought back.

Mr. BURTNESS. Why not try to change it to $25?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will compromise at $25. I am not the Committee on Appropriations. I admit I am wrong often, and that is why I am not on this great committee. I have not any of the atmosphere of infallibility about me. If the gentleman from California will accept a compromise of $25, let us try it for one year, because you have a bad condition. All I am trying to do is to remedy conditions which should not exist.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations in considering this item and passing on it, reduced the amount from $170,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, to $110,000. We cut the estimate $60,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But not the amount of the reward.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; the amount of the reward is the same. As I understand the law on the subject, it is that the Secretary of War is authorized to pay a reward for the capture of deserters not in excess of $50. The testimony before the subcommittee, as I remember it, was that in many cases less than $50 is paid, and in many cases $50 does not even reimburse them for the expense of returning the deserter.

There is another item in here, but I think the amendment of the gentleman from New York takes care of that. There is $30,000 in here for the payment of $10 to each discharged prisoner from a military prison. I believe it is the intent of the gentleman from New York to retain that item?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee feels, however, that the reduction it has already made in the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget is sufficient.

This is another one of those amendments that seeks to change law that has been in existence for a long time, and we do not have an opportunity, when it comes up as an amendment on an appropriation bill, to go into the merits of it and determine just what the effect of it will be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know the gentleman wants to be fair in stating the facts.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am trying to be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What expense can there possibly be to anyone receiving the reward in connection with the delivery of a prisoner?

Mr. BARBOUR. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman said that in many instances the $50 reward did not even pay the expenses. Anyone delivering a prisoner can not have any expenses.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He can not take them into custody; he can not feed them; he can detain them.

Mr. BARBOUR. He must.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under what authority of law does a private citizen have any right to arrest a deserter?

Mr. BARBOUR. A deserter has violated the law. The sheriff, for instance, or a constable or a police officer picks up a deserter, say, two or three hundred miles from the nearest Army post. In order to collect the $50 reward he must return the deserter to the nearest Army post. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. CLAGUE. Oh, yes; surely it is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A private citizen can not take a deserter over into custody.

Mr. BARBOUR. A police officer arrests him upon the ground that he is a deserter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And informs the nearest military authority, and then they send a patrol for him.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, no. He has to deliver the deserter at the nearest military post to collect his $50; but the testimony is that in many cases $50 will not pay the expense, and for that reason a lot of deserters are not returned, because peace officers will not pay money out of their own pockets in order to do it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the military authorities will not send for a deserter when they know where he is?

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, lots of times they are picked up by soldiers, but we are talking about the men who collect the $50. That man must deliver the prisoner to the nearest military post in order to collect the $50. The gentleman stated a moment ago that he was willing to agree on $25, and in that case the amount of this appropriation would be $100,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very well. Make it $100,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. The bill carries a hundred and ten thousand dollars, which is only $10,000 more than that, so that the gentleman and the committee are not very far apart if we stick to the total now in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am not concerned with the total. I am concerned with the maximum amount that shall be paid as a reward. If the gentleman will take $25 instead of $50, that is satisfactory to me, and I am not concerned with the total.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman from New York mean to say that there is a number of well-established cases where certain men deliberately frame soldiers, get them drunk, and have them desert and then have them arrested in order to make $50?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Where does that practice obtain?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In all of the large centers. I get that from the Army men themselves.

Mr. SCHAFER. That practice does not obtain in our city of Milwaukee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA Have you not any soldiers there?

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, yes; we have many of them.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. How many of these cases occur in the city of New York, for instance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it the gentleman's proposition to leave the amount at $110,000 and change the maximum amount that can be paid for apprehending a deserter to $25?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will accept that, I shall accept the other part of it.

Mr. BARBOUR. We will accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend my amendment by inserting $25 in place of $10.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 13, line 20, strike out "$50" and insert "$25."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for payment of expenses of operating any utility or instrumentality of the War Department selling services or supplies at which the cost of the services or supplies so sold does not include all customary overhead costs of labor, rent, light, heat, and other expenses properly chargeable to the conduct of such utility or instrumentality: Provided, That no such utility or instrumentality shall procure for sale any article not regularly carried in stock.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language in line 22, on page 16, commencing with the words:

Provided, That no such utility or instrumentality shall procure for sale any article not regularly carried in stock.

I do this because it is legislation unauthorized by law on an appropriation bill. Also I make the further point of order to the language in line 17, on page 16, to the words "utility or instrumentality," and the same on line 22, as to the words "utility or instrumentality." I do that for the same reason that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the ground of the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. JAMES. It is new legislation. It applies to post exchanges. There is nothing in this bill where we are appropriating money for post exchanges. The post exchanges are conducted by money furnished by the troops themselves—the enlisted men.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the position of the subcommittee is that this is a limitation upon the expenditure of these funds, the purpose for which they may be expended.

Mr. JAMES. But we do not appropriate any money for post exchanges. The post exchanges are run by the men themselves.

Mr. BARBOUR. On page 9 of the bill there is an appropriation for military post exchanges, and the amount carried is $72,000. There are a lot of expenses in connection with military post exchanges not borne by the exchanges themselves, and this is a limitation on those funds.

Mr. JAMES. Even conceding that; the gentleman said a while ago, in response to the LaGuardia amendment, that matters of legislation that come up suddenly ought to be considered by the proper committee, which in this case is the Committee on Military Affairs. There is nothing to show there has been any abuse by the post exchanges. There is nothing in here to show that the post exchanges have sold anything they ought not to sell.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is it not true that post exchanges are for the benefit of enlisted men? That is the only place where they can go. The officers can go down town, but the enlisted men go to the post exchange and there make their little bargains of things which they desire.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The very purpose of the post exchange is to give these soldiers who get $24 a month an opportunity to buy the necessaries of life at actual cost.

Mr. JAMES. That is the reason they were established.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Some mushroom or little stands around the post exchange come in and succeed in having this written into the bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I would like to call attention to the section on page 9, to which the chairman of the subcommittee called attention, providing for an appropriation of $72,000, which does not seem to cover purchase of supplies but simply for the conduct of the post exchange. Let me read the paragraph:

For the equipment and conduct of the post exchange, school, reading, lunch, and amusement rooms, service clubs, chapels, gymnasiums, and libraries, including periodicals and other publications and subscriptions for newspapers for which payment may be made in advance, and including salaries and travel for civilians employed in the hostess and library services, and for transportation of books and equipment for these services; for the rental of films, purchase of slides for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits, and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established or which may be hereafter established, $72,000.

There is nothing about the purchase of such supplies as mentioned with the $72,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the method of approach, by a limitation of this kind. It would be impossible for an enlisted man working around a post exchange to get any benefit.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The purpose of the new legislation does not provide for any saving to the United States Government which might accrue under the operation of this particular amendment, but this is to be paid by those who enjoy the benefits. This stops the purchase of certain things under this bill, but it does not provide for a saving by a reduction of expenses of the United States Government.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. These purchases are made not by funds of the Federal Government but by the funds of the men themselves. Even if there should be a retrenchment, it would not be a retrenchment of the funds of the Government, but in the conduct of the organization.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And a part of the expenses are paid by those who enjoy the privileges but not by the Federal Government.

Mr. JAMES. By the men of our Military Establishment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from California whether this limitation applies to anything other than the expenditure of funds authorized by this appropriation bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is a limitation to the funds carried in this bill. None of those other funds that have been referred to are appropriated in this act.

Mr. JAMES. If you will examine the hearings you will find that it all revolves around the post exchange. We contribute nothing to the financing of the post exchanges.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman to the code, title 10, section 1231, which provides as follows:

Sale price of quartermaster supplies: Authorized sales of clothing and other quartermaster supplies shall be for cash or on credit at the average current prices plus all overhead costs, to be determined and fixed by the Secretary of War. (June 30, 1922, c. 253, Title I, 42 Stat. 729.)

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War has nothing at all to do with the regulation of prices charged at the post exchange.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to find out what this limitation has to do with the post exchange. It does not clearly appear on the face of it that it has anything to do with the post exchange.

Mr. JAMES. If you will read the hearings you will find that it applies only to the post exchange.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. It all applies to the post exchanges.

The CHAIRMAN. Then does it limit the post exchange in its expenditure of funds other than those carried in this appropriation bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. It simply limits funds carried in this bill. But the other post exchange funds are not affected.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, everything in the bill is included in this act. If the post exchanges are conducted by the enlisted men the amendment properly could not limit it, because it would not be a Government expenditure. Therefore the rule of limitation would not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to find out whether it applies to funds other than those carried in this act.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from California says this is a fund to start the post exchanges, and then the exchange is carried on further by the men.

Mr. BARBOUR. It would apply only to funds carried in this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It goes further than a limitation. They can expend these funds provided they add to it the cost of overhead. Thereby a limitation is imposed.

The CHAIRMAN. But in section 1231, title 10, of the code, as read by the Chair, it is provided that in determining the cost it is required to include the cost of overhead.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The limitation says the funds shall be expended only for certain purposes. This is legislation attempted under the guise of a limitation. In other words, it is going to prevent these men from adding the overhead to the cost.

Mr. JAMES. The last proviso says:

Provided, That no such utility or instrumentality shall procure for sale any article not regularly carried in stock.

In other words, a post exchange with its own money could not buy a radio set or a kodak to supply it to these men unless it was carried in stock. I make a point of order against that particular proviso. My first point of order was on that particular proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will sustain that point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all on page 16 from line 16 to line 22, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 16, line 16, strike out all of line 16 to line 22, inclusive.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this is the result that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] desired to obtain by his first point of order. The situation is this: At every military post there is a post exchange; just a store, selling the things that the men need around the post. There has been some agitation against these post exchanges by small business men who establish themselves in the vicinity of the post, claiming that by reason of the fact that rent and light and heat are not properly included in the retail prices of commodities sold in the post exchange, such as chewing gum and cigarettes, these independent outside establishments are at a disadvantage in carrying on their business.

There is a very good reason for the post exchanges. First, they give the soldier an opportunity to buy at practically cost the things he needs; and second, in many instances in these little stores around a military post there is a back room, a rear room behind the front store where craps are played, or other plants to get the soldier's money. Now the post exchanges are very useful. It is a very picayune matter to attempt to add overhead expenses which really do not exist, in order to increase the cost to the soldiers. This very bill provides for an appropriation of $72,000, as pointed out by the gentleman from California, for the purpose of keeping these post exchanges going. That in itself shows that they are wanted, that they are needed and that they are necessary. Now, to provide an artificial overhead expense simply to make prices the same as in stores outside of the post destroys the very purpose of the exchange. I hope the committee will agree to the striking out of this paragraph and leaving the exchanges as they were and have been for the last 40 or 50 years. That is all there is to it.

Mr. JAMES. Up to a short time ago, and until the new ration went into effect, the men were paying for a part of their own food, and a good deal of the money they made on the post exchanges went into their food.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It does yet.

Mr. JAMES. We should not penalize them because of this profit, because it enables them to purchase a radio or to fix up their rooms. By doing this we are not penalizing the officers, but we are penalizing the enlisted men.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the money also goes for athletics. They buy their balls and bats and everything like that out of the company funds. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the language now contained in the paragraph, with the proviso stricken out, is practically the language of the substantive law, and that would be effective anyway. This simply applies the substantive law to these particular funds, and there is, perhaps, no necessity for making that application.

I think from the discussion here, Mr. Chairman, that there is possibly a misunderstanding with regard to the purpose of this proviso to which a point of order has been sustained. It was not the intention of the committee to in any way hamper the operations of these post exchanges. They are a very fine thing and they render a great service not only to the enlisted men at the various posts, but also to the officers and their families, and the very fact that we carry over $70,000 in the bill to help pay the expenses of the post exchanges is evidence of the fact that the committee is not unfriendly to the post exchanges. However, it was brought to the attention of the committee that some of the post exchanges had no limitation whatsoever on the articles sold. They were not such as enlisted men would buy; they were special articles that outside people might want. We were told, for instance, that through a friend at the post a civilian could buy a wrist watch, a radio set, or almost anything.

Mr. COLLINS. And evening dresses.

Mr. BARBOUR. Evening dresses, if you please, and obtain them at reduced prices. Now, the merchants in some of these towns, who were paying local taxes, rents, and things of that kind, felt that they should not be compelled to meet that kind of competition.

They had no objection to the ordinary operations of the post exchanges for the benefit of persons on the post. A short time ago it was brought to our attention that one of these post exchanges advertised in a near-by paper that it had on hand a large supply of Christmas toys which were available to anyone who wanted to come to the post and buy them. That is competition with the local merchants, which we thought was possibly going a little too far in the conduct of post exchanges, and that was the purpose of putting this proviso in the bill. It was not put in the bill for the purpose of restricting the operations of the post exchanges so far as the enlisted men, the officers, and their families were concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would it not be better to put in a proviso restricting the sale of these articles rather than to undertake to tell them how to run the post exchanges?

Mr. BARBOUR. That was intended to be the purpose of the proviso. The proviso is—

That no such utility or instrumentality shall procure for sale any article not regularly carried in stock.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then they would just increase their stock and they could carry all they pleased.

Mr. BARBOUR. I realize that the words "regularly carried in stock" are open to construction and that that language is more or less elastic.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why not restrict it to the soldiers and officers and not let the public buy?

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee did not feel that it cared to go that far, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, and that if we did go that far it would be legislation.

Mr. JAMES. Does not the gentleman think they should sell to the civilian employees of the Government?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is no question about that.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The proviso has gone out on a point of order, so there is no use in discussing it. Would it not be better to restrict them by some limitation as to how these products should be sold rather than to increase the overhead cost? Increasing the overhead cost will not necessarily stop these abuses.

Mr. BARBOUR. When you do that, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, you have pretty nearly got to enumerate a list of articles in here. It would be rather difficult to describe them in general language, and at the same time would not that be legislation that should come from the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman from Alabama is a member?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If it is legislation, then I should think it ought to come from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BARBOUR. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. When the gentleman requires overhead to be placed on these articles that they ought not to buy, he also includes overhead on those things that they are in the habit of buying.

Mr. BARBOUR. That has always been done.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. So what you are really doing, in order to rid these local merchants of this competition on things that they ought not to sell through the exchange, is to make them compete in the exchange on everything. Why have an exchange if you are going to put them on a parity with the merchants in the town?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is no intention to put them on a parity with other merchants. As to overhead, they have always charged a certain amount for that in order to cover certain of the expenses of the exchanges that are not covered by this fund.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Your $72,000 is overhead?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is for part of the overhead; yes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KETCHAM). The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Alabama, there were—ayes 25, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing and equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale; for payment of commutation of clothing due to warrant officers of the Mine Planter Service and to enlisted men; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for operation of laundries, including purchase and repair of laundry machinery; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; for equipment and repair of equipment of dry-cleaning plants, salvage and sorting storehouses, hat repairing shops, shoe repair shops, clothing repair shops, and garbage reduction works; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing and when necessary an overcoat, the cost of all not to exceed $30, to be issued to each soldier discharged otherwise than honorably, to each enlisted man convicted by civil court for an offense resulting in confinement in a penitentiary or other civil prison, and to each enlisted man ordered interned by reason of the fact that he is an alien enemy, or, for the same reason, discharged without internment; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $5,832,067, of which amount not exceeding $36,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman if the amount appropriated contemplates the purchase, this year or the next year, of blue uniforms for the soldiers?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from New York that nothing is included in this bill for that purpose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The committee, of course, went into that matter?

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee went into it quite fully.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I notice the War Department has issued an order reinstating the old blue uniform.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Secretary of War, I believe.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Just why that was done it is very difficult to understand. The trim looking khaki uniform is, of course, very military and very serviceable. They are going back to the antiquated blue, opera bouffe uniform, which, with colored epaulettes and gold lace, I suppose, may be conducive to vanity, but not to the morale of an army. Now, in keeping with this dress parade, if next year they come along and say, "Now, we want the soldiers to have blue uniforms so that the ensemble or the color scheme will fit in," I want to point out that that is going to be a pretty big item.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; that would be a rather big item, and that is one reason why there is nothing in this bill for it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not the present intention of the committee to change the uniforms of the enlisted men to conform with the officers' uniforms?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. I understand, though, that the order issued by the Secretary of War goes so far that if an enlisted man sees fit to buy for himself out of his own funds a blue uniform there will be no objection to it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is going to cause a funny combination if some of the boys are going to have blue uniforms and others khaki or the O. D.

Mr. BARBOUR. Of course, they would buy them by units. There would not be one man in khaki and another in blue in the same organization.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If that is so we can reasonably expect in the next fiscal year a pretty big item for blue uniforms for the whole Army.

Mr. BARBOUR. Of course it is hard to tell what will come in the next year's bill, but let me say to the gentleman there has been for some time considerable talk about another uniform, a so-called dress uniform, for the enlisted men of the Regular Army. A lot of them would like to have a blue uniform. It is different and it is a change from the khaki. It is intended not as a service uniform at all, but to wear when they are about town or on parade or something of that kind. The idea is to have a uniform that will perhaps look a little better, as some of them think, than the khaki uniform. The khaki will remain as the service uniform. They will have khaki uniforms and then they will have what may be called a dress uniform or a better uniform than the uniforms they have when they are at drill or at work. It will be a dress uniform of a different color. This is what is being considered. It has not been decided definitely, although they are considering a blue uniform for the enlisted men.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what I thought was coming.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses of the Army: Postage; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster Corps, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government; compensation of clerks and other employees of the Quartermaster Corps, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States disciplinary barracks, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the operation of coffee-roasting plants; for payment of entrance fees for Army rifle and pistol teams participating in competitions; for tests and experimental and development work and scientific research to be performed by the Bureau of Standards for the Quartermaster Corps; for lecture fees at the Army Music School and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operation of the Army and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $3,898,496: Provided, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense incident to the employment of a greater number of officers, enlisted men, or civilian employees in connection with work incident to the assurance of adequate provision for the mobilization of matériel and industrial organizations essential to war-time needs than were so employed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso appearing on page 21, between lines 9 and 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WAINWRIGHT: Page 21, line 9, beginning with the word "provided," strike out all down to and including line 16, on page 21.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this is the first indication of any inclination on the part of the committee to in any way hamper, restrict, or curtail the very necessary work in connection with the industrial war plan and the plans for adequate supply of munitions and other matériel in time of war, which the law directs that the Assistant Secretary of War shall prepare. One lesson that came out of the war more than any other was the necessity of some plan or method of providing for the supply of the Army in the event of war. You will all recall the tremendous dislocation of industry and the great delay there was in supplying our expanded Army. When an army is expanded from 100,000 men to 3,000,000 men, the supplies will be expanded to a very much greater degree, and we all know that it was not until after the armistice that supplies for the Army really came through. Had it not been that we had allies who were supplying our combat armies in the field, we might have had a very different record from that which the American Army had in the war. Realizing the tremendous importance of that consideration, Congress, in the national defense act, reposed the duty of providing an adequate industrial war plan upon the Assistant Secretary of War. Paragraph 5-a of the national defense act made him responsible for the procurement of supplies in time of war and for the assurance of adequate materials, supplies, and industrial organization for war-time needs. That is a tremendous task. During the last eight years that work has been going on through organizations perfected by the Assistant Secretary of War. The Assistant Secretary of War under the law is intended to be what they call abroad the minister of munitions. His is a tremendously important office in view of the importance of the function cast upon him by the law. When we consider that the entire cost of this important work is less than $250,000—$214,130, to be exact—and, in addition, the amount required for training of reserve officers assigned for training in connection with procurement and the pay of the regular officers assigned to this duty, and that the Assistant Secretary of War has only 117 regular officers assigned to him, with a certain proportion of reserve officers who are called in for instruction as to what their duties will be in time of war, it seems almost unreasonable that the committee should undertake in the way they do by this proviso to curtail the activities of the Assistant Secretary of War. What is this proviso?

It is that there shall be no more officers or civilians or employees assigned to this work than were assigned in July, 1928. There is no necessity for any such limitation as that. I am sure the chairman of the subcommittee will agree with me that there has been no extravagance, that there has been no disposition on the part of the office of the Assistant Secretary of War to unduly expand this work. If the number of officers is curtailed, as proposed, it would seriously hamper the work of the Assistant Secretary of War. The number of officers he has for this purpose must in the nature of things be flexible. The appropriation itself, the allocation of funds for this activity, limits the amount that can be devoted to the purpose, and within the limitation of funds it seems to me it is unreasonable to put a limitation on him in respect to the number of people that he can use for the work.

For instance, at some part of the year he might wish to put on more men than at another part of the year, subsequently curtailing the number so as to keep within his limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this proviso should go out and that the Assistant Secretary of War should not be hampered in the way that he will be by this amendment. When you think of the fact that you are appropriating here $435,000,000 for the expenses of the War Department, and that there is less than a quarter of a million dollars devoted to this service, it seems to me that to attempt to cut that down by the very few thousand dollars that might be involved is, to say the least, unreasonable and unwise, and I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, procurement planning is the old munitions battalion under a new name. It permits the Army to go into the fields and factories and railroads of the country, and in the event of war for the Army to take charge of them and run them. This language which the gentleman objects to prevents an expansion of this practice.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. What do they do when they go into the factories?

Mr. COLLINS. They go around and get an office in a city and a corps of stenographers and clerical help, and then appoint some aides, and mess around a factory, go in and look it over occasionally, and as far as real information is concerned, they get none. They do nothing that is worth a row of pins.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do the factories have any objection to that? The people down in my country do not like to have folks snooping around their business.

Mr. COLLINS. It is all done in the name of national defense.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The gentleman does not contradict the fact that what the Assistant Secretary of War is doing is by virtue of the positive direction in the national defense act, and as long as the law is as it is the gentleman will not contend that he should not fulfill the duty that is cast upon him?

Mr. COLLINS. There are lots of things in the national defense act that this Congress does not approve. We do not want our factories and fields and our transportation companies managed by first and second lieutenants even in war times.

These jobs are sops for Army officers and without good to the Government. What good could come to this country if I were a second lieutenant to place me with the Pennsylvania Railroad for a year, and 20 years from now a war was declared to put me in charge of the operation and management of that railroad? I would know nothing, or scarcely nothing, about its affairs. It would be just the rankest sort of injustice to the road to expect me to correctly manage its affairs.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think that this Congress wants to let that activity expand, and that is the purpose of this proviso. It is intended to keep it from expanding, and I think it is wise legislation. We do not want the farmers of this country and the factories of this country and the railroads of this country to be put in charge of and be operated by Army officers. It would seem that the rest of us have no patriotism. That the Army has a corner on it, and that we can not be trusted in war times or even in peace times. The carrying out of the Army program is a reflection on the civilian population of this country. If you strike out this amendment, then the Army can act without limit in expanding the activity. They will find a hole here and put 15 or 20 Army officers in it, and one over there and put some officers there, and scatter them all over the United States without limit. That is what was proposed last year, only on a more extensive scale. There was an item in the bill as it came to us then, and the item was to grow until there was approximately 35,000 such officers, and this committee killed it then, and General Summerall, in his testimony before the committee this year, evidently thought it dead. Procurement is the same work under a different name. There is not any other nation that has undertaken this sort of activity with its army. And aside from this, what is the use in the Government engaging in the foolish practice of permitting Army officers to take charge of the management of the factories, the mines, the fields, and the transportation companies of the country, the meddling with them under the pretext of national defense?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, of course I approach this whole question of national defense from a different angle from that of the gentleman from Mississippi. I realize the gentleman from Mississippi prefers we do nothing to conserve our national defense——

Mr. COLLINS. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I realize the gentleman from Mississippi, if he had his way, would do nothing to conserve our national defense by preparing——

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman is very unkind. That is the way I am going to characterize it at the present time.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Of course, we can not approach the subject from the same angle. If it is necessary and advisable that we should have in time of war such a plan and planning agency and if the law so provides, manifestly the Assistant Secretary of War must proceed along these lines. What I am attempting to impress upon the committee is the view that the magnitude and importance of his task require him to do what he has done and that what he is doing is entirely reasonable, proper, and in no way out of proportion.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman think there is any strong sentiment in this or the other body looking to a strong policy of national defense at the present time?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Unfortunately I am afraid that is the fact. I am afraid we are beginning to slump back as we do after every war, and as in this case it seems to me we are not willing to adequately support absolutely necessary measures of national defense.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not because this House does not want to support a policy of strong national defense, but it is because the very people who are charged with the national defense have so loaded this bill that we are up now to $385,000,000, and you can not possibly think of anything more to put into this bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I say to the gentleman that, be that as it may, what we are discussing is a great proposition involving a very important activity of the War Department which ought not to be hampered in the way proposed?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman believe that one of these first or second lieutenants, in case a war should come upon us to-morrow or next month, could run these factories or operate these railroads better than the present owners are doing?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. All the industries of the country during the war were left in the hands of their civilian owners. It would be the same also in the event of another war. The suggestions of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] were far from the details of the plan referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, this proviso is intended to place a limit upon the procurement activities of the War Department. No limit has been placed upon those activities heretofore. At the present time or by 1930 they will have 145 civilians engaged in this activity and 117 officers of the Army. They have offices, I believe, in 19 different cities in the United States. It is already a big activity in the War Department, and this committee thought it would be wise to put this limitation in the bill and provide that after June 30, 1929, no money should be expended to increase those activities. In other words, we will hold it down for a while until we can get some idea of what it will ultimately involve.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. How much is expended now?

Mr. BARBOUR. Two hundred and fourteen thousand dollars in addition to the pay of the Army officers.

Mr. TABER. There is a very considerable number of reserve officers working on this matter.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Most of them serve without pay.

Mr. TABER. They are on active duty part of the time.

Mr. BARBOUR. A lot of attention is being given to this procurement matter. It is not being neglected.

Mr. TABER. Is it not true, as the gentleman from Mississippi said, that it was proposed that these officers detached last year were to go into the factories and learn how to run the factories in case of war?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I hope before the Chairman takes his seat he will tell us a little more about the importance of this work.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think the gentleman from New York has gone into that quite fully.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I would like to have the concurrence of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. As I understand the situation, the Navy might step in, in case of an emergency, and take all of these activities away from the Army.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, yesterday a gentleman on the Republican side remarked that the hour was approaching 5, and he did not think it in order to make a twilight speech. I am going to observe the suggestion which he made and not extend my remarks beyond 15 or 20 minutes.

I hope that when the House adjourns, if it be in accordance with the precedents and the history of this body, that the Republican floor leader will move to adjourn out of honor to and in memory of the great battle known as the Battle of New Orleans, fought on January 8, 1815, in what is known as the War of 1812. I hope some Members will expatiate, in the extension of their remarks, on the value of that event in our history. I recall what a former Assistant Secretary of War and presently an honored Member of this House said with regard to the lack of enthusiasm in this House and in another body over the national defense which is absolutely necessary in order to safeguard the interests of this country and to make for the fulfillment of its great destiny.

I am obliged to the chairman of this committee for the suggestion that I should say a few words in connection with this great day in the history of our country. Those who were born by the sea will die by the sea, and the gentleman who has the honor of occupying the chair to-day [Mr. TILSON] is responding to the splendid memories of the long ago which originated in his own great State of Tennessee when her sons followed the fortunes of Andrew Jackson, who won imperishable glory for American arms—a glory which offset the disasters, vicissitudes, and sorry performances of many American soldiers who did no credit to the American uniform in other fights in that war.

I am glad he made the suggestion that I should speak, because otherwise I would have let the occasion pass. I have spoken so often on recurring anniversaries of the Battle of New Orleans that I would abuse the patience of the House if I should voluntarily thrust myself upon it, and I respond only because the chairman has requested me to do so, and I desire to acknowledge the honor he has done me in his own inimitable and characteristically gracious manner.

I was under the impression that a Kentuckian, whose ancestor may have fought in that battle, would speak on this day. I thought that some Tennesseean would rise and say something. It was suggested to me that some Mississippian might want to speak, and I was glad to get out of the way; but I found at the last moment that they were affectionately relying upon me to say something in connection with the 8th of January which would express their thoughts. It is a very generous and flattering attitude, particularly as I know that all of them could treat the inspiring subject with far greater elegance and eloquence than I can command.

Now, in all sincerity, gentlemen, I believe in commemorating the great days in the history of this country. I know that after a great war like the World War, and in accordance with the law of compensation that operates incessantly in our thoughts and actions and is present in all of our movements, there was a let-down from that tremendous emotionalism that carried us to the heights, to the very top of the wave, during that holocaust and that there was almost a spirit of cynicism that set in. No one believes there will be war again! The war to end wars is fought and won and that ends it! So why prepare? Ignore the great days of the past; pursue a policy of laissez faire; let things go along as they would go along anyhow. I know I am not adding to your stock of information when I say with all the force at my command that is not the correct policy:

Kingdoms by blood gained must by blood be maintained.

[Applause.]

This country grew by the strong arm and by force. It would be folly to ignore the history of the past. We acquired lands from the Indians and the Mexicans; we worked the negroes, and we did everything that was inevitably and inexorably necessary in order to broaden and expand and become the tremendous factor we are in the civilization of the world. We obeyed the law of our existence and environment and "the lesser breeds without the law," as Kipling calls them, will some day necessarily come up and contest for the splendid position we have to-day, and if we are not prepared we will go down in the black smoke of defeat. That is the law of life, and it would be folly, in my judgment, to neglect the Army and the Navy, as they are the symbols of our power in peace, and in war times expanded to meet exigencies of the hour, a terror to our enemy on land or sea.

Why, gentlemen, the history of all the world furnishes examples. Kingdom after kingdom, dynasty after dynasty, and empire after empire have disappeared and almost been forgotten by historians as a result of having grown effeminate through luxury and ease and the neglect of the power that had brought them to the splendid position they occupied.

Listen to these oracular words from the Temple of Time:

So runs the scroll of human destiny,
Written in fire and blood and scalding tears,
Scrawled with wrecked hopes and blasted visioning,
The weary record of ten thousand years;
The weary record of peoples and of kings,
Of empire and of race,
That to the law that ruleth earthly things,
In ruin yielded place.

* * * * *

You can not make a diamond from the mud,
Or pearl from salty tear.
In other worlds other laws may prevail,
You can not change them here.

Do not neglect force in the way of a proper Army and a proper Navy, for if you do you will pay the price and go the way of all the splendid and gorgeous nations that were once in the vanguard of civilization and then went down into nothingness. [Applause.]

It would be as unwise for this Nation to be without an adequate Army and Navy, both of which we should be able to expand at a moment's notice, as it would be for the city of New York to be without a police department or a fire brigade. Folly, stupidity, and ignorance of history and the gloomy truths her pages teach are no less folly, stupidity, and ignorance because they emanate from good and sincere men and women. It little matters to the expiring nation that the blow was struck by a misguided but honest, good, and sincere friend. Mere goodness and sincerity never yet saved a nation tottering to its destruction and fall. Like honesty, goodness and sincerity are rather common virtues and nothing to blow about. Unless used, exercised to support the Nation intelligently and prepare it for fire and flood, they are negative qualities. In times of peace prepare for war. Beware of the seeming friend of to-day, for he may be the enemy of to-morrow. When observed sanely and reasonably, they are the slogans, too, that make for long life and prosperity for a nation.

Who can tell when and where the next war will start? Who could tell a week before that on August 1, 1914, the world would go afire?

Mr. Chairman, let us observe our great days that record the victories we have won and which have made for our glory and grandeur. Let us keep sacred our battle fields—they are holy ground; they teach us to be prepared, for no man knows what a day may bring forth. First, it was cave man against cave man, then family against family, then tribe against tribe, clan against clan, city against city, state against state, country against country, then combinations of countries against combinations of countries. What next? Will it be combinations of races against combinations of races? Who can tell? The sources, the wellsprings from which arise the war spirit and the lust for strife, are so deep-seated that apparently no divining rod will ever fathom their depths. Men have been fighting from the dawn of time—for love or hatred, for possessions, but always the lust for the fight was there—and until it was aroused there was no fight. Commerce, the emblem, the symbol of peace, is in a measure a species of warfare. Let us not wait until a fire breaks out to organize a fire department. Prepare now. It would not be even a gloomy satisfaction to a dying country to feel that its death throes were caused by its own sons and daughters whose pacifism overthrew their reason and their motherland. Idle tears that would not wash away their folly would be of no value to their expiring country—

So felt the struck eagle stretched upon the plain,
No more through the rolling clouds to soar again,
Viewed in his own breast the fatal dart,
And wing'd the shaft that quivered in his heart
Keen was his agony, but keener far to feel
That he nursed the pinion which impelled the steel,
And the same plumage that had warmed his nest
Drank the last life-drop of his bleeding breast.

Remember, keep alive Jackson and his brave Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana soldiers who put down the flower of the British Army on January 8, 1815. It means keeping alive the spirit by which this great land of the free lives; and when your memory flags and lags turn to this narrative of my own, given on a former occasion, and refreshen yourself by living over again the stirring event which, in a feeble way, I have recorded.

Of course, it is not flattering to ourselves nor agreeable at times to recall the vicissitudes, calamities, and catastrophes of the War of 1812, but I think we should do so, lest we forget the terrible lessons they convey. We should recount that which is ancient in our history for the purpose of gathering a light by which to guide our footsteps in the future, even at the risk of irritating those sensitive souls that recoil at the thought of looking backward to our nights of despair.

Of course, you know that the War of 1812 was disastrous to American arms, and the treaty consummated at Ghent was consummated by England only on the theory that disintegration had already set in and that the States calling themselves the United States would soon be seeking the protection of the mother country and would be Colonies once more, not later than five years after the signing of the treaty, which would carry it to about 1820.

Canadian, English, and continental newspapers were convinced that the collapse of the young Republic of the West was impending; that it was staggering to its destruction; that its fall was at hand. Monarchists the world over were confident that the United States had run its brief course and that its hour was about to strike.

If England had thought otherwise, she would have insisted upon the harsh terms which she had laid down at the beginning of the discussion of the treaty we sought, so desperate was our situation. She thought we were incapable or did not care to fight. Had not her soldiers burned our Capitol; had they not been almost uniformly successful on land and sea in their encounters with our soldiers and sailors? Did not the apathy of a large section of the country show it was an extremely unpopular war? That is one great reason why our victory on the plains of Chalmette was transcendent in its importance, because it obliterated the catastrophes of that war, which had made school children cry out in the streets of their villages and hamlets and towns at the degradation into which their country had fallen. That condition was deplorable, so deplorable that Lord Castlereagh and others who were in power and in the control of the British Government at the time said that "every port and city in America is in our hands, and the Americans are little better than prisoners in their own land," and gloatingly and boastfully declared that they were in a position to dictate any terms that they might feel inclined to dictate.

But, gentlemen of the House, in order to thoroughly understand the gravity of the situation, not only as our national honor was concerned but the menacing attitude of England and Spain with respect to the vast empire of territory known as the Louisiana Purchase, let us swing backwards; let us turn back the hand of time; let us roll up the curtain on the mighty drama played out on a solemn, brooding, but at times terrible sea stage, the Gulf of Mexico and her titanic daughter, the Mississippi River; let us peer into the days of romance and adventure, the days of the conquistadores, the buccaneers, the pirates, the days that ran through a century and gave to Spain, France, and England their greatest discoverers and sea captains. The history and tradition of that time are so interwoven and blended that it is utterly impossible to separate them if we would—and would we, if we could? For is not history what the great Napoleon said it is—"a fable agreed upon"? And were there not nobler souls than those whose exploits are recorded, if a sacred bard had but sung them into immortality? Some one has written: God conceived the earth—that was poetry; He formed it—that was sculpture; He colored it—that was painting; He peopled it—that was the divine drama.

One thing is certain, every generation has had an opportunity to play out on a grand stage the part allotted to it in the drama of the world and mankind, but in no generation or generations has tradition given to the field of adventure so much poetry, sculpture, painting, song, and romance as to the age of Columbus, Cabot, Hudson, Pineda, Cortez, Pizarro, De Soto, La Salle, without reference to their chronological order, and a score of others such as Drake, Magellan, Morgan, who were not only possessed of the passion of the sea wild life but for booty and spoils also.

But let it not be supposed that these sea marauders were not the heroes of their native lands. They gave a glory to their countries which the regular armies and navies could never win.

But back to our story.

Guided by history's pages, we see Narvaez going from Mexico to Florida and touching at the mouth of the Mississippi River. He was a Spanish conquistador, a nobleman and explorer. That was in 1528. Fourteen years later we see Hernando de Soto viewing the Mississippi River at some place near where the Arkansas joins her. He was a splendid Spanish conquistador, a striking figure in that romantic period, and was buried darkly at night, as was said of Sir John Moore, and left alone with his glory. But he had a magnificent tomb, and the tide of the Father of Waters, rolling all the way to the Gulf of Mexico and on to the Atlantic Ocean, probably furnished to him a funeral train such as was never the lot of any other man in history or romance. Out in the Rotunda of the Capitol, under the Dome, you will see eight great pictures portraying the life of America from the romantic and historical standpoint; one picture by William H. Powell portrays the wonder and amazement of De Soto and his followers when they beheld the Father of Waters gliding southward in its solemn, majestic sweep to the Mexican sea. Years and years elapsed, and in 1673 we find Joliet and Marquette descending the Mississippi River, under the direction of the French governor of Canada, in search of the mighty river that was supposed to run from east to west and connect the two great oceans. Then they returned, having gone as far south as the Arkansas River.

Strange as it may appear, my fellow Members, the idea that a great river ran from east to west and connected the eastern and western oceans remained even among educated people for over a century after these great explorers had gone to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler has ever returned, and I understand that in South America there is still a disposition to believe that there is such a waterway.

Only lately down in Panama it was thought that the Chagres River at one time did make a connection between the two great bodies of water. It is said that Balboa, when he viewed from the hill that bears his name the mighty Pacific, looked for the river that he thought joined it to the Atlantic.

In 1682 La Salle completed the discovery of the Mississippi River and claimed the whole country for France, naming it Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV.

It is clear to you gentlemen of the Committee of the Whole House from this recital that there must have been an issue between France and Spain in regard to the immense territory involved and flowing from the right of discovery. This is made clear by the fact that in 1762 France, by treaty of Fontainebleau, ceded to Spain all that part of the Louisiana territory lying west of the Mississippi River and the island of Orleans, which is to-day New Orleans, and in the following year, 1763, by the treaty of Paris, surrendered all of that part of the territory lying on the right bank, and Florida, to England. The desire of Napoleon to create a colonial empire in America led to the secret treaty of St. Ildefonse, in 1800, by which France acquired that part of Louisiana formerly ceded to Spain. This acquisition by the great Corsican and the treaty by which France secured it was denounced as fraudulent by Spain and England, and Napoleon transferred it to the United States for $15,000,000, as he feared an invasion of the Louisiana territory by England and wished to make us its defenders. Matters drifted, as Napoleon was then at the zenith of his power and the terror of Europe. Then came that terrible day for him and joy for Europe when he had to abdicate and take up his residence in Elba in the early summer of 1814.

England was now in control of the world. Up to this time she was successful in the War of 1812, her chief triumph being the capture and burning of our Capitol. London newspapers teemed with accounts of her easy victory and triumphs and ridiculed a people that could not offer a soldier's resistance to the invaders of their country. Our President and Army—in fact, the population—were mercilessly lampooned upon the stage and derided and sneered and scoffed at in the English journals of the time. Flushed with success on the Continent, England now determined to settle with the infant Republic and give her a military lesson that would break her spirit completely. Therefore one of the conditions to be imposed upon France was the return of Louisiana to Spain and which England would take from us if her ally should not be strong enough to do so for herself.

It was indeed a day of appalling danger for our country. The entire valley was to be trampled under military heel. An immensely large force for that time was to embark from Plymouth for the conquest of the Gulf States, the control of the Mississippi Valley, and the occupancy of the Louisiana Purchase. This army was composed of men who had been under Wellington in the Peninsular wars. General Ross was to have commanded this invading army after Wellington declined its command; but Ross was killed on the banks of the Patapsco and Sir Edward Pakenham was placed in charge, the Duke of Wellington having again declined the command.

It was a dark period for our country. The old martial spirit of the Revolution seemed to be dead. The war was far from arousing any patriotic enthusiasm. Even the school children of America were depressed, downhearted, and saddened at the overwhelming calamities that had befallen their country.

It is clear that if another disaster had befallen our arms instead of the triumph that we won, if another defeat had been our fate, we would have been crushed and overwhelmed by such a catastrophe, England would have occupied New Orleans and taken possession of the Louisiana Territory without another blow, as we would have been at her mercy.

We had sent James Bayard, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Jonathan Russell, and Albert Gallatin to secure a treaty of peace.

But even while the treaty was being discussed the London Sun, as well as the Canadian newspapers, looked forward to and predicted the annihilation of what they scornfully refused to recognize as a military force.

Our peace commissioners were subject to mortification. Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Indiana were demanded as an evidence of our defeat. This was on September 8, 1814. It is needless to say that these demands were promptly refused by our commissioners.

Keep this fact in mind, my countrymen, for the seeming friend of to-day may be the enemy of to-morrow, and eternal vigilance and watchfulness are necessary to safeguard the interest and unity of the Nation. For on October 24, six weeks later, Lord Bathurst gave Pakenham his commission and orders to proceed to Plymouth and embark there for Louisiana to assume command of the forces operating for the reduction of that Province. All of these warlike preparations were being made while the peace conference was in session at Ghent.

Yes, my countrymen, eternal vigilance is the price, or a part of the price, we must pay to preserve our liberties, our freedom, our institutions. Self-reliance, preparedness, training, resolution, and fortitude should be the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night to guide us along the road to the goal of our country. Alliances, except for the purpose of trade, do not appeal to a bold and militant people. Courage and that discipline which comes as a result of training from the cradle until the patriot steps on the battle field or the deck of his country's war vessel are what make for a nation's perpetuation and its glory.

It is true a treaty of peace was signed, but let us not forget that it was not a spirit of generosity on the part of England that led to the abandonment of her extraordinary claims and proposed indemnities as an evidence of our humiliation, but because she was assured just at this time and believed that we were so torn and worn by dissension, so near exhaustion, that dissolution was inevitable, and that the dismembered States would seek a new and closer alliance with her as separate and distinct dependencies. In other words, she hoped to secure more by what she considered the inevitable process of dissolution that her informants thought they saw in operation than by force of arms or a too exacting treaty and the harsh terms she had intended to impose. She had not relinquished her rights in the Louisiana Purchase on behalf of Spain, nor had she abandoned her plans to control the Mississippi, for the Pakenham expedition had been hurried across the Atlantic and assembled at Negril, Jamaica, with a full civil government for the Crown Province of Louisiana, as it was referred to by England, and no effort was made to recall it.

As a matter of fact, all plans for the invasion and occupancy of the Louisiana territory were being actively pushed while the peace conference was in session. Do not ever forget this, my countrymen; keep it in mind, lest on some tremendous day we have to pay for our carelessness in blood and tears.

Just at this critical time in the history of our country there loomed on its horizon one who became a great figure in the affairs of this world, one who came out of the woods, like Hosea of old. Tried by obscurity, poverty, pain, danger, and the malevolence that always assails merit, he had overcome disappointment, surmounted every obstacle, subdued and triumphed over every disaster. The perils of the wilderness, the hostility of the savage, the silent antagonism of the trackless swamps and the unbroken forest, melted into thin air before the dauntless courage and martial fire of this hero, warrior, statesman, patriot, and American, Andrew Jackson, whose fiery heart never quailed before any foe, whose crest was never lowered to any enemy.

His fame as an Indian fighter, his wonderful march against Pensacola, his defense of Fort Bower had reached Europe, and Wellington saw flashing across the military skies, not a meteor, dazzling in its brightness for a moment only to plunge into everlasting gloom and darkness, but a rising star of the first magnitude.

I will not dwell upon Pakenham's advance up the Gulf of Mexico and through Lake Borgne, nor upon the skirmish by lake and land, by river and bayou, that preceded the memorable conflict on the 8th of January, 1815. From this Spartan message vision the glory of our victory—the tragedy of their defeat.

American loss: 7 killed and 6 wounded.

English loss: 700 killed, 1,400 wounded, and 500 prisoners.

Among the slain being Pakenham, the gallant leader of the invading force. As are Leonidas and Thermopylæ Pass to Greece are Jackson and New Orleans to Americans.

Pakenham was killed. His army, or what was left of it, was withdrawn and afterwards took part in the battle of Waterloo, earning for themselves the sobriquet of "The Invincibles."

The compensations of life—a Chalmette and a Waterloo—for them a disaster and then a triumph.

On what slight things does destiny hang her judgments. In 1762 England had her choice of American territory from France and she demanded and received the right bank, or the Floridas. Had she requested and received the west bank, or the Louisiana Purchase, as it was later known, how different might have been the results—for she would certainly have held, even as she holds Canada, where she was willing to acquire by invasion and conquest—or had she been successful and destroyed Jackson's army and occupied the city of New Orleans, from which to rule the conquered territory. But as a result of her choice in 1762 and the Battle of New Orleans in 1815 the heart of the continent became American soil for all time.

That is the biggest of the big reasons for celebrating an immortal American victory, for that battle, fought on one side by raw and undisciplined but brave and heroic hearts from the wilds of America and on the other side by tried, disciplined, and courageous troops who had won glory on many a European battle field, determined that this Republic should extend from ocean to ocean, and not have the Mississippi River as its western boundary line, with a western Canada paralleling the frontier, menacing it from the present northern boundary line to the Gulf of Mexico and the Republic of Mexico on the south and rolling over prairie and mountain westward from the Mississippi to the shores of the Pacific, with the flag of Britain floating proudly over that which we are pleased to call the great West and Southwest, a different government, different institutions, and with a stranger's life at our doors. One can see from this account what mighty and momentous changes might have taken place if the fortunes of war had gone against us on that memorable day of January 8, 1815. Nations as well as individuals seem at times to have a curious perspective—the great appears small and the insignificant looms large on the horizon of history. As the years move onward into eternity, however, we know that the Battle of New Orleans will take its place with the decisive battles of the world. There are some men who are unbeatable in the larger sense and significance of that word. There have always been and always will be in this world men and women whose deathless purpose must and shall prevail. When men are willing to endure any disaster, suffer any defeat, undergo privation and starvation, meet gloom and catastrophe dauntlessly, knowing, feeling, that they must and shall win, triumph is inevitable. The sheer force of longing to achieve, of desire to attain the goal, of purpose to toil and strain and fight for the end in view culminates irresistible in reaching the end of the trail gloriously and triumphantly.

Fate determined, apparently, that Pakenham could not win. He was up against the crack shots of the world and men who were as wild and as brave as pioneer life in forest and an unbroken country could make them. Fate apparently ordered it so. Jackson and his army could not be defeated. He may have been driven from Chalmette, but what of that, in view of a determination that could come only to the boldest hearts and to characters selected by fate to carry out inexorably judgments of the highest degree and lead mankind from the lowlands to the peaks of human existence? Had Jackson been forced to retreat from the plains below New Orleans, consequences as spectacular as any in the history of the world would have resulted. For Old Hickory had intended in the event of such a contingency to burn the city, move up the river with all the inhabitants, and as soon as he reached the point where the land begins its incline or upward slope, cut the banks, overflow the city, and annihilate the hopes of the British Army, which could have had one and only one escape, and that would have been by means of rafts with which to make their ships if the swirling tide would permit such an escape. The burning of Moscow, which made its occupancy by Napolean untenable, would have been nothing compared with the epic that might be written of a city that was destroyed by its people, overwhelmed by the Father of Waters before they would let it be the prize of an invading foe.

That blood, that spirit, that heroic unconquerable purpose is still here—no invader could ever remain for any length of time in our country. Other Jacksons would come out of the wilderness to lead their countrymen in death-defying assaults that would, step by step, drive the foe from our native land. What Jackson did and what he would have done will always remain with the American people to inspire them to do noble things, not dream them all the day long, whenever the hour arrives for us to strike for our altars and our fires. That battle was fought 108 years ago; and its memories, though with us, are inscribed without bitterness upon the long and splendid scroll of the United States of America. On January 8, 1915, we celebrated the centennial of that great event—American and English dead are sleeping side by side down there where the bearded oaks rustle their leaves softly as if whispering and murmuring a requiem for the gallant souls that are at rest, and forever. Annually that victory is celebrated by banquets and speech making, where men assemble to recount the heroic exploits of Jackson and his magnificent attitude toward life and the courageous manner in which he approached and solved the problems that sprung into existence in his time and had to be met or block the road over which his country was traveling to attain the splendid destiny that is and will be hers. Year after year the greatness and the glory of his followers have been extolled and sung all over our land by fervent, patriotic Americans who have conveyed to listening multitudes the thrill of a victory that will always stand out among America's greatest achievements on land or sea. History can not forget this magnificent record of a momentous event without lessening its appeal to the imaginations of our people.

To-day we stretch from ocean to ocean, and then some, and our sway there is none to dispute. Out into the Pacific, up into the Arctic, and down in southern seas our flag flies to the breeze—

Sun kissed and wind tossed,
The flag for me and you,
That glorifies all else beside
The red, white, and blue.

Old Glory reflects back the "lights" of northern skies in Alaska and the Southern Cross in the southern ocean, because we maintained the Louisiana Purchase on the field of battle January 8, 1815. Let us hear from the hero of Chalmette. Let him speak to us through one-time Congressman William Allen and in a later time a Governor of Ohio. He, too, has gone to join the patriarchs of the infant world, but he still speaks to us from and through this writing:

General Jackson greeted me on the portico of the White House, just as he would have greeted a welcome guest at his own home in the country. Together we walked to the dining room, where the table was already prepared. Following the universal custom of the world of those days, General Jackson invited me to take a drink, and proposed as a toast: "The new star in our flag—Arkansas."

That ceremony having been observed, General Jackson looked at me very earnestly and said, inquiringly:

"Do you know, Mr. Allen, that this new State which has just become a part of our vast Republic is one of the first substantially large fruits of my victory at New Orleans?"

I was surprised, very much surprised, and I said so. I could see no political nor historical connection between the admission of a new State to the Union and a battle which had been fought about 20 years before that admission. I knew and everybody knew that General Jackson was extravagantly proud of his victory at New Orleans, and I supposed that he was giving me a bit of pardonable braggadocio. I reminded him that the treaty of Ghent had been signed 15 days before the Battle of New Orleans, and I said:

"General, I am familiar with that treaty, and it provided for the restoration of all territory, places, and possessions taken by either nation during the war, with certain unimportant exceptions."

"Technically you are quite correct," replied General Jackson, and his smile was more triumphant and proud than before. "But, my dear Allen," said the old hero, "those very words would have been used to defeat the purpose of the American commissioners at Ghent, because the Battle of New Orleans was fought after the war; 15 days after the war technically ceased by treaty."

Now I began to be more than ever interested. I begged the national military hero to tell me the whole story; and he did. He said:

"If General Pakenham with his 10,000 veterans could have annihilated my little army and captured New Orleans and all of the contiguous territory, technically after the war, Great Britain would have held that territory, abrogated that treaty, and utterly ignored Thomas Jefferson's great deal in real estate with Napoleon. Moreover," he continued, "Great Britain had other cards up her sleeve."

Venerable, but as vigorous and swift of action as ever in his life, General Jackson arose, went to a small desk, opened a drawer, took out a bundle of parchment manuscript, brought it to the luncheon table, spread it out, and said:

"Here are the transcripts from the Department of State concerning the famous treaty of Ghent. Here are the minutes of the conference which were kept by Mr. Gallatin, who records:

"The British commissioners emphatically declared: 'We do not admit Bonaparte's construction of the laws of nations. We can not accept it in relation to any matter before us.'"

Still unenlightened, I asked what that statement could have to do with the international situation, and General Jackson explained:

"At that moment not one of our American commissioners comprehended the awfully deep significance of those few words. But every one of the commissioners of Great Britain knew that General Pakenham was on the way to New Orleans with upward of 10,000 veteran soldiers.

"In their judgment—and it was a wise judgment, too—10,000 British soldiers should, and would, clean up and wipe out any army which America could muster, for the Pakenham invasion was to be a triumphant military coup and surprise.

"Now, I can tell you, Mr. Allen, that I did not know, and my boys behind those bales did not know, what a prize the British were after nor what a service we were rendering our country. We were simply typical American soldiers, fighting for our country as American soldiers always do; ready and willing to dare, do, and die.

"But since I have been President I have ascertained from diplomatic sources of unquestionable authority that the British ministry did not intend to permit the treaty of Ghent to apply to the Louisiana Purchase at all. The whole body, Lord Liverpool, the Dukes of Portland, Greenville, Percival, and Castlereagh, all of them, utterly and emphatically denied the right of Napoleon to sell Louisiana. Therefore, their commissioners declared, 'We can not accept Napoleon's interpretations of international law in relation to any matter before us.'

"Now, you see, Mr. Allen," said the proud old hero, "the British ministry in London held most vehemently that this country had no right to that immense territory—no right at all. They intended to hold that it was entirely extraneous to the terms of the treaty of Ghent. And, if General Pakenham had been successful at New Orleans—as, under all of the ordinary rules of war he ought to have been, with his tremendously overwhelming force of veterans—if he had defeated my little, thin line of riflemen, if he had killed or captured me, if he had won that battle as Great Britain had every reason to expect of him, he would have held his ground. Moreover, he would have fortified his positions, and Great Britain would have sent other veterans enough to forever hold that great prize, the Louisiana Purchase."

Palpably noting the surprise which my features undoubtedly expressed, General Jackson continued:

"Now, you must see, Mr. Allen, that the words which Mr. Goulborn pronounced for the commissioners of Great Britain and which I have quoted from the minutes of Mr. Gallatin, had an immensely deeper significance than the commissioners for the United States could penetrate. Those words were meant to base the British claim for possession of the whole Louisiana Purchase. This was to be entirely external to the provisions of the treaty of Ghent. Moreover, they fully believed that General Pakenham would strengthen their position by capturing all of the salient military parts of the Louisiana Purchase after the war.

"Thus, you see clearly, my friend Allen," continued the proud defender of his country, "that the British Government, always skilled in diplomacy, as well as in war, was signing that treaty with one hand in front; but, with the other behind its back, it was dispatching Pakenham and a magnificent army to seize and hold our greatest and most precious acquired possession, including, of course, Arkansas and an empire beyond.

"Thus you can also see, my dear William"—having several times toasted the new star in our flag—"you can also see what an awful mess such a situation would have caused if the British Government had been able to carry out its military purposes as well and as completely as it did its diplomatic program at Ghent."

After showing me ample proofs of the facts set forth—and you may be sure I was wonderfully interested and patriotically more proud of Andrew Jackson and his boys behind the bales than I had ever been before—the tall, vigorous, gray-haired, proud old hero said:

"But, my dear sir, British diplomacy and British military power combined knew nothing of my Tennessee and Kentucky riflemen. The will of the enemy was strong and intelligent; but the will of God was far above it all. Providence willed that this Nation should live, grow, and be the cradle of the liberty of the world." Then General Jackson quoted a well-known hymn: "God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform."

Reverting to his first statement, General Jackson then said: "Now, you see, my dear Mr. Allen, how Arkansas was saved at New Orleans; and how a thin line of American raw recruits, facing upward of 6,000 brave and fearless veterans, made it possible for us to have the State of Arkansas in our Union to-day."

The luncheon having long been finished, when I arose to leave, my host, whom I then revered as America's grandest living hero, arose, proposed another toast to the new star in our flag—Arkansas—and concluded his narration substantially in these words:

"The astute diplomats, the trained commissioners of Great Britain, cheerfully found it easy to throw sand into the eyes of our honest commissioners at Ghent; but, Allen, they could not ward off the cold lead which my rough and ready riflemen sprinkled into the faces of their red-coated veterans at New Orleans. All of the tangled web that British diplomacy and English cunning could weave about our inexperienced commissioners was torn to pieces and soaked in blood in half an hour by the never-missing rifles of my squirrel-shooting pioneers of the mountains as they carefully took their aim from behind those invulnerable bales of cotton."

Then, hastily flinging from his proudly smiling cheek the trace of a tear, the grand old commander earnestly said: "I wish that those brave boys behind the bales might be here now, Allen, to join us in this final toast of the day to that splendid new star in our flag—the State of Arkansas."

Why should we not celebrate this great day? It was a memorable victory, Mr. Chairman, one that students of American history should never forget, one that our boys and girls should be taught to mention, not only on this day but on all other days.

Mr. Chairman, originally Jackson Day was not treated from a political standpoint. It was nonpartisan, nonpolitical in the method in which it was celebrated—by banquets and ceremonies all over the country. Jackson was a Democrat, and the followers of his party appropriated the day to themselves in a great many cases, and I am not objecting to it, for "I, too, was born in Acadie." I am a Democrat and have no desire to criticize Democrats keeping alive Jackson's political views; but I would always prefer to treat the 8th of January, Jackson Day, as an American day, a day on which all Americans, regardless of party attachments, could gladly assemble and celebrate the great, magnificent, inspiring, and durable victory. Of course, at times it is tedious to talk about Leonidas and Thermopylæ. It does not seem quite right to the practical and modern up-to-date fellow, who is thinking of his country in points of industrialism, to talk about the dim and misty and vague past, but our past is not so far distant that we ought to forget it, and we should always keep in mind that the seeming friend of to-day may be the enemy of to-morrow; and we ought always to cogitate upon that Chalmette victory and remember its importance and the treacheries that surrounded it and "what might have been."

It teaches us that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and we should always be mindful of invasion.

I said once before recently on this floor that I never like to discuss Great Britain's attitude, because even in the minds of the most generous there is in all probability something akin to the thought that there may be acrimony behind my attitude.

Of course, there is nothing of the sort. I am an American first and an English-speaking man in the next place, and I recognize that it is a great common family to-day. English literature is the boast of men who speak that tongue wherever it is spoken, but I can not blind my eyes to the facts of human existence. I know that as a people we fought and tore at each others' throats for four and a half years, and we not only speak the same tongue but we were bound together in fraternal ties. If we fought, why should we gull ourselves, bamboozle ourselves with the idea that we are the same people as our English-speaking cousins across the seas and will never fight with them again? We did fight with them in order to gain our independence. We did fight with them in 1812, and we were ready to fight with them after the Civil War. We were ready to fight with them about the time of the Venezuelan affair, and if her alliances constitute a menace and a danger to us, we will be ready to fight with them again. I repeat, and shall repeat as long as I live, that the lesson of January 8, 1815, should convey to every American mind that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and freedom, and that we should at all times on land and sea, be ready to meet any foe that might question our rights, challenge our privileges and our desires to be in the vanguard of human civilization. It is a great day. I know there are some who laugh and snicker and have an inclination to sneer at such celebrations. I do not know that it adds anything to their stature, neither does it diminish the importance of the day nor lessen the tremendous victory that was secured on the plains of Chalmette. I know that it is not as important to some minds as the discussion of money, but it is important, nevertheless, to a great many people who do not always think in terms of dollars.

It is well, my countrymen, to recall great historical events and outstanding commanding figures in the arena of peace and warfare, because we can not ignore the historical facts that it is by warfare that we have grown great and rich and powerful and opulent and strong. We have not grown to the magnificent proportions so aptly described by the phrase "from ocean to ocean" as a result of pious reflections and beautifully phrased expressions of peace on earth, good will to men, which may come in time, and which I will not obstruct. I will pray with the most religious for the millenium, but frankly confess that I would not rely implicitly on prayer in the midst of a warlike world. We have grown great and powerful and strong as the result of courage and bravery and a determination to do and dare and never give up, because apparently even when we were beaten, phœnixlike we rose from the ashes of defeat and disaster and gave to freedom and liberty over the earth, and particularly to our country, one of the greatest victories ever obtained by a small and militant band of men struggling against overwhelming odds and the greatest soldiers of Europe.

Let us teach our children to know the history of their country—its trials, its defeats, its disasters, its triumphs, its victories—for, knowing why they should love their country, they will love it with heart and soul. They will love it for the dangers through which it has passed if they are taught to study and understand what these dangers were; and then they will be on guard against the dangers of the future. Chalmette, America shall never forget. A prayer and a tear for those who won and lost that day. They are in the bosom of their Father and their God.

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and daring few.
On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead,
Dear as the blood you gave,
No impious footsteps here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
Nor shall your glory be forgot
While Fame her record keeps,
Or Honor points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we have not made as much progress on the War Department bill as we should have liked to make and I should like to go on with it to-morrow. I therefore ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business for to-morrow may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will an extra day be set aside for the committees? I notice that some of the committees will hardly be reached before the end of the session if we take away Calendar Wednesday to-morrow.

Mr. TILSON. Some of the committees will not be reached in any event; but if any of them have bills of very great importance, they may be reached by means of a special rule or otherwise. I understand that the Committee on the Public Lands, which has the call to-morrow, has not yet had full opportunity to act on the bills pending before that committee. If the gentleman will recall, there was a vacancy in the chairmanship of that committee which was not filled until very recently. I think it would be very agreeable to this committee to have the call go over for one week.

Mr. COLTON. That is a correct statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 9, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, January 9, 1929, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(10.30 a. m.)

Navy Department appropriation bill.
Independent offices appropriation bill.
District of Columbia appropriation bill.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

Requesting the President to propose the calling of an international conference for the simplification of the calendar, or to accept on behalf of the United States an invitation to participate in such a conference (H. J. Res. 334).

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

To consider general legislation.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m. and 2 p. m.)

Tariff hearings as follows:

SCHEDULES

Chemicals, oils, and paints, January 9.
Earths, earthenware, and glassware, January 10, 11.
Metals and manufactures of, January 14, 15, 16.
Wood and manufactures of, January 17, 18.
Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of, January 21, 22.
Tobacco and manufactures of, January 23.
Agricultural products and provisions, January 24, 25, 28.
Spirits, wines, and other beverages, January 29.
Cotton manufactures, January 30, 31, February 1.
Flax, hemp, jute, and manufactures of, February 4, 5.
Wool and manufactures of, February 6, 7, 8.
Silk and silk goods, February 11, 12.
Papers and books, February 13, 14.
Sundries, February 15, 18, 19.
Free list, February 20, 21, 22.
Administrative and miscellaneous, February 25.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

(10.30 a. m.)

Continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927 (H. R. 15430).

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMITTEE—SUBCOMMITTEE ON RAILROADS

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend section 15a of the interstate commerce act, as amended (H. R. 8549).

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

(10.30 a. m.)

Authorizing the erection of a Federal reserve bank building in the city of Los Angeles, Calif. (S. J. Res. 142).

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and in industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," approved February 23, 1917, as amended (H. R. 15211).

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended (H. R. 13857).

To repeal certain provisions of law relating to the Federal building at Des Moines, Iowa (H. R. 13957).

To provide for the sale of the old post office and courthouse building and site at Syracuse, N. Y. (H. R. 15854).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

729. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting report from the Chief of Engineers on preliminary examination and survey of Shamokawa (Steamboat) Slough, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 502); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

730. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report from the Chief of Engineers on preliminary examination of channel from Gulf of Mexico, through Passage Key Inlet, to northern end of Anna Maria Key and into Sarasota Bay, Fla.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

731. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting report showing the officers of the Government who were delinquent in rendering or transmitting their accounts to the proper offices in Washington during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

732. A letter from the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co., transmitting annual report of the stock of said company, the earnings, and expenses for the calendar year 1928; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRAHAM: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 13981. A bill to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases; without amendment (Rept. No. 2029). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MICHENER: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 284. A resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 11725, a bill for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress; without amendment (Rept. No. 2036). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LEAVITT: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 14925. A bill to authorize repayment of certain excess amounts paid by purchasers of lots in the town sites of Bowdoin, Mont., and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 2037). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 3569. An act to equalize the pay of certain classes of officers of the Regular Army; with amendment (Rept. No. 2038). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15427. A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lend to the Governor of North Carolina 300 pyramidal tents, complete; 9,000 blankets, olive drab, No. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; and 9,000 bed sheets to be used at the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans to be held at Charlotte, N. C., in June, 1929; without amendment (Rept. No. 2045). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. REECE: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15472. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the eleventh national convention of the American Legion; without amendment (Rept. No. 2046). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15060. A bill to reinstate Charles Robert Conroy in the West Point Military Academy; without amendment (Rept. No. 2030). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5286. A bill for the relief of J. H. Sanborn; with amendment (Rept. No. 2031). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5287. A bill for the relief of Etta C. Sanborn; with amendment (Rept. No. 2032). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5288. A bill for the relief of William F. Kallweit; with amendment (Rept. No. 2033). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5289. A bill for the relief of Loretta Kallweit; with amendment (Rept. No. 2034). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOX: Committee on Claims. H. R. 13992. A bill for the relief of N. P. Nelson & Co.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2039). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1393. A bill to correct the military record of Frank Fowler; with amendment (Rept. No. 2040). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 6204. A bill for the relief of Rebecca J. Rider; with amendment (Rept. No. 2041). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 6892. A bill for the relief of Martha J. Tonguet; without amendment (Rept. No. 2042). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GLYNN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 12424. A bill for the relief of William Fisher; with amendment (Rept. No. 2043). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOYLAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 14972. A bill for the relief of Sylvester S. Thompson; with amendment (Rept. No. 2044). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15963) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Doyle; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11560) for the relief of Bennion Livestock Co.; Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COMBS: A bill (H. R. 16026) to extend the times for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 16027) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and Army nurses, and for other purposes," approved July 3, 1926; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOFFMAN: A bill (H. R. 16028) to regulate computation of percentage of active pay to be paid as retired pay to officers of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 16029) to amend and supplement an act entitled "An act to amend the salary rates contained in the compensation schedules of the act of March 4, 1923, entitled 'An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services,' approved May 28, 1928, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. MERRITT: A bill (H. R. 16030) to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 16031) to amend sections 4, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 25, 26, 29, and 30 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. COHEN: A bill (H. R. 16032) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of certain claims of American nationals against Germany, Austria, and Hungary, and of nationals of Germany, Austria, and Hungary against the United States, and for the ultimate return of all property held by the Alien Property Custodian"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: A bill (H. R. 16033) to provide for the examination and survey of Smiths Island, Somerset County, Md.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 16034) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the middle district of the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 16035) to extend the time for completing the construction of the bridge across Port Washington Narrows, within the city of Bremerton, State of Washington; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PRALL: A bill (H. R. 16036) to authorize the cession to the city of New York of land on the northerly side of New Dorp Lane in exchange for permission to connect Miller Field with the said city's public sewer system; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHMANN: A bill (H. R. 16037) granting an increase of pension to Cyrene Baker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H. R. 16038) for the relief of Girolomo Cimbalo; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRIGHAM: A bill (H. R. 16039) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Gibbs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNS: A bill (H. R. 16040) granting a pension to Mariah H. Bowen; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16041) granting a pension to Fred Allen; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16042) granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. Rogers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COHEN: A bill (H. R. 16043) for the relief of Alice F. Martin and two minor children; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 16044) for the relief of Edwina R. Munchhof; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16045) granting an increase of pension to Nannie H. Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 16046) granting an increase of pension to Herman Bertman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: A bill (H. R. 16047) for the relief of Alice Hipkins; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HICKEY: A bill (H. R. 16048) granting a pension to Elzina Clemans; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOFFMAN: A bill (H. R. 16049) granting an increase of pension to Louise Vansickle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16050) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Ervin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JACOBSTEIN: A bill (H. R. 16051) granting an increase of pension to Josephine Hargreave; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16052) granting an increase of pension to Mary Cunnean; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16053) granting an increase of pension to Cora E. Pointer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 16054) granting an increase of pension to Frank H. Bruce; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16055) to correct the military record of Orville D. Dailey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 16056) granting a pension to Grant Rodgers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mrs. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 16057) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 16058) granting a pension to Lizzie C. Walsh; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 16059) for the relief of Arthur H. Thiel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mrs. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 16060) granting a pension to Pricy Riley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 16061) granting a pension to Emma Nicholson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MANLOVE: A bill (H. R. 16062) granting an increase of pension to Mary Dyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16063) granting a pension to Amanda Bland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16064) granting a pension to Amanda E. Roy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARKS: A bill (H. R. 16065) granting a pension to Mary Howell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PRALL: A bill (H. R. 16066) for the relief of Ex-Ensign Thomas Vincent Corey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 16067) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Childers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SEARS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 16068) for the relief of Elizabeth Cachelin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELVIG: A bill (H. R. 16069) for the relief of G. G. Laugen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 16070) granting a pension to Belle Seward; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16071) for the relief of T. E. Stephenson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STOBBS: A bill (H. R. 16072) granting an increase of pension to Ella R. Preston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16073) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Bancroft; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16074) granting an increase of pension to Maria G. Kelley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 16075) granting a pension to Horeb M. Boone; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16076) granting a pension to John F. Sales; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILSON: A bill (H. R. 16077) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann McManus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8175. By Mr. BACHMANN: Petition of John Szelewa, chairman of the American Citizens of Ukrainian Descent, Wheeling, W. Va., protesting against Polish Government for its barbarous and uncivilized treatment of the Ukrainian people living in eastern Galicia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

8176. By Mr. BOYLAN: Resolution adopted at the regular meeting of the Military Intelligence Reserve Society, held at the Army and Navy Club, New York City, relative to increasing appropriation for reserve officers as provided by national defense act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8177. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Military Intelligence Reserve Society, that funds in an amount greater than heretofore provided are needed for training reserve officers during the ensuing year; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8178. By Mr. CRAIL: Petition of Hollywood Auxiliary, No. 54, United Spanish War Veterans, of Hollywood, Calif., favoring additional hospital facilities at the Soldiers' Home, Pacific Branch, Los Angeles County, Calif.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8179. By Mr. GARBER: Petition of Institute of Margarine Manufacturers, 1049 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C., in support of House bill 10958, introduced by Mr. Haugen; to the Committee on Agriculture.

8180. Also, petition of the Wichita Mill & Elevator Co., Wichita Falls, Tex., indorsing House bill 15267, to amend the tariff act of 1922; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8181. Also, petition of Dixie Post, No. 64, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, National Sanatorium, Tenn., indorsing House bill 9138; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

8182. Also, petition of Ed. S. Vail Butterine Co., 4528–4538 Gross Avenue, Chicago, Ill., in opposition to a special rule enabling the consideration of Haugen bill (H. R. 10958) before the House for passage with limited debate; to the Committee on Agriculture.

8183. By Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma: Petition of Hon. Owsley Lonergan, Pawnee, Okla., on the subject of reciprocal guarantee of credit; to the Committee on Agriculture.

8184. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of Hon. Rufus Hardy, of Corsicana, Tex., indorsing Senate bill 4689; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

8185. By Mr. KVALE: Petition of members of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, urging a per capita payment out of their tribal fund; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

8186. Also, petition of railway postal clerks of the St. Paul & Williston Railway post office, of Minnesota, opposing enactment of Senate bill 860; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

8187. By Mr. McCORMACK: Petition of F. H. Clark, of J. R. Poole Co., 11–12 South Market Street, Boston, Mass., protesting against the proposed increase of the tariff to 8 cents a pound on beef, lamb, and mutton, as against the present duties of 3 cents, 4 cents, and 2½ cents, and in increase in the duty on butter from 12 cents to 20 cents; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8188. By Mr. MOORE of Kentucky: Petition signed by H. B. McCoy and 59 other citizens of Butler County, Ky., requesting Congress to pass appropriate legislation authorizing a preliminary survey of Mud Creek with the view of preventing future floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

8189. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the Military Intelligence Reserve Society of New York, favoring increased appropriations for training reserve officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8190. By Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Declaration adopted by the Military Intelligence Reserve Society, indorsing need of increased appropriations for the training of reserve officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8191. By Mr. PRALL: Declaration adopted by the Military Intelligence Reserve Society at its regular meeting held at the Army and Navy Club, New York City, December 19, 1928, received from Capt. Clarence A. Manning, secretary Military Intelligence Reserve Club; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8192. By Mr. VINCENT of Iowa: Petition of Dixie Post, No. 64, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, National Sanatorium, Tenn., favoring the passage of House bill 9138; to the Committee on Pensions.

8193. By Mr. YATES: Petition of the Illinois National Guard, urging additional appropriations to National Guard items necessary to caretakers and camps of instruction, signed by C. E. Black, adjutant general; S. T. Lawton, colonel; Albert L. Culbertson, colonel, Infantry; Otis Duncan, colonel, Infantry; Fred E. Rand, colonel, Infantry; O. K. Yeager, colonel; Maj. R. C. Rottger; Capts. W. C. Timm, Eval Runsbog, C. M. Cook, R. E. Shouts, B. P. Bruegle, and A. E. Dickerson; Lieuts. E. L. Styles, Charles Bean, W. A. Crookston, Mark Plaisted, Gordon Bellow, M. G. Peter, and W. P. Binney; Col. Charles H. Davis; Capt. George W. McClure; Maj. Dill B. Hordin; and 100 other officers of the Illinois National Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, January 9, 1929

(Legislative day of Monday, January 7, 1929)

The Senate met in open executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate, as in legislative session, will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4616) to legalize the existing railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 53. An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture;

H. R. 3041. An act for the relief of Alfred St. Dennis;

H. R. 4935. An act to authorize the appointment of First Lieut. Clarence E. Burt, retired, to the grade of major, retired, in the United States Army;

H. R. 8798. An act for the relief of William Lentz;

H. R. 8974. An act authorizing the President to order Oren W. Rynearson before a retiring board for a hearing of his case and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation;

H. R. 11071. An act providing for the purchase of 1,124 acres of land, more or less, in the vicinity of Camp Bullis, Tex., and authorizing an appropriation therefor;

H. R. 12897. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon of a fireproof office building or buildings for the House of Representatives;

H. R. 13033. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey certain portions of the military reservation at Monterey, Calif., to the city of Monterey, Calif., for the extension of Alvarado Street;

H. R. 13404. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Louisiana State Museum, of the city of New Orleans, La., the silver service set in use on the battleship Louisiana;

H. R. 13503. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Hastings, Minn.;

H. R. 13540. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ouachita River at a point between the mouth of Saline River and the Louisiana and Arkansas line;

H. R. 13826. An act authorizing the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Union, Nebr.; and

H. R. 13848. An act to legalize a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Paw Paw, W. Va.

FINAL ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, certified copies of the final ascertainments of the electors for President and Vice President from the States of Ohio, Oklahoma, and Tennessee, at the election held November 6, 1928, which were ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS

As in legislative session,

Mr. JONES presented petitions of sundry citizens of Seattle, Spokane, Prescott, Chehalis, and Palouse, all in the State of Washington, praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

As in legislative session,

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 5060) to aid the Grand Army of the Republic in its Memorial Day services, May 30, 1929, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1415) thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

As in legislative session,

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on January 8, 1929, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) for the relief of the Iowa Tribe of Indians.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

As in legislative session,

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 5251) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Inman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETT:

A bill (S. 5252) for the relief of Arthur D. Story, assignee of Jacob Story, and Harris H. Gilman, receiver for the Murray & Thregurtha Plant of the National Motors Corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5253) authorizing admission of Jackson A. Findley to the United States Military Academy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5254) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Port Washington Narrows within the city of Bremerton, Wash.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 5255) for the relief of present and former postmasters and acting postmasters, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 5256) to amend the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the promotion of officers in the Navy to provide for the promotion of officers who have been wounded in line of duty; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 5257) granting a pension to George Myers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 5258) granting a pension to Lawrence Perry (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 5259) granting a pension to Old Coyote; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Helen A. O'Haver; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 5261) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Flynn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 5262) to establish a term of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit at Jacksonville, Fla.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 5263) for the relief of J. D. Baldwin, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5264) authorizing the Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Los Indios, Tex.;

A bill (S. 5265) authorizing the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.;

A bill (S. 5266) authorizing the Rio Grande del Norte Investment Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near San Benito, Tex.; and

A bill (S. 5267) authorizing the Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Donna, Tex.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 5268) granting a pension to Hugh M. Jones (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5269) to amend the United States mining laws applicable to the Black Hills and Harney National Forests; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 5270) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate a bronze cannon to the city of Phoenix, Ariz.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 5271) granting an increase of pension to Mary B. Williamson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5272) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. KING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) creating a commission on additional interoceanic canal facilities; to the table.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Bey Mario Arosemena, a citizen of Panama; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EDGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) to create a commission on a memorial to the signers of the Declaration of Independence; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 189) interpreting sections 3 and 4 of the Mississippi River flood control act of 1928; to the Committee on Commerce.

ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill passed by the House and now before the Senate, which I send to the desk and ask to have printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment provides for an appropriation of $50,000,000 additional for prohibition enforcement, to be made available immediately and to be used in 1929 and until June 30, 1930. The other day by a majority of two the Senate voted in favor of a conference report striking out an appropriation of $370,000,000 to enforce the prohibition law, which was provided in an amendment introduced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], which had passed the Senate, but the House refused to concur in this amendment. Everyone knows that prohibition enforcement at present is a mere farce. I am not criticizing the men who are attempting to enforce prohibition, because their difficulty lies in the fact that they have not sufficient funds to employ the necessary number of men to do this work. Every Senator knows the present amount appropriated is entirely inadequate. It is my purpose to offer such an amendment to every appropriation bill that comes before the Senate relating to this work and will continue doing so until we get a sufficient appropriation for this purpose. I shall try to get at least the amount I have named appropriated in addition, and I hope that the Senate, when the matter comes before it, will approve the increase proposed.

Mr. President, the people of the United States favor the enforcement of the prohibition law and it is our duty to carry out their wishes. Outside of a very few States in the East, the people of every State in the United States strongly favor the enforcement of this law. One of the reasons I voted in favor of woman's suffrage was because I believed a large majority of the women would favor prohibition and with their vote would help elect officials who would honestly support prohibition measures. In my judgment Congress is not doing its duty when it fails to appropriate a sufficient amount to enforce this law. The enemies of prohibition claim that the law has been a failure, and it is our duty to appropriate the amount necessary to make it a success. It is a shame the way it is now enforced—everyone knows this—and the only way it can be made a success is to appropriate more money for its enforcement. I sincerely hope Senators will vote for my amendment for $50,000,000 additional appropriation for this work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

"THE LOST CAUSE"

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD an editorial written by James M. Cox, who has been honored by his party and by the people of Ohio many times. The editorial is entitled "The Lost Cause," and appeared in the Dayton (Ohio) Daily News of Saturday, December 8, 1928.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LOST CAUSE

Ten years ago last Tuesday Woodrow Wilson set sail upon the greatest adventure in modern history. There will still be some to quarrel with that estimate. They may prove to be right. We merely cast in our guess that when the books of our times are balanced on the pages of history, a century or so hence, this will be the verdict. The picture of that lone man setting out from America to impose a modern peace upon a medieval world needs only a Tolstoy to draw, and we shall have the greatest adventure in the most dramatic setting and with the most tragical ending in the world's last 2,000 years.

Woodrow Wilson had been elected in 1916 by a people passionate for peace. He was the President of a country moved by diverse, deep-lying motives. Our mixture of immigrant strains gave us violent sympathizers with both combinations of nations at war in Europe. Wilson had tried to keep America simply American. When he saw the pressure of circumstances and events driving us inexorably into the war, he turned his attention to the effort to salvage out of the war which he foresaw the gain of a lasting peace. He tried by his speeches and messages to lay the ground for such a settlement after the war as would remove occasion for international rivalries and hates. By his 14 points he sought to assert the principles of justice which, once followed, would end the war system. He planned a cooperation of the nations which should penalize war and war makers. In this, all America was with him.

The war came to its sudden end and the making of this peace became a practical matter. But obstacles had developed at home. Woodrow Wilson was President by grace of a temporary break in a party which had ruled the country for 50 years and into which had collected the dominant industrial, financial, and social interests of the country. Wilson was the great liberal. His hope for America lay in its rule by a broader aggregation of elements than had been dominant in the Republican Party.

It was of the utmost importance to these that Woodrow Wilson should not be the shining figure of a glorious peace. "Anything to beat Wilson" was the cry. Even before the armistice was signed his enemies had managed to elect a hostile Congress. Republicans like Lodge, who had originated the idea of a league of nations, which Wilson was now to press upon Europe, began to plan the destruction, if it came with Wilson's name on it, of their own child.

Under these circumstances Wilson set sail, this 10 years ago, for Europe. There he found a people wild with hope for the new world which he was trying to usher in—and a diplomacy all set to defeat his efforts to lay the foundation for any such new world. A stone wall of medieval diplomats against him in Europe, a flying squadron of desperate politicians plotting at his back in Washington—such was the world which surrounded Wilson as he embarked on the 4th of December, 1918.

The rest of the story is universal knowledge. He fought his way in Paris to a half loaf. He got his League of Nations, but at the cost of many a hard sacrifice. Then he returned to America to face the force which had been ravening at his back. In the battle which followed he fell. The League of Nations was rejected. His very body was broken. The election of Harding and the return to power of what Harding reflected completed his defeat—at what an awful price there is no need now to discuss.

So the lone crusader who set his face to Europe on that December day 10 years ago was beaten, crushed. Woodrow Wilson was discredited and soon dead. So had died many a prophet before him. One of the outstanding tragedies of the age had been written. All we are saying is that it was a great adventure, the most magnificent of our time, for only out of great adventure can great tragedy such as this proceed.

MATTIE B. WILLIAMS

Mr. BRUCE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 293), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Mattie B. Williams, widow of John R. Williams, late a messenger of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations December 19, 1928.

Mr. BLAINE rose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McKellar	Sackett
Barkley	Fletcher	McLean	Schall
Bayard	Frazier	McMaster	Sheppard
Bingham	George	McNary	Shipstead
Blaine	Gerry	Mayfield	Shortridge
Blease	Gillett	Metcalf	Simmons
Borah	Glenn	Moses	Smoot
Brookhart	Goff	Neely	Steiwer
Broussard	Greene	Norbeck	Stephens
Bruce	Harris	Norris	Swanson
Burton	Harrison	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Capper	Hastings	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Caraway	Hawes	Overman	Trammell
Copeland	Hayden	Phipps	Tydings
Couzens	Heflin	Pine	Vandenberg
Curtis	Johnson	Pittman	Wagner
Dale	Jones	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Deneen	Kendrick	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Dill	Keyes	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Edge	King	Robinson, Ark.	Watson
Edwards	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is unavoidably absent because of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is still detained from the Senate Chamber on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. My colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TYSON] is absent owing to the death of his mother.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily detained from the Senate by reason of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is recognized.

Mr. BLAINE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about an hour,

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. With the Senator's permission, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McLean	Shipstead
Barkley	Fletcher	McMaster	Simmons
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Smoot
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Steck
Blaine	Gerry	Neely	Steiwer
Borah	Glenn	Norris	Stephens
Brookhart	Goff	Nye	Swanson
Broussard	Harris	Oddie	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Harrison	Overman	Thomas, Okla.
Burton	Hastings	Phipps	Trammell
Capper	Hawes	Pine	Tydings
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	Vandenberg
Copeland	Heflin	Ransdell	Wagner
Curtis	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Dale	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Deneen	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Dill	King	Robinson, Ind.
Edge	La Follette	Schall
Edwards	McKellar	Sheppard

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BLAINE resumed and concluded his speech, which is entire, as follows:

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a resolution in the form of a reservation to the pending multilateral treaty. At that time I gave notice that I would formally present the resolution at an appropriate time and before a vote was taken upon the resolution to adhere to the treaty.

The resolution which I introduced is for the purpose of removing from the multilateral treaty the reservations made by the British Empire during the course of diplomatic exchanges. Before taking up an analysis of that situation I want to address myself to some general propositions in connection with the proposed treaty.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the very able presentation made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in reporting the peace pact to the Senate. I am not altogether in disagreement with his contentions. However, in my humble opinion, he has failed to recognize what I believe to be the actual situation with reference to this proposal. I understand the chairman of the committee concedes that the notes exchanged during the negotiations have the same effect as do reservations, but he also contends that what the notes proposed to reserve was already reserved in the text of the treaty. With that contention I do not agree.

I concede that the right of self-defense is an inalienable right, held by individuals and groups of individuals organized in a social compact from which results sovereignty, and that that sovereignty can not alienate the right of self-defense. However, that sovereignty may, through its constituted authority, suspend that right through inaction or through failure to call upon the necessary instruments of the sovereign to enforce the right of self-defense.

This pact, however, does not mean what it says. It is like the commandment handed down to us from Mt. Sinai to the effect that "Thou shalt not kill."

The junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] said that, in effect, was the pronouncement of this peace pact—"Thou shalt not kill." We all recognize, however, that that commandment is subject to many modifications, limitations, and conditions. It is conceded that the commandment "Thou shalt not kill" does not mean what it says, and never did mean what it says. Individuals and governments have never recognized, under all circumstances, the validity of the prohibition of that commandment.

It has therefore been interpreted to mean "Thou shalt not kill," except in self-defense. The individual may kill when he is assailed and his life is put in jeopardy. That commandment has been modified to the extent that there is the right to kill through judicial process; that the state and the government may take human life notwithstanding the commandment "Thou shalt not kill." That commandment does not prohibit wholesale killing; it does not prohibit in the affairs of men and nations the right to kill, to take human life, individually so far as the individual is concerned, and by the sovereign in wholesale so far as the sovereignty is concerned.

I concede that this treaty on the question of self-defense goes no further than to say "Thou shalt not kill" except under certain circumstances, and I shall deal with those circumstances in a few moments. I therefore come to the same conclusion as does the chairman of the committee, that the right of self-defense, the right to take human life when the sovereign is assailed, exists with or without this treaty. I do not concede, however, that this Government may exercise that right under what I believe to be the correct interpretation of the Monroe doctrine except to a very limited extent.

The Monroe doctrine has been construed to suit those whose interests were best served by some particular construction. The Monroe doctrine as announced by President Monroe in two or three fragmentary paragraphs of a message which was sent to Congress a little over 105 years ago, as President Monroe meant it and as it had been adhered to for a hundred years, meant only two things: First, that there should be no colonization of the territory known as the Territory of Oregon. The purpose of that fragmentary portion of the Monroe doctrine long ago ceased to exist. Colonization of that Territory is no longer threatened. That leaves but one other provision of President Monroe's pronouncement in effect as a national policy for America, and that policy must be interpreted in the light of the day and the conditions under which the pronouncement was made.

America, at that time at least, so President Monroe conceived, was threatened by the invasion of monarchial systems of government. President Monroe recognized that here on the Western Continent democracy and monarchy could not abide together, and therefore proclaimed that the monarchial system of government should not be permitted to obtain a foothold on the Western Hemisphere. That is the extent, and the limit of the extent, to which the Monroe doctrine goes, although that, it is true, involves the question of self-defense, the defense of our democracy, our republican system of government against the tyranny of a monarchial system of government.

The Monroe doctrine does not carry with it the whole general doctrine of self-defense, but only a self-defense limited to this hemisphere alone and limited to the proposition that no foreign government should ever attempt to establish the European system of government upon the soil of the Western Hemisphere. To that extent the Monroe doctrine, the right of self-defense, so limited, is fully protected and covered by the text of the treaty, except in so far as the reservations that have been made by way of diplomatic notes have circumscribed that limited right of self-defense in this hemisphere.

The right to protect life and property, the duty of a sovereign to protect the lives and property of its citizens does not come from the Monroe doctrine. Moreover, the right or the duty to protect the property and the lives of the nationals of a country is, as well, a limited duty.

The duty existing between the sovereign and the subject involves relationships whereby no subject has the moral right to place in jeopardy the peace of his country, whether his process is by way of investments in foreign lands or by way of adventure.

No American citizen has the unlimited right to sail the seas of the world, to go wherever he may choose. That right ceases when he approaches the imminent possibility of involving his Nation in a war.

Moreover, the right of a citizen to protection of life and property is further limited. Daniel Webster, when he was Secretary of State, laid down the proposition, in effect, that citizens going into another territory must abide by the laws of the country to which they went, and respect the decisions of the courts of that country so long as those courts were open to them equally with the citizens of that country. Blaine, when Secretary of State, in the Mafia affair in New Orleans, reiterated that doctrine. He went further in carrying out that doctrine by asserting that America owed no responsibility to those who were set upon by an unlawful mob so far as compensating them or their dependents for injuries or loss of life was concerned. He said that America afforded to them identically the same protection that she afforded to her own citizens, and that when one of our own citizens has been set upon by a mob, that citizen has recourse to the courts of this Nation. He may there seek his remedy; and Secretary Blaine said that we could not guarantee or extend any other or different or enlarged protection to the citizens of another country. So that doctrine has its limitations, and is not affected by the proposed treaty.

Therefore I consider as important the reservation respecting the treaties of Locarno, the treaty of Versailles, the treaties of alliances, and the treaties of neutrality. They have all been incorporated into this peace pact by reservations called interpretations as effectually as though they were written into the text of the treaty itself.

I want to turn my attention just for a few moments to our relationship with those treaties if this peace pact is adhered to by this body.

It has been said by the British premier and by our own Secretary of State that the treaties of Locarno are not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty. If that is true, if their design is the same as the Paris pact, then it is immaterial whether the reservation relating thereto is made or not. But we here to-day may not have a full understanding and appreciation of the ultimate effect of the treaties of Locarno. If they look to the same end, effectuating the same purpose, then with respect to them I have no concern; but we come to the more important treaties, the obligations of the various nations joining in them which have been preserved by the diplomatic notes by way of interpretation, and suggest that by this treaty and by those notes we will be involved in foreign entanglements, enmeshed to such an extent that America will be drawn, actually or constructively, into every conflict that may arise from the treaties of alliances and the treaties of neutrality.

Our own Secretary of State, in his diplomatic notes, has stated that he is not informed as to the terms or conditions of those treaties, and therefore he can not speak about them; yet America's representative proposes that we shall take a step in the dark and adhere to this treaty with interpretations ingrafted into it and upon it concerning alliances of which we have no knowledge.

We may not be legally bound by those treaties; but in honor, in good conscience, we are estopped, when any of those nations attempt to put those treaties into effect, from asserting what America believes to be the path of rectitude. When Great Britain, France, and Italy, or whatever countries may have joined in those alliances, find it necessary or desirable to put into effect by force of arms the provisions of those treaties, America can not sit by except in silence, even when she will or may observe the exercise of the greatest brutality that was ever known in the world, the extension of a tyranny the like of which never has been conceived by man. Yet by this treaty, with the reservations and interpretations, we recognize the treaties of alliances and the treaties of neutrality and we are in honor estopped from asserting that which America ought to assert and which she has asserted in the past in the interest of suppressed and repressed humanity.

I therefore can not join my vote with the votes of those who support this treaty under those circumstances.

Moreover, one of the interpretations particularly keeps in force and effect, as between the nations signatory to that treaty, the League of Nations. I need not, for the purpose of this debate, discuss the provisions of the treaty of Versailles with its League of Nations; but, as for me, I do not propose to cast my vote in a way that may place America in the future in a position where it will be estopped from taking action against international crimes and international bandits.

I therefore express the hope that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will present their resolution in the form of a reservation to the pending treaty. I think the contest over this Paris pact should continue until we have convinced our own consciences, at least, that America should not join that which has been described as nothing more than a noble gesture.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment to ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. I have been reading the resolution offered by the Senator, and it seems to me that its effect, if it should be adopted, would be entirely to shut out Great Britain as a party to the Kellogg pact. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] pointed out yesterday, or the day before yesterday, that the assent of Great Britain to the treaty was expressly given subject to the condition precedent that her signature was to be taken as in no way impairing her right, as a matter of self-defense, to repel any attack upon any region in the world the welfare of which was a matter of peculiar concern to her. It seems to me that if this resolution should be adopted by the Senate, that condition precedent would not be complied with, and Great Britain would not become a party to the treaty at all. I think the Senator will admit that our failure to obtain the assent of Great Britain to the Kellogg pact would create quite a void in it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think the price the Senator asks is too dear a price to pay for this so-called noble gesture.

I understand that the treaty has been proclaimed as transcendental. I submit that the treaty is clothed in beautiful words, it permits of the highest emotionalism, it encourages a veritable Niagara of extravagant declarations as to the great moral force it may be, but I notice that while many of its proponents proclaim that this treaty is a moral gesture, transcendental, at the same time they are voicing their approval of the treaty they are packing their ammunition belts with shot and powder.

I also observe that the treaty is so sublime that we propose to enter into a competitive struggle in supplying ourselves with implements of war and destruction. Beautiful sentiments are uttered, full of great possibilities for the onrush of emotionalism, but the treaty itself, weighted down by the reservations, contains the fertile soil for all the wars of the future.

I would support that noble gesture, I would adhere to that treaty, with the understanding that any interpretation, condition, or reservation contained in the diplomatic notes exchanged during the negotiations for the treaty should not imply any admission of any reserve not contained in the text of the treaty itself. That would make it more than a noble gesture. If the nations would subscribe to an unconditional treaty outlawing war, and withdraw their interpretations and their reservations, then we might be taking the first step toward peace, but I do not believe even then it would be a substantial step.

Humanity is burdened with its inherent weaknesses. There has been no progress made in the world down the path carpeted with velvet. In the march of progress there has been no bed of roses.

I conceive of no order of things designed by the Ruler of the Universe whereby we can have a standardization without death and decay. Mankind has trod this earth from his inception in a constant struggle for existence, assailed by the elements, assailed by pestilences, assailed by war, all in defense of what humanity regarded as essential for its perpetuity. Then it is proposed, by mere verbs, by mere nouns and adjectives, that the centuries-old frictions of humanity are to be wiped out.

We can not promote peace by mere words. Slogans have never saved civilization. Slogans have had their blighting curse in all governments and in all times.

We heard much during the World War of making the world safe for democracy, of putting an end to all wars. We now all know that it was a lie, and every slogan a lie.

Slogans are designed for the purpose of falsehood; they are the instruments of tyranny. We will outlaw war when we recognize realities and deal with realities instead of writing beautiful phrases and manufacturing slogans, the fabric of which future generations will know is falsehood. We will outlaw war when and only when we outlaw the causes of war.

Mr. President, writers and publicists, in discussing the multilateral treaty, have stated and reiterated that the worst that can be said of the treaty, and the most that can be said for the treaty, is that it is a gesture toward peace. Other writers and publicists have said that at the worst the treaty can do no harm and that it may do some good. Proponents of the treaty appear to hold to the same opinion and urge that the virtue of the treaty will be its moral effect upon international relations in the future.

A study of the proposed treaty and the diplomatic notes exchanged during its negotiation, to my mind, can lead to but one conclusion, namely, that it is a one-sided declaration of British policy.

While the Kellogg treaty is couched in idealistic phrases it is but a pious declaration interspersed with pretenses and hypocrisy in a maze of reservations and interpretations. This formula for peace proposes to stabilize and legalize the spoils of war obtained by the greatest empire of the world. The peace designed by this treaty is the peace of the status quo of the Versailles treaty.

It is called a multilateral treaty. It is that in name only. In its essence, in its importance, and in its accomplishments, it is a unilateral treaty with a multilateral concurrence, granting substantial and far-reaching guaranties to a single nation. I emphasize by repeating that that which the treaty does is unilateral. It is one-sided. That one-sided bargain is entered into by all signatory nations, and they agree to a sole benefit in the interests of a single nation; and that benefit is not peace for either that nation or for any other.

What benefits to mankind will flow from this treaty? What is the consideration for this agreement? The proponents of the pact will reply that war is renounced—the renouncement of war as an instrument of national policy.

I ask, sir, what war is renounced?

It is clear that, with the interpretative notes and reservations, there is no renunciation of war.

There is no renunciation of war in self-defense. There is no renunciation of war against any state which breaks the treaty. There is no renunciation of war in execution of obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations. There is no renunciation of war in the execution of obligations under the Locarno agreements. There is no renunciation of war in the execution of obligations under treaties guaranteeing neutrality, including the French, Italian, British, and other alliances. There is no renunciation of war on any continent of the world wherever the British flag flies—and that flag is unfurled on every continent and in every clime. There is no renunciation of war whenever the British Government decides that she has a special and vital interest in any portion of the world.

The wars I have mentioned are the only wars that have been fought since Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown. The only war renounced is the war that never has happened in our time and in the very nature of things never will happen again.

Professor Borchard, of Yale University, states the case clearly when he writes:

> Considering these reservations, it would be difficult to conceive of any wars that nations have fought within the past century or are likely to fight in the future that can not be accommodated under these exceptions. Far from constituting an outlawry of war, they constitute the most solemn sanction of specific wars that has ever been given to the world.

It is argued by proponents of the treaty and by our Secretary of State that the wars to which I have referred are left in exactly the same status as though this treaty were never proposed. I concur in that contention. I have no doubt about it. If that were all the treaty did—if the treaty merely preserved the war status in relation to such wars; if the treaty left to the judgment of the nations the institution of such wars—indeed, the treaty would be negative—in fact, worse than negative, and positively useless—a sham.

As a negative proposition, as a mere skeleton, inert and impotent, the treaty is being exaggerated far beyond its importance by its proponents.

But the treaty takes on a more significant aspect than that. It has a positive, potent, and substantial purpose—a one-sided purpose.

I urge upon the Senate that the most careful consideration should be given to that purpose. The country should be informed of that purpose. The ratification of this treaty should not be jammed through until there has been full opportunity not only for discussion in this body but as well an opportunity for the people of this Nation to acquaint themselves with the actual purpose and design of the treaty as modified by the interpretative notes and diplomatic correspondence.

I shall not go into the multitude of notes exchanged during the negotiation of this treaty. It is important, however, to set down a few historical facts.

In April, 1928, the Government of the United States dispatched a note to the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. That note was received by those Governments on April 13 last. That note is published in the memorandum issued by the American State Department and publicly distributed. It is not essentially material to discuss the contents of that note.

On May 19, 1928, the British Government replied to the American note of April 13. The British reply acknowledged the receipt of the American note, together with copies of correspondence between the United States and the French Government on the subject of the treaty. Of course, it is understood that the American Government had been, over a long period of time, exchanging notes with the French Government respecting a treaty. It is that treaty which is discussed in the American note of April 13 and the British note of May 19.

The British note is carefully drafted, and the text of the note is divided into paragraphs, each paragraph bearing its number, from 1 to 13, inclusive.

At the same time that the American note of April 13, including the American draft of the treaty, was dispatched, the French Government dispatched a note to the same countries, including a draft of the French proposal.

The British note of May 19 discussed all questions referred to in the American and French correspondence. However, the British note introduced a new proposition and embodied that proposition in paragraph 10 of her note.

All questions had been raised as to the relative rights of nations. Up to May 19, 1928, they had been discussed by the various governments with which our Secretary of State had had exchanges. On May 19, 1928, the British Government conceived that now was her opportunity to fit in the missing link of the League of Nations, to take that missing link and insert it into the Paris peace pact. I want to quote in full this new proposition.

It will be understood at this time that Article X of the League of Nations guaranteed the territorial integrity of all nations joining in that covenant against external aggression. However, the treaty of Versailles and the covenant of the League of Nations did not guarantee the territorial integrity of any nation against internal aggression. That will be clearly comprehended when I recall the fact that President Wilson in his 14 points announced the right of self-determination, the right of the people to set up a government of their own choice, recognizing the policy that made this Government of ours possible.

But as a result of the war Great Britain found herself in possession of a large portion of the earth. No guaranty contained in the covenant of the League of Nations would perpetuate her dominion over the countries without their consent. The missing link in the covenant of the League of Nations was a provision guaranteeing territorial integrity against internal aggression. Herein is exhibited the tact, the skill, the shrewdness of British diplomats. Sir Austen Chamberlain said: "Now is the time to take the link missing from the league and put it in the Paris pact and complete the chain that binds 400,000,000 lives to the dominion and tyranny of the British Government." Paragraph 10 of the British note completes that chain. I will read it; it is familiar to all Senators.

(At this point Mr. BLAINE yielded to Mr. REED of Missouri, who suggested the absence of a quorum, and the roll was called.)

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. Has the Senator had his attention called to the obligations of the new multilateral treaty which Mr. Hughes is negotiating with the South American Republics? I have not seen it published.

Mr. BLAINE. I know nothing about the terms of that proposed treaty; I have not even seen it in the newspapers, as Will Rogers might say.

Mr. President, I am going to read paragraph 10 of the British note. I know Senators have read it, but I wish to read it again. I do not believe that its importance can be overemphasized. Before reading it, however, I wish to reply to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. It was the Senator's view that paragraph 10 of the British note was analogous to a reservation of self-defense, but when we interpret an instrument we must take the whole instrument and not any separate paragraph of the instrument. Attention must be called to the fact that the question of self-defense was the general question, broadly treated, in the exchange of notes between the various countries. Great Britain so recognized it; the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs was familiar with that correspondence; and so in paragraph 4 of the British note of May 19 that proposition is discussed, and Sir Austen Chamberlain says:

4. After studying the wording of article 1 of the United States draft, His Majesty's Government do not think that its terms exclude action which a state may be forced to take in self-defense. Mr. Kellogg has made it clear in the speech to which I have referred above that he regards the right of self-defense as inalienable, and His Majesty's Government are disposed to think that on this question no addition to the text is necessary.

There was the whole proposition of self-defense conceded, admited, agreed to. I am sure that we can not fairly interpret the British note by any claim that paragraph 10 is a reservation of the general right of self-defense. Paragraph 10 is a specific paragraph dealing with specific matters outside of and beyond all question of self-defense. It is as follows:

10. The language of article 1, as to the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, renders it desirable that I should remind your excellency that there are certain regions of the world the welfare and integrity of which constitute a special and vital interest for our peace and safety. His Majesty's Government have been at pains to make it clear in the past that interference with these regions can not be suffered.

That is the instrument of an assailant and not the reservation of a pacific man or nation. Further reading from the note:

Their protection against attack is to the British Empire a measure of self-defense.

Not the general doctrine of self-defense, but a specific system of self-defense engrafted upon this multilateral treaty.

Reading further:

It must be clearly understood that His Majesty's Government in Great Britain accept the new treaty upon the distinct understanding that it does not prejudice their freedom of action in this respect.

That is the British declaration of policy. That is the one-sided declaration of policy. That is the only public policy, the only international policy, recognized by this treaty. The renunciation of war is wholly cast aside in all these instances, and we propose to acknowledge and recognize a declaration of a British public policy heretofore unknown to all the nations of the world.

Now, observe the keenness of the British diplomat, the subtlety—and I say this without implying——

Mr. KING. A Machiavellian spirit?

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I do imply a Machiavellian spirit—but without implying any degree of distrust in the ingenuity of the British diplomat. This is not a part of the British policy which I am about to read from paragraph 10; but Sir Austen Chamberlain declares:

The Government of the United States have comparable interests any disregard of which by a foreign power they have declared that they would regard as an unfriendly act. His Majesty's Government believe, therefore, that in defining their position they are expressing the intention and meaning of the United States Government.

A very gratuitous expression or piece of advice.

But the British Government conceives the Monroe doctrine entirely different than it was conceived by President Monroe, by President Cleveland, by Secretary of State Daniel Webster, or James G. Blaine, or Theodore Roosevelt during his first term in the presidential chair.

The Monroe doctrine has never acknowledged any special or vital interest of America in the Western Continent. It has simply declared that we would not tolerate the implanting of the foreign system on this continent. Seductive, however, is Sir Austen Chamberlain. He is very anxious to have the Monroe doctrine given the broadest interpretation, without latitude, without boundary lines, without a hitching post; so he made this very seductive declaration expressing the intention and meaning of the United States Government.

Now, let us analyze this note of May 19 just a little further in the interpretation of paragraph 10.

On July 18 there was another note from the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Chamberlain, to the American Government. In that note Mr. Chamberlain reiterates not this proposition of the right of self-defense generally but this new-found declaration of public policy of the British Empire. You will find it on page 48 of the publication issued by Mr. Kellogg. He says:

As regards the passage in my note of the 19th of May relating to certain regions of which the welfare and integrity constitute a special and vital interest for our peace and safety, I need only repeat that His Majesty's Government in Great Britain accept the new treaty upon the understanding that it does not prejudice their freedom of action in this respect.

Can anyone, in placing a fair interpretation upon this treaty, suggest or argue with any degree of conviction that paragraph 10 is not a new proposition; that it deals only with the question of self-defense? I think not. It is a specific provision, a specific article in a document which becomes a part of the treaty as effectually as though it were written into the text of the treaty.

Now, just follow Mr. Chamberlain one step farther.

Following the paragraph which I have just read from page 48, he again discusses not this new declared British policy but the general question of self-defense. He says:

I am entirely in accord with the views expressed by Mr. Kellogg in his speech of the 28th of April that the proposed treaty does not restrict or impair in any way the right of self-defense, as also with his opinion that each State alone is competent to decide when circumstances necessitate recourse to war for that purpose.

It does not make any difference what may be the interpretation given to paragraph 10 by the distinguished Senator from Idaho; but his interpretation is not the interpretation of Mr. Chamberlain, and it is Mr. Chamberlain's interpretation that will prevail, because his interpretation is written into the treaty itself through this note as a reservation or interpretation. The words of the Senator, so forceful in the Senate, will fall without effect when the British Government decides to put into effect this new one-sided, self-serving declaration of British policy.

What we may think about it here to-day, what Senators who propose to support this treaty may think about it, will avail nothing when the time comes that British interests require that the full force of paragraph 10 shall be put into effect as against America and the world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. KING. I have read the notes submitted by Sir Austen Chamberlain, as well as the notes submitted by the various other governments so far as they have been published. It seemed to me that the interpretation to be placed upon the notes of Sir Austen Chamberlain, taking them in their entirety, is this:

Great Britain has certain areas of territory in which she claims a vital interest, much the same—and I add this parenthetically—as we claim a vital interest in the Panama Canal, and claim to have certain interests under the Monroe doctrine in Latin-American Republics. We sign this treaty with the understanding that with respect to those territories in which we have a vital interest we shall be permitted to adopt and apply the law of self-defense, and that we are the sole interpreters of when and where and how to enforce that law of self-defense, to the same extent as the United States may apply the law of self-defense under the Monroe doctrine when it believes—and it is the sole judge—that its rights are affected.

It seems to me that that is all that Sir Austen Chamberlain means. Great Britain has the right of self-defense not only to defend the island of Great Britain when it shall be invaded; it has the right of self-defense to defend Australia when it may be invaded; it has the right of self-defense to protect the Suez Canal if it should be attacked; or any other territory over which it claims this particular and special right or prerogative. Conceding that every country signing the multilateral treaty is the sole and exclusive judge of what the right of self-defense is, and when it shall apply the right of self-defense, I can not see that these notes of Sir Austen Chamberlain enlarge the general doctrine contended for by Mr. Kellogg and by those who are supporting this treaty; namely, that the right of self-defense is inherent in every country, and is implicit in every treaty.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, permit me to suggest to the Senator from Utah that Great Britain challenged the Monroe doctrine down at least to the time of the administration of President Cleveland. The Monroe doctrine, as construed by American statesmen at that time and prior thereto, was a limited instrument for self-defense—defense only against monarchical European systems. Here, however, it is proposed that we, by the ratification of this treaty, grant to Great Britain her entire claim. We will forever be estopped from asserting any other position than that taken by Great Britain. That I can not consent to do; and I will endeavor to show before I get through why I should not consent to do it, and why I believe the Senate of the United States ought not to consent to do it.

Moreover, if the British Government may establish a one-sided declaration of public policy, then the French Government may do the same; the Italian Government may do the same; Nicaragua may do the same; Cuba may do the same; the frozen regions of Labrador may do the same. They may declare that to be their doctrine. That does not argue that we should consent to that doctrine, and estop America from asserting not only her own rights but as well the rights that may belong to other people entitled to assert their independence as we asserted our right to be independent some few decades ago.

That is my objection to paragraph 10, that if we adhere to this treaty we recognize a self-serving declaration of public policy by a single nation, and we will forever be estopped from asserting any policy contrary to that declaration.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to make one inquiry in connection with the statement of the Senator from Utah. If it be true that the right of self-defense, properly construed, includes the right of Great Britain to do everything she has specified in her note she proposes to reserve the right to do, why did Great Britain write the note?

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BLAINE. I would like to have the Senator answer at some other time, if he will.

Mr. KING. I shall not trespass on the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I think that is a very pertinent question, and I have no doubt but that the Senator from Utah will be able to enlighten us upon that proposition. But I want to repeat, it is not what the Senator from Utah may declare on this floor; it is what Sir Austen Chamberlain has declared in paragraph 10, and his government alone will construe that paragraph, and not a Senator, or the Senate of the United States, or the United States of America. We propose by this treaty to extend an approval of that one-sided declaration of British policy.

I am going to discuss that a little later more fully. I therefore conclude that paragraph 10 of the British note has no reference to the general proposition of self-defense, that the note on the face of it sustains that contention, and that therefore it is a special provision, it has certain meanings, it will be given a certain interpretation, and I do not propose, I repeat, to place America in a position where she will be in honor bound to recognize the full force of that declaration.

Professor Shotwell, of Columbia University, the acknowledged author of the French proposal which ripened into the multilateral treaty, has written a book on this treaty. I want to qualify that statement, however. A great many claim the authorship of the French proposal of the multilateral treaty. I do not intend to deny any of them whatever honor may come to them because of their alleged authorship. My own prediction is—and I am not speaking as a prophet but drawing on the experience of the past—that it will not be many years before no American citizen will be proud of having credited to him the authorship of this treaty. I think in the years to come whoever that statesman may be he will find a more desirable environment in the British Parliament than within America.

Without any intention of reflecting upon Professor Shotwell, it can be fairly said that he is not anti-British, and his statement of the British claim in Egypt is entirely favorable to the British viewpoint. In discussing the multilateral treaty, Professor Shotwell characterizes this new-found British policy in these words:

> * * * no matter what may be the ultimate fate of the Kellogg proposal, the Chamberlain pronouncement, being a unilateral statement of British policy, will have taken its place as a formal notification of British policy in this regard.

Paragraph 10 of the British note is another article 10 of the covenant of the League of Nations. As I said, it is the missing link. That missing link has been found. It is now being neatly fitted into world affairs by the British Government. The fact is that paragraph 10 of the note is much more far-reaching than article 10 of the league covenant. Paragraph 10 of the British note proclaims the territorial integrity of the whole British domain, including her spoils of war, and by this treaty America is asked to guarantee the territorial integrity of the British Empire.

Article X of the covenant for the League of Nations guaranteed the territorial integrity of the spoils of war only against external aggression. By the conditions imposed by paragraph 10 of the British note upon the nations adhering to this treaty, we are asked to guarantee the territorial integrity of the British Empire not only against external aggression but as well against domestic and internal struggles for independence of her subject people.

I say we guarantee British dominion; we do, and a most effective guaranty; we recognize her claim of vital and special interest. We legalize that claim. By this treaty we enter into a consent decree quieting British claim of title to one-fourth of the inhabitable globe and dominion over a quarter of the world's population. We are morally bound ever afterwards to respect that decree. What Great Britain did not get under Article X of the league covenant she proposes now to acquire by engrafting upon the multilateral treaty paragraph 10 of the British note.

Great Britain's adherence to the multilateral treaty is "upon the distinct understanding" that she shall have freedom of action in those regions of the world the welfare and integrity of which constitute what she may claim to be her special and vital interest.

To make that condition more emphatic, more binding, the British Government, in a note dated London, July 18, 1928, notified the American Government that Great Britain accepted the multilateral treaty—and I am using her own language—"upon the understanding that it does not prejudice their freedom of action" in those certain regions the welfare and integrity of which she proclaims to constitute a special and vital interest for her peace and safety.

America did not join the League of Nations. America did not guarantee the territorial integrity of any of the spoils of war. America did not guarantee the status quo under the treaty of Versailles. The Senate refused to ratify the league, and through a most solemn national referendum, with a most decisive vote against the league, the American people ratified the Senate's act.

America proposed to retain her traditional policy. She did not propose to deny to other nations—smaller and weaker nations—the right of self-determination, the right of self-government, the right of independence. America proposed to grant to other peoples that which America claimed for herself on the establishment of this Republic.

That left foreign imperialism uncertain and unassured. Peoples possessing the same language, the same tradition, the same customs, the same habits, desiring a separate unity, were still assured the continuance of America's traditional policy. That left for them a ray of hope. That gave to them perseverance and courage. That inspired in those nations and races the spirit of freedom and held out to them the possibility of their own independence, to be by them acquired for themselves through whatever sacrifices they choose to make as America acquired and sacrificed on the battle fields of the American Revolution.

I take off my hat to British diplomacy. No statesmanship in the last half century has been able to cope with it. British statesmen are trained in the art. They know the game of diplomacy as do no other statesmen. We need not search far to learn the secret of the success of British diplomacy. British statesmen have but one purpose, one object, and that is the British Empire. They have no divided allegiance. They think only in the terms of Great Britain and her subjects. They are not moral crusaders in the realm of diplomacy. They pursue their object incessantly, diligently, and with a skill that befuddles other statesmen. When Great Britain did not obtain all she wanted under the league her statecraft readily found the avenues through which she might obtain her object in the multilateral treaty.

Trace the history of the diplomatic exchanges of notes just briefly. Keep in mind that the British Government in its note of May 19, 1928, pursued its purpose with a definiteness and a thoroughness that left no single proposition involved in the treaty undefined so far as she was concerned. In the course of the diplomatic exchanges is the note of June 23, 1928, from the State Department of our Government to 14 other governments, including Great Britain. In that note Secretary Kellogg summarized what was contained in his former notes and in his public addresses, to which reference is made in the diplomatic correspondence.

The Secretary of State treated with candor and frankness all of the propositions, conditions, interpretations, and reservations that had been made during negotiations, except as to one proposition. He defined the reservations and interpretations in their relation to the multilateral treaty in the following order: (1) Self-defense; (2) the league covenant; (3) the treaties of Locarno; (4) treaties of neutrality; (5) relations with a treaty-breaking state; (6) universality.

But lo, he is as silent as a tomb on paragraph 10 of the British note of May 19. And this is significant. He did not discuss paragraph 10 of the British note with candor and frankness; in fact, he did not discuss it at all, either in his explanatory note of June 23 or any subsequent or prior notes that were exchanged during negotiations. At least, if he discussed paragraph 10 of the British note he has not so informed the Senate or the public.

Now, I am not criticizing our Secretary of State for failure to discuss paragraph 10 of the British doctrine. I know that the subject raised by Great Britain is a sensitive one. I know that the policy pursued by our own Government in the last few years in our relations with Central and South America has caused a sore that briny liquid irritates. I know that the interpretation of the Monroe doctrine by modern statesmen has gone far afield from the purposes of President Monroe, who announced that doctrine a hundred and five years ago.

Of course, the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Chamberlain, is quite familiar with the history of the Monroe doctrine and the application that has been made of that doctrine by America in the last quarter of a century.

So Mr. Chamberlain, in paragraph 10 of his note, gently taps the shoulder of our Secretary of State and reminds him of that history and the modern interpretation given to the Monroe doctrine. He whispers to our Secretary of State and says, "Now, Mr. Secretary, I do not expect you to talk about this. I do not want to embarrass you, and so I have given expression as to the intent and meaning of your Government in applying the Monroe doctrine. Now, you can keep still about it. I will accept your interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, and I will apply it to the multilateral treaty and extend its scope to embrace all that was guaranteed to His Majesty's Government under Article X of the covenant of the League of Nations, and then I will give it a little broader effect so that the modern interpretation of your ancient Monroe doctrine may be extended to the British Empire, without territorial limitation, either as to lands or people, and you, Mr. Secretary, may keep still about it." And he has kept still.

Mr. President, it was the greatest betrayal of America and her interests that could be conceived by any public official having the authority and the power to engage in diplomatic correspondence with a foreign government, and the betrayal is stamped with an utter silence.

Now, of course, those are not the words of Mr. Chamberlain spoken to Mr. Kellogg, but those words accurately picture the British claim under paragraph 10 of the British note, and the silence of our State Department on that reservation.

I am not unmindful of the excuse that will be offered for the silence of Mr. Kellogg. That excuse will at once hark back to a certain pronouncement made by the British Government in 1922 respecting Egypt.

But that is not what the British Government says in her note. She does not limit it to a region. Her reservation in paragraph 10, while indefinite, leaves the door open for Great Britain to claim application of the doctrine announced to any region of the world in which she may have any interest. Great Britain uses the words of diplomacy. They are indefinite, misleading, subject to such construction as she may desire to place upon them, as may serve her purpose in the future.

I am criticizing the policy announced. I do not care whether it refers to one region or many regions, whether it is Egypt or India, whether her reference is to a mandate or a protectorate.

If her reference is to Egypt alone, my objection is emphasized, because Great Britain has broken her word of honor, given to the Egyptian people in 1914. She then promised Egypt independence. She now denies to Egypt independence.

And the curse of this treaty is that we recognize and legalize her betrayal.

The Egyptian people, relying upon that word of honor, contributed to the British Empire 1,000,000 of her young men to fight in the World War that democracy might be made safe in this world, that the right of self-determination might be established; but the sacred word of the British has betrayed the Egyptian people and betrayed the spirit of every Egyptian boy that lies under the sod of an allied battle field. Then we are asked in the Senate of the United States to place America in a position where we will be estopped from protesting that betrayal.

Argue as we will, temporize as much as we please, talk as long as we may, we can not explain away the fact that the British Empire has declared a new British policy to which we are asked to adhere, and when we do adhere we are estopped to deny it.

I realize it will also be contended that the interpretations, conditions, and reservations are no part of the treaty. It is true that they are not a part of the text of the treaty before us. It must be conceded, however, that treaty obligations other than the League of Nations have for their sanction only moral forces.

The success of the multilateral treaty must depend alone upon the good faith of nations. The nations adhering to this treaty plight their faith and pledge their word of honor, and the sanction rests in the conscience of the nations and their peoples.

By the same token, by the same plight of our faith, by the same pledge of our word of honor, by the same conscience of our Nation and our people, the interpretations and the reservations have their sanction.

It does not make any difference whether we call the notes that have been exchanged interpretative notes or conditions precedent, or reservations; as those terms relate to diplomatic intercourse they are analogous and interchangeable. The difference in their meaning and purport is only the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

In good faith we propose to adhere to this treaty. We plight our faith, we pledge our honor, and we plight that faith and pledge that honor as the sanction for every interpretation, every condition, and every reservation contained in the diplomatic notes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to call his attention at this time and on this point to the fact that it has been claimed that there is no necessity for in any way mentioning the Monroe doctrine in any reservation or resolution of the Senate, for two reasons: One of them is that it is claimed that it is a doctrine of self-defense. But there is another reason that was advanced in the committee and has been advanced upon the floor, namely, that Great Britain had recognized the Monroe doctrine in a note from Chamberlain; that was an admission by Great Britain of the validity of the Monroe doctrine. If that is true, then certainly we equally recognize the claim of Lord Chamberlain to Great Britain's Monroe doctrine.

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly; and we recognize the interpretation of the Monroe doctrine given by Sir Austen Chamberlain in applying the new British doctrine.

On this same proposition, in some of the notes exchanged in the negotiations for the treaty, the interpretations and reservations are expressly reserved, and the treaty has been entered into upon express conditions and understandings. I will note briefly these reservations, conditions, and understandings.

In the Japanese reply to the United States invitation, her signature to the treaty is upon the understanding that it contains nothing that would refuse to independent States the right of self-defense, and other alleged rights.

The Union of South Africa, by the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, puts its willingness to become a party to the treaty on the condition that certain conditions be granted.

Now, let us look into those conditions.

The British Government, in her note of May 19, clearly announces that her willingness to join in the treaty is upon the distinct understanding that it does not prejudice her freedom of action in certain respects concerning the territorial integrity of her domain.

The French note of July 14 summarizes the interpretations, at least four of them, stating what France believes to be the interpretation of the treaty, and in conclusion states that under such circumstances and in such situation she is willing to sign the treaty.

The Government of Poland, in its note of July 17, takes note of at least three of the interpretations.

Then, as I have already stated, in the British note of July 18 last, the British Government expressly declares that it accepts the new treaty upon the understanding that it does not prejudice her freedom in certain regions of the world.

The Czechoslovakian minister, in his note of July 20, recites interpretations or reservations and expresses the willingness of his Government to join in the treaty, but makes it plain that the letters and diplomatic notes indicate the meaning and the significance that is to be attached to the multilateral treaty.

Who can say, therefore, that we are not bound or that any nation is not bound by the interpretations, conditions, or reservations contained in the diplomatic notes? This treaty has been joined in by certain nations upon a condition precedent. That condition is certain interpretations, certain definitions, and the nations have joined with the absolute and expressed understanding that they join on the conditions precedent; and therefore it follows as night follows the day that whatever interpretation, condition, or understanding agreed to in the diplomatic notes exchanged in the negotiation of this treaty constitute a part of the obligations entered into, morally binding upon all nations adhering thereto and having notice thereof.

Moreover, I call your attention to paragraph 7 of the British note of May 19, where in discussing the relations with a treaty-breaking state it is stated that means can be found of placing the understanding in relation thereto on record in some appropriate manner, "so that it may have equal value with the terms of the treaty itself." Observe the keenness of British diplomacy—"So that it may have equal value with the terms of the treaty itself."

The device used in bringing about this treaty is the same device that was used in the negotiations at Locarno, and so the interpretations or conditions or reservations contained in the exchange of notes are contemporaneous with the treaty itself, binding in good morals, in good conscience, in good faith, and in the code of honor as is the treaty itself and having for their sanction the same sanction as for the treaty itself, whatever the treaty may mean.

Is there anyone who proposes that we shall not abide by the interpretations, conditions, and reservations contained in the diplomatic notes? Are we to adhere to this treaty with the mental reservation that we will or may with impunity disregard the so-called interpretative notes whenever it suits our purpose? Do we propose to announce to the world that we adhere to this solemn obligation and at the same time disclaim an obligation to adhere to the reservations or interpretations of which we have knowledge?

If we do, if that is to be the attitude of America, then we will stand before the world as hypocrites, naked of honor and destitute of morals or conscience.

In my opinion there can be no quibble over the proposition that we are as firmly bound to acknowledge and to observe the interpretations, conditions, and understandings imposed in the negotiation of this treaty as we are, in good faith, to observe the text of the treaty.

There are other circumstances in connection with this subject which I may appropriately call to your attention at this time. Some governments are not adhering to the treaty except upon conditions subsequent to the treaty.

On December 28 I directed a communication to the Secretary of State asking him to furnish me a copy of all the notes precedent and subsequent to the signing of the treaty which had been exchanged among the several nations. Up to this time I have received no reply to that request. Therefore I am in no position to discuss from the record the conditions subsequent which have been imposed upon the various nations, but I have been able to gather fragmentary portions of conditions subsequent on the part of nations that have adhered to this treaty.

The Egyptian Government objects to the new imperialistic policy of Great Britain, and declares that the peace of the world can not be assured when Great Britain's imperialistic enterprises have no other justification than force. The Egyptian Government, therefore, adhered to the treaty on condition that there should be no implication of any admission of any reserve whatever.

The Persian Government, another government under the domination of the British Empire, in its adherence to the treaty, declared that—> the reservations made by certain powers do not create on the part of Persia any obligation to recognize anything susceptible of contravening its territorial and maritime rights and possessions.

The Turkish Government, in adhering to the pact, did so without reservation, bound only by the text of the treaty, to the exclusion of all interpretations, conditions, or reservations that are not an integral part of the treaty.

Afghanistan, another nation over which the British Empire proposes to perpetuate its dominion, is in accord with Persia.

The Soviet Government declared on adhering to the treaty that—> inasmuch as the note of the British Government has not been communicated to the Soviet Government as an integral part of the compact or its supplement, it therefore can not be considered obligatory for the Soviet Government.

The Soviet Government of Russia, in adhering to the treaty, declares against the reservations.

The Indian Empire, consisting of 319,000,000 men and women, has no one to speak for it except Great Britain, which exercises complete dominion over the Indian people. However, the people of India, not so unlike other peoples in past centuries, have that spark which may at any moment ignite a conflagration that will bring to them their independence. The people of India have their Franklins; I do not propose to deny to them their Lafayettes, their Kossuths, their Von Steubens, their Kosciuskos, or their De Kalbs. The people of India have sent to America their representatives, as the colonies went from port to port in Europe through their representatives in aid of the war that made our Nation possible.

To America to-day the people of India are speaking their hope through a woman from India. Sarojini Naidu—a cultured, refined, and intelligent representative of the people of India, trained in the great universities of Great Britain—speaks at least the spirit of India and the voice of India so far as an unofficial representative of an organized people can speak it.

I hold in my hand a telegram from that unofficial representative dated January 8, addressed to myself, which I ask to have read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 8, 1929.

Hon. JOHN J. BLAINE,
Senate Office Building:

The issue you have raised in the course of the debate on the multilateral treaty with special reference to British reservations is of momentous importance to India. To accept such reservations in their entirety is to indorse and assume responsibility for all arbitrary policies and actions which might conceivably work to the detriment of my people in their legitimate aspiration and endeavor to secure full national freedom. As an unofficial but duly accredited spokesman of my country, I question the claim of Lord Cushendun to commit India to any treaty in which her own representatives were neither included nor consulted. Though India has always upheld the high gospel of peace toward the recognition of which principle this pact in its original intentions constituted an admirable gesture she can not be held bound in all circumstances to honor any vicarious pledges made in her behalf and without her consent which deprives her of a single national or international right but she must reserve to herself complete independence of action in all its implication to establish and maintain her undeniable and inalienable birthright of political liberty.

SAROJINI NAIDU,
Ex-President Indian National Congress, 21 Union Square.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, so far as the Indian people may speak, that great people has spoken.

With this record before us it is proposed that America shall be committed to an agreement that is one-sided, that recognizes and legalizes the spoils of war, that proposes that the British Empire may extend her sphere of influence, her imperialistic sway, to the four corners of the world, under a self-serving declaration of national policy heretofore unrecognized by a single nation.

President Wilson went to Paris and brought back Article X of the League of Nations. Secretary Kellogg went to Paris and brought back paragraph 10 of the British note. I repeat, what Great Britain did not accomplish under Article X of the league she proposes to consummate under paragraph 10 of the British note.

I have no intention of extending this discussion beyond reasonable bounds. Candor compels me to discuss concretely what Great Britain proposes as the price she demands for adherence to this treaty.

America having transformed the Monroe doctrine into an instrument of oppression of smaller and weaker peoples, Great Britain, by paragraph 10 of her note, now adopts the modern American policy. With the recognition of this new British imperialism by America the two great English-speaking nations of the world are preparing themselves for the contest in the division of the world—a competitive struggle for lands and commerce, raw material and material resources. Concurrent with the treaty is the big navy program; what other does it mean than war?

Why, this treaty, sir, is not even a truce. It is the beginning of the most stupendous struggle for world dominion and territorial aggrandizement. The clash may not come in our time, but this treaty portends an early conflict—the first one a commercial war, the second one none but the Infinite Mind can contemplate.

I have no doubt but that the Senators who are supporting the big navy program will vote for this treaty, or the most of them. I am not surprised that many of those voting for this treaty justify their support of a big navy. We may need it. We may be compelled to meet gun with gun, battleship with battleship. When we legalize, as we do by this treaty, British control of one-fourth of the world's habitable land, with a population of 15,000,000 more than one-fourth of the total inhabitants of the world, we draw the noose tight about our neck.

Here this mighty giant, the British Empire, with vast territory of land, with her dominion over more than one-fourth of the people of the world, the territorial integrity of which we acknowledge and legalize, with the trade routes to the Orient and Africa under her control—we now by this treaty deliver into her keeping the ports of two great continents, from which she may deny our commerce. Why, then, sirs, do you propose to make the contest an uneven one—why handicap America? Why betray America with this pretended covenant for peace? Peace! There is no peace—there can be no peace, except an armed peace, so long as governments insist upon maintaining the causes of war.

The outlawry of war will not be brought about through slogans. War can not be outlawed through sublime declarations. War is not a state of mind. War is a state of things. War exists because certain nations propose to dominate and bully the rest of the world.

Protectorates, mandates, spheres of influence, foreign concessions, exploitation of natural resources—oil, coal, steel, precious metals, tropical plantations, monopolization of the trade routes of the world, indefensible tariff barriers; these are some of the causes of war; and war will not be outlawed until nations are willing to make their respective sacrifices until every cause of war has been removed.

You might just as well by a decree, by a noble gesture, proclaim against the invasion of a scourge. That will not prevent it, and the scourge will come unless the causes that produce that scourge are eliminated. They are not eliminated by slogans and idealistic phrases. They are eliminated when we recognize the realities. This old world of ours, after all, with all its beauty and all its poetry and all its art, recognizes that in the eternal order of things realities control.

Those causes of war to which I have referred are augmented by the terms of the harsh and unconscionable treaty of Versailles and the extension of Article X of the League of Nations by paragraph 10 of the British note.

Far worse than the threat to our commerce is our denial of the right to liberty and independence everywhere. We propose to weld tighter the steel band of tyranny and imperialism about the form of prostrate and subject people.

We by this treaty solemnly acknowledge that less than 50,000,000 subjects of Great Britain shall have the right to rule over 400,000,000 people, without their consent and against their protest.

Mr. President, is there a single Member of this Senate who can say that we are not by this treaty building up a power that is not only a menace to the peace of the world, but, as well, a menace to civilization itself?

Let us look at the world picture briefly. In Africa alone the British Government has subjugated 50,000,000 people in a territory almost equal to Canada and Mexico.

In Egypt 13,000,000 human lives are under her domination.

In India she exercises sway over nearly 319,000,000.

The United Kingdom, with a population of only 44,000,000, dominates in Europe three and a half millions of people, in Asia, 329,000,000; in Africa, over 50,000,000; in North America, over 9,000,000; in the West Indies, a million and three-quarters; in South and Central America, 350,000; in Australasia, over seven and a half million inhabitants; and in the scattered islands of the seas, nearly a million.

Of this vast multitude of subjects nearly 90 per cent are a race foreign to the Anglo-Saxon. This vast multitude of Asiatics, Africans, and Malaysians have a civilization far more ancient than that of the British. They have given to the world the greatest men; they have developed the sciences; they handed down to us laws and a literature rich in spiritual value. They constitute a great sleeping giant. In the retrogression of civilization, as we propose by this treaty, who can say that these ancient people may not some day become the salt of the earth and God's chosen people?

And yet it is proposed in the Senate of the United States that we should solemnly recognize the British Kingdom's claim of sovereignty, dominion over, and possession of these people.

I say, sir, that America, born out of the womb of revolution, can not afford to deny to those 400,000,000 people their right of independence, as they may in the future be able to assert that right. I may stand alone in this, but as for myself, I will not consent to a treaty that obligates America to recognize and respect the claim of any nation against the right of independence of other nations.

Nearly 10 years ago—to be exact, on November 18, 1919—Senator Robert M. La Follette, the senior La Follette, of my State, made one of the most memorable speeches that was ever delivered in this forum. The Senate had under consideration the covenant of the League of Nations. Under discussion was Article X of that covenant. Senator La Follette, with an unconquerable soul and an undimmed vision of the rights of smaller and weaker peoples, and with unsurpassed ability and power, and with a prophetic vision, said:

> I care not what reservations or amendments we attach to this covenant. In the final analysis it is an instrument for the preservation of the status quo. Like the Holy Alliance of 1815, it is couched in the language of idealism and peace. But, like the Holy Alliance, it will be used for the suppression of nationalities and for the prosecution of oppressive warfare.
>
> This covenant closes the doors in the face of every people striving for freedom.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Mr. President, we can not, without sacrificing this Republic, maintain world dominion for ourselves. And, sir, we should not pledge ourselves to maintain it for another.

He further said:

> These people do not ask that we send armies to Europe or Asia to aid them in gaining their freedom. They ask simply that we shall do nothing to hinder them in their struggle for independence from the power which once held sway over the American Colonies.

Senator La Follette was discussing Article X of the league. Take out of his speech all reference to Article X of the league, and substitute in place thereof the multilateral treaty and paragraph 10 of the British note. Then every word uttered by that great American patriot, who loved liberty and independence more dearly than his own life, is applicable with equal emphasis to the treaty under consideration. His words, which I have quoted, are as powerful against this treaty as they were when uttered against the league.

I quote but one more paragraph from his memorable speech. He said:

> The map of the world has become the map of Great Britain. It is not the work of chance. On its face it is the written confession of the guilt of British imperialists for their full share in the years of diplomatic intrigue which inevitably embroiled the world in war.

These are the regions, from Cairo to Cape Town, from the Black Sea to Singapore, from Labrador to Cape Horn, with her dominion over the islands of the sea, with America standing as the only nation with the force and resources sufficient to prevent the closing of the British imperial vise—these are the regions of the world the territorial integrity of which Great Britain demands that we acknowledge, and it is here proposed that the Senate shall give adherence thereto.

This pact commits our Nation to an impossible peace, unworthy of the traditions of America, and forgetful of that which made this Republic possible.

PRISON-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COUZENS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7729) entitled "An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

JAMES COUZENS,
SIMEON D. FESS,
HARRY B. HAWES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. F. KOPP,
FREDK. N. ZIHLMAN,
WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). The conference report is received as in legislative session. Is there objection to its consideration?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the amendment from which the Senate conferees receded?

Mr. COUZENS. The Senate conferees receded from an amendment put in on the floor, which I should like to have the Secretary read. It is with respect to exempting farm products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> On page 2, line 5, after "otherwise" insert a colon and the following proviso:
>
> "Provided, That this act shall not apply to the preparation or processing of farm products so as to make same suitable for use by the manufacturer in the making of any manufactured article."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the report unanimous?

Mr. COUZENS. The report is unanimous.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan whether all the other amendments were agreed to, including the one providing for a prolongation of the time.

Mr. COUZENS. The House conferees agreed to every amendment made by the Senate, with the exception of the amendment just read.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand that the amendment with reference to agricultural products was not accepted by the House conferees?

Mr. COUZENS. That is the amendment on which the Senate conferees receded. It was put in on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

ALLEGED BRIBERY OF SENATORS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the highest possible privilege. As in legislative session I ask leave to submit a report of the special committee to investigate charges that certain Senators were bribed by the payment of money by foreign governments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Barkley	Fletcher	McNary	Sheppard
Bayard	George	Metcalf	Shipstead
Bingham	Gerry	Moses	Shortridge
Blaine	Glenn	Neely	Simmons
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Steiwer
Brookhart	Harris	Norris	Stephens
Broussard	Hawes	Nye	Swanson
Bruce	Hayden	Oddie	Thomas, Idaho
Capper	Heflin	Overman	Thomas, Okla.
Caraway	Johnson	Phipps	Trammell
Copeland	Jones	Pine	Tydings
Couzens	Kendrick	Pittman	Vandenberg
Curtis	Keyes	Ransdell	Wagner
Deneen	King	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Dill	La Follette	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Edge	McKellar	Robinson, Ark.	Watson
Edwards	McLean	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Fess	McMaster	Sackett

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, as in open legislative session I wish to submit a report on a matter of the highest privilege.

This is the final report from the committee appointed by the Senate under Senate Resolution 7 to investigate propaganda or money alleged to have been used by foreign governments to influence United States Senators. Before sending the report to the desk I would like to make a brief explanation of it.

The committee was originally appointed to investigate the authenticity or falsity of a large number of documents printed in the Hearst papers supposed to have come from Mexican Government files in Mexico City and from their consulate in New York City. It was found to the satisfaction of everyone, including the experts employed by Mr. Hearst, that those documents were crude forgeries.

While the committee was studying those documents there came to our attention privately some eight photographs of pretended documents which, if they had been genuine, would have shown that two United States Senators had received large amounts of money from the soviet authorities in Europe for the purpose of inducing them to work for the recognition of the soviet by the United States. Those papers were sent to us by an American who had come upon them in Europe, who sent them without any representation that they were genuine, without any expression that they were genuine, but under what he conceived to be his patriotic duty to make them known to the Senate.

Our committee was of the impression from the first sight of the new papers that they were fraudulent, but we did not feel disposed to dismiss them without investigation. We were unwilling that it might be said now or at any time in the future that we had the slightest disposition to whitewash any one of our number merely because we had implicit confidence in his complete integrity. So the committee quietly went to work to test out or find corroboration of the new documents if it were possible that that corroboration existed. We did not make their existence public because we were unwilling that the papers should be published without at the same time having made public an expression of our judgment on their genuineness or their falsity.

The committee held its last meeting yesterday morning, and the notes of that meeting have been sent to the Printing Office for confidential printing. A draft of our report has likewise been sent to the Printing Office, together with photographs of all of the new documents. We would not have made them public until the printed copies had been received for each and every Senator's inspection had we not learned to-day that in some way the newspapers had learned about the incident and were about to publish accounts of it.

Inasmuch as we want whatever is published to be complete and to be accompanied by our verdict, it was our judgment that the report in typewritten form had best be laid before the Senate now, and the notes of our hearings on the matter can be laid before Senators as soon as they come from the Government Printing Office.

Generally speaking, I may say that the documents consisted of eight photographs of letters and receipts, including a receipt pretended to be signed by Mr. Dudley Field Malone, saying that he had received from the soviet ambassador in Paris $100,000 to be paid to "Senator W. Norris"—not "GEORGE W. NORRIS," but "Senator W. Norris."

I may say at this moment that we are convinced that all of these things are crass forgeries. Another pretended receipt bore what seemed to be a facsimile of the signature of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] acknowledging receipt of $100,000 from Mr. Dudley Field Malone, for purposes not stated.

We have investigated the matter through every channel of investigation that has been suggested by any person in this country and abroad, both through official channels and through private channels. I myself had to go abroad last summer on the work of the American Battle Monument Commission, and while there took occasion to help in running these down, although other persons with whom we had previously made arrangements had been doing it for some time before I got there. We found where the originals are of the documents that were photographed. They are in Paris. They were offered for sale to us for $50,000 approximately, the amount being stated in French money. But the man who offered them for sale, in spite of repeated urgings on our part, had to admit that he could neither furnish us any evidence to prove their genuineness nor any evidence to show that any such transaction had ever passed through the bank, nor any evidence to show that anything of the sort had ever occurred; and he had to admit, further, that he could not give us any clue which we might follow up with any likelihood of being able to find any such cooperation. He simply offered the papers for sale at a very large price and said that if we paid him his price we could keep the papers, but he would wash his hands of the whole transaction.

Our committee is unanimously of the opinion that the papers, in so far as they tend to involve either of the Senators mentioned, are the crudest kind of forgery, and that there is absolutely no reason why any living being should attach the slightest importance to the charge which is inferred in the papers. We feel that it is only simple justice to them that we make this public statement and put an end to that current of whispering which is bound to result when such things exist, and put an end to the effort to peddle this kind of forgeries around in America. The whole business is on a par with the group of Mexican documents which was exposed so thoroughly last year .

Since we started the investigation still another forgery has come to our attention which was discovered in Mexico, sent to Washington, and was destroyed here by the officials who received it because they thought it was not worth calling anybody's attention to, and that it was a part of this same Mexican forgery factory. It was a pretended receipt signed by Senator BORAH for $100,000 from the Mexican Government.

The whole matter would be amusing if it did not trifle with the reputations of distinguished Americans. It would be too ridiculous for answer were it not dealing with reputations that it is to the interest of all America to hold above suspicion. The product of the forgers, both in Paris and in Mexico, is being offered steadily to our representatives abroad and to the representatives of foreign governments.

The Mexican Government itself was not long ago victimized by being induced to purchase a lot of forged pretended American documents tending to show that our Government had taken a lot of hostile steps with reference to Mexico, all of them sheer inventions and proven to be so. The only way to put an end to the traffic is to make these things public the moment they are discovered, and that your committee has endeavored to do in this case.

We were so sure of the falsity of the papers that we did not believe they were even worth asking these Senators to answer.

That assurance on our part was increased by the total absence of results secured by this long and painstaking investigation. But nevertheless, at their own initiative, they asked us to call them; they asked us to administer the oath to them. That was done at our meeting yesterday, and they have each of them most meticulously and thoroughly denied having any relation whatsoever or any correspondence with any official of the soviet or having received any money at any time for any purpose from Mr. Dudley Field Malone, or having ever been offered or suggested that any money should have been received. They did that of their own initiative, not because our committee felt that there was enough substance in these things even to ask them for the denial. Now, Mr. President, I send the report to the desk.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that I think he should also state in that connection that Mr. Dudley Field Malone testified that he never received any fund and never executed any receipt for the purposes stated in the alleged receipt presented to the committee.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is true. When Mr. Malone was on the stand about a year ago we showed him this receipt allegedly signed by him and asked him whether it was his signature. He replied that it looked very much like his signature, but that he had never signed any such paper. I do not remember his testimony in detail, but in substance it was that he had not seen these Senators on this or any other business and that he had not at any time or for any purpose paid them anything. His denial was quite comprehensive.

Now, Mr. President, I send to the desk this report which is slightly over two pages long, with the request that it may be read. Before it is read, however, I call attention to the fact that it is a unanimous report, signed by every member of the special committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, pending the reading of the report in which I and all of the members of the committee concur, I desire to make a brief statement.

It is both astonishing and alarming to note that forging and uttering alleged public documents has in some countries become a business profitable to many crooks. Sometimes these papers are of a nature, if published and accepted as genuine, to disturb the peace of nations. In other instances they are intended to involve the integrity and good faith of men well known in public life. Such damnable products of villainy have no commercial value unless they are made to appear highly sensational.

A Senator may readily comprehend the fact that forged instruments affecting prominent men or public questions will occasionally appear; but it is difficult for anyone, situated as Senators usually are, to realize that in some foreign capitals confidence men, men devoid of both patriotism and personal honor, will gain the confidence of diplomatic agents, representatives of newspapers, and others by pretending to have discovered and to possess mysterious and important papers, the significance of which is usually to becloud wholesome and well-justified confidence in public men with suspicion of treachery and dishonesty.

The Mexican documents recently investigated by this committee, and finally admitted to be forgeries, constitute an illustration of the sometime profitableness of a nefarious trade in spurious documents.

The report of the special committee to investigate charges that certain Senators had improperly received moneys, just submitted to the Senate by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], recites a shocking and disgusting story, which one may trust shall never be repeated.

A former employee, it is alleged, of the Russian Embassy in Paris produces copies of alleged instruments which on their face imply dishonest and disloyal conduct on the part of Senator BORAH and Senator NORRIS. No Member of this body stands above either of these Senators in his reputation as a private citizen and as a public officer. Both Senator NORRIS and Senator BORAH throughout their long periods of service in the Senate have earned and deservedly enjoyed the full confidence and respect of their fellow Senators. It is regrettable that either should be embarrassed by the publicity resulting from this report and the discussion of it. The committee and both Senator BORAH and Senator NORRIS feel that the proper course to pursue is to bring all the facts before the public, in full confidence that no honest person will censure in any degree the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Nebraska, for the simple reason that the documents referred to are forgeries and the pretended transactions to which they relate never occurred.

Let me make clear to all who hear me that there is not a scintilla of proof tending to establish improper conduct on the part of either of these Senators. The incident illustrates the truth that no man prominent in public life is immune from those cowardly assaults which have always been prompted by cupidity or malice. The important thing is that everything possible should be done to prevent the recurrence of such incidents as that now under discussion. The governments necessarily indirectly concerned should be prompted to ascertain the identity of the individuals participating in the conspiracy against peace and the reputations of honorable gentlemen while we extend our hand in full confidence and sympathy to the Senators whose names have been improperly and unjustly mentioned in connection with alleged treasonable acts. We ought here to sound a note of warning to sensational crooks that the filth and stench which they habitually seek to peddle can not find a market anywhere among honest, fair-minded men, and that if such crooks are found within the jurisdiction of this Government penalties appropriate to their crimes will be relentlessly imposed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I reecho what has been so well said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and express myself in full agreement with what has been said by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]?

It was unnecessary for either the chairman of the special committee or any member of the committee to investigate, in order to know its falsity, any charge of misconduct against either Senator BORAH or Senator NORRIS. To me, sir, it is with a distinct feeling of personal humiliation that we should even be required under the rules and the necessities and the exigencies of this case to make a report upon it at all. I require, those who were associated with me upon the special committee require, and, thank heaven, this Nation requires, no proof of the integrity or the character of the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Nebraska.

We recognize, of course, what a delicate thing is a man's reputation, particularly that of a man in public life. It is worse than a sin, it is a crime, when that reputation has been unblemished for a lifetime and every man understands and every man knows it, that there should even be a breath on any occasion whereby that reputation should be sought either to be destroyed or tainted or affected in any degree; worse still, sir, when the opportunity may be afforded malice or rancor or hostility or enmity to say aught against men such as these because of groundless and outrageous and lying charges such as may have been predicated upon the documents which have been before us.

I do not acquit the Senators of wrong, because I know they are incapable of wrong. I speak from a heart filled with affection for those two Senators, and I say to them that I feel with them that the least that could be done is that which we do to-day, when we stand here, as every Member of this body will stand here, not testifying, sir, because testimony is unnecessary, but to pay to them the full meed of admiration, respect, and love which their constituencies have for them and which they have so richly earned in a lifetime of devotion to the public interest.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, as a member of the special committee, I should like to add just a brief word to what has been so well said by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with respect to this matter.

It almost suffices for my purpose to recall again, as I recalled in an earlier stage of this matter, an observation made by Thomas Jefferson on one occasion when, as the result of one of the basest conspiracies in American history, the honor of Edmund Randolph, when Secretary of State, was impeached. After reading Randolph's vindication of himself, Mr. Jefferson said, as I remember his words, "Anyone who reads this vindication will acquit Edmund Randolph of all reproach;" and then he added, "Those who knew him had acquitted him already."

So I say that anyone who has had the privilege of knowing, as I have for six years, these two distinguished and highly respected Members of the Senate, Mr. BORAH and Mr. NORRIS, might well have said before a line of testimony had been taken down by our committee that their acquittal could safely be pronounced without any hearing.

Of course, it is impossible, in speaking of one's fellow Senators, to indulge in the language of invidious discrimination, but I think that I voice the feelings of all the Members of this body when I say that there are no two Members of it who are deemed by their associates to be more scrupulously, irreproachably honorable in all their motives and conduct in every respect than the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. And the unanimous report of our committee is but another proof that this reputation is unassailable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the report.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the report (No. 52, pt. 2), which is as follows:

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Special Committee to Investigate Propaganda or Money Alleged to Have Been Used by Foreign Governments to Influence United States Senators, submitted the following final report (pursuant to S. Res. 7):

"The special committee created by Senate Resolution 7 to investigate alleged payments to United States Senators by representatives of foreign governments makes this final report of its investigation and asks that the committee be discharged.

"Our first report, filed January 11, 1928, contained our definite conclusions upon the falsity and spurious character of the documents published in the Hearst newspapers and purporting to show corruption on the part of certain United States Senators. Those 'documents' were shown to be crude forgeries.

"The committee did not ask to be discharged at the time of filing its first report, because from other sources other 'documents' had been delivered or described to the committee which, however improbable we might think them, could not be dismissed without investigation. These documents are—

"1. Eight photographs of letters or receipts purporting to show that Senators BORAH and NORRIS had received $100,000 each from the Soviet ambassador in Paris, either directly or through the interposition of Dudley Field Malone, an American lawyer who maintains an office in Paris.

"2. Two typewritten documents, pretended to be statements of the substance of an order for the payment of money from Soviet accounts in Paris to Senator NORRIS, and the substance of a letter pretended to have been written by Senator BORAH in September or October, 1927, to the Soviet ambassador in Paris.

"3. A receipt, pretended to have been signed by Senator BORAH, for the payment to him of a large sum of money by the Mexican Government. This paper appears to have been sent by American Ambassador Sheffield from Mexico to Undersecretary Olds of the American State Department. So little regard was there given to it that it was destroyed without being submitted to our committee or to the Senate, but it has been described to us.

"Photographs of the documents in groups 1 and 2 are included in the printed report of our hearing of January 8, 1929.

"This committee has exhausted every effort both in America and Europe to discover corroboration of the charges carried by these documents. We can find no such corroboration; we can find no clue to any facts that would tend to show that any such transactions ever occurred. The originals of the documents of group 1 have been offered to us by a person in Europe at a price of about $50,000, but the person offering them states that he has no evidence to show their genuineness and can suggest no such evidence. He delivered to us the documents of group 2 as 'corroboration,' but states that he can not find the originals of such documents.

"Senator BORAH and Senator NORRIS have voluntarily come before the committee, have asked to be sworn, and have denied very emphatically the charges carried by these documents. Specifically they deny any dealings of any sort with any Soviet official; they deny the receipt of any money from Soviet sources, either through Malone or any other person; and they deny that any such payments have ever been offered or suggested by any person.

"The committee is unanimous in the firm belief that each group of documents is a fraud, that the pretended signature of Senator BORAH on Exhibit D is a forgery, and that the documents purporting to show the payment of money to these Senators were concocted either for the purpose of sale or for the purpose of covering up the diversion of money to other uses.

"The committee feels that these documents are so clearly trumped up and fraudulent as not to have required an explanation or denial by either of the Senators named therein, but in order to prevent any further efforts to peddle these forgeries and to prevent any whispered circulation of their purport, the committee has decided to make these matters public.

"DAVID A. REED.
"JOS. T. ROBINSON.
"HIRAM W. JOHNSON.
"W. L. JONES.
"WM. CABELL BRUCE."

During the reading of the report,

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, is that word "appears" or "purports"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The word is "appears."

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am going to suggest to the committee the wisdom of changing the word "appears" to "purports" or "pretends."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask that the clerk may read the entire sentence. I do not know what word the Senator is talking about.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will reread the sentence referred to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

3. A receipt pretended to have been signed by Senator BORAH for the payment to him of a large sum of money by the Mexican Government. This paper appears to have been sent by American Ambassador Sheffield from Mexico to Undersecretary Olds, of the American State Department.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator offers no criticism of that word?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I see no objection to the language as employed there.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no question but that it was sent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. HEFLIN. The word "pretended" before that, I think, makes it clear.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

After the conclusion of the reading of the report,

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I move that the committee be discharged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the committee has not completed its work.

Mr. Hearst was involved in this scandal or slander against four Senators, myself included. If he has been reprimanded or criticized in any way by this committee, I am not aware of it. If any steps have been taken by the committee against him to punish him for this outrageous performance, I have never heard of that.

Avila, who sold to Mr. Hearst this purported testimony involving four Senators, has been to this Capitol, has testified, has departed, and is now I do not know where. If any effort has been made by the committee to prosecute and punish this man, I have not heard of it. It seems to me that this committee should indict Mr. Hearst for his part in this scandal and that the Senate ought to see that it is done. He ought to be condemned by this body for his part in this very scandalous performance against four United States Senators. This man Avila ought to be severely condemned, along with severe condemnation of Mr. Hearst.

This is a very serious matter, Senators. If public men can be singled out for doing their duty to their country and crooked interests can fall upon them and seek to destroy them because of their service to their country, and then get away without punishment, it is an inducement to others to try to do the same thing at some other time.

I think Senators feel generally—the country does, also—that this effort to destroy us grew out of the part that I took in preventing war with Mexico, the part the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] took, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], at a time when a good many of our daily papers were saying, "We are right on the edge of war with Mexico." We happened to be the four Senators who led in the fight against that proposed war. As a reward for our service to our country we were drawn into an international scandal, and Mr. Hearst's newspapers published those scandalous charges broadcast.

It seems to me that the Senate ought to require this committee to amend its report and condemn Mr. Hearst for his part in this very scandalous, outrageous, and criminal thing, and also this Mexican who came over here and is perhaps still in our country, who received money from Mr. Hearst for his part in this villainous and criminal performance.

I do not think the committee has discharged its duty. I felt at the time that the committee made its partial report it had been derelict in its duty in failing to attack Mr. Hearst. I do not know exactly why Hearst has not been indicted, and severely indicted, in this report by the committee. It ought to be done. There ought not to be any favorites played by anybody.

I make that suggestion, Mr. President. I, for one, feel that Mr. Hearst ought to be condemned, and that Avila ought to be condemned; and if it is possible for the committee to devise ways and means to prosecute these people, that ought to be done. I am opposed to accepting the final report as it now stands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I can well understand and fully appreciate the indignation which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] feels and expresses. At the same time, I think it appropriate to say that the committee was appointed to make an inquiry into an alleged state of facts. As we view it, it is not incumbent upon the committee to indict anyone. We found the facts and reported them to the Senate; and I, upon my personal responsibility, took occasion to express in the Senate my personal views as to the effect of those facts in relation to the conduct of those responsible for the publication of forged documents without full inquiry as to their genuineness before publishing them. Senators here will recall, perhaps—some of them, at least—that occasion; and they may recall the manner in which the acts just mentioned were characterized.

In the view of the committee, as I understand it, under the resolution instructing the committee, we have performed our full duty. It is, of course, competent for the Senate to take any action upon the matter that is deemed proper. The committee feel, I think, that we have gone into the facts fully and reported them completely.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I can perfectly understand, of course, the tenderness that the Senator from Alabama feels with respect to anything that affects his honor; and I have taken occasion more than once to say that I never saw the Senator from Alabama show to more advantage than when he came before our committee in a perfectly simple, dignified, and manly way and repelled the base charge that had been made against him.

At the same time, it seems to me that if this committee is not to be discharged, a somewhat better reason should be assigned than those which have been assigned by the Senator from Alabama. I am perfectly free to say that, in my individual judgment, at any rate, Mr. Hearst is not justly to be censured for obtaining those documents, or even obtaining them in the way that he did—that is to say, by the purchase of them.

If my conduct as a Senator had been above reproach in every respect, and there was reason to believe that among the archives of the Government of Mexico was a document gravely, profoundly affecting my moral standing as a Senator and as a man, I should be thankful to Mr. Hearst or to any other enterprising newspaper proprietor who brought out that fact and gave me an opportunity, before death had closed my eyelids forever, to allege that the document was a spurious one.

Those documents which Mr. Hearst secured may well not have come to light for years after the then Members of the Senate, including the Senator from Alabama, had passed from the scene of human interests and events. Then there would have been nobody to produce the most conclusive evidence that could be rendered under the circumstances of innocence.

If Mr. Hearst had with any marked degree of precipitation or rashness proceeded to unearth the documents, he might, of course, justly have subjected himself to criticism. But it seems to me that he did all that any prudent newspaper proprietor could be reasonably expected to do under the circumstances which surround the management of a great newspaper to ascertain whether the documents were or were not forgeries.

Therefore it seems to me that not only is there no ground for supposing that Mr. Hearst should be indicted, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, but that there is no substantial ground for saying that he has done anything which it is not the right, and in a sense the high duty, of the owner of a great newspaper in this country to-day to do, when there is reason to believe that just grounds exist to suspect the integrity of a Member of the United States Senate, or, in other words, one of the very highest officials of the Federal Government. So I trust that my friend the Senator from Alabama may be induced to take just a little different view of this matter from what he has expressed, and feel that it is not essential to his reputation for personal integrity and honorable conduct, which is irreproachable, that any further step be taken by this committee with reference to such of the Hearst documents as bore upon him.

I have my doubt, Mr. President—and I hope my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania will listen to me as I express the doubt—whether just at this time this committee should be discharged. It is true that we have rendered our report, but the testimony on which we have acted has not yet been placed before the Senate or even printed. It may be that when that testimony is perused by some Member of this body, or by somebody outside of this body, the suggestion may be made that there is still some remaining subject that we might take up for investigation. So I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the wise course under the circumstances would be to let the matter remain in abeyance for some little time, until the evidence assembled by our committee has been printed and has been presented to the Senate, and there has been an opportunity on the part of both the Members of the Senate and the members of the press, or anybody else, to read that evidence, and question, if you please—though I do not think any such question could be raised—the completeness of our work, the fullness of the evidence elicited by us, or anything else connected with our investigation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. As I said, it might occur to some Member of the Senate that there was just some little thing or other—I do not think there could be more than that—that might be cleared up by further action on the part of our committee. So I believe that it is only fair to the Senator from Nebraska and to the Senator from Idaho, to the members of our committee, and, above all, to the general American public, that our committee should not be discharged just at this time.

I feel pretty confident that that would be the idea of the Senator from Nebraska and of the Senator from Idaho, because one of the things that has been most noteworthy in connection with this entire investigation has been the prompt and earnest manner in which those two gentlemen have insisted upon the investigation conducted by the committee being pushed to the most searching lengths possible.

Mr. FESS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator a few minutes ago wanted to interrupt me. Now he wants to make a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know just what it is he wants, to secure from me the privilege of interruption or to impeach my right to be saying what I am saying.

Mr. FESS. My interruption was to make a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. It seems to me the Senator might not have shown so much solicitude as to whether I gave my assent or not, if that was his object.

Mr. FESS. I wanted to inquire whether under the rules of the Senate, when a committee has been appointed for a specific purpose and a report has been made upon that matter, that does not discharge the committee without further action of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is a final report, under the precedents of the Senate, the committee would be discharged.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is the business of the Senate to say whether or not it will accept the report and is willing to have the committee discharged. If that were not true, a committee could make a partial investigation and come in with a partial report and ask to be discharged. It certainly is the business of the Senate, under the rules of the Senate, to say whether the Senate will accept a report as filed.

Mr. BRUCE and Mr. REED of Pennsylvania addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to have a ruling on that.

Mr. BRUCE. I think I still have the floor——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. But I am so beset on every side I am beginning to doubt it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BRUCE. I simply want to add that it does seem to me that it would be a most anomalous thing to discharge a committee from the further performance of its duties when the testimony on which its report to the Senate is based has not been brought to the attention of the Senate. It seems to me it would be premature at this time for the Senate to discharge our committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not only that——

Mr. BRUCE. There is an air of precipitation——

Mr. HEFLIN. In connection with what the Senator said, the committee is asking to be discharged when the testimony is not here, as the Senator from Maryland suggests. Why not wait until that is printed, so that we can all see it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, my motion, whether I expressed it clearly or not, was a motion to adopt the report and discharge the committee. The discharge of the committee, I presume, would necessarily follow from the adoption of a final report.

Mr. BRUCE. It seems to me——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I decline to yield to the Senator from Maryland, Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. There can be no doubt, from the tone of the Senator's voice, that he declines.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. When the Senator would not even acknowledge my request to him to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I did yield. I took my seat. In point of fact, I had not completed my observations; but out of consideration for the Senator from Pennsylvania I took my seat. That is the most decisive evidence of yielding that a Senator can afford.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, we state in our report the substance of the hearings taken before the committee; and state the fact, which was that each of these Senators came before the committee and made under oath a comprehensive denial. That is all the Senators will find in the printed testimony that was taken.

Mr. President, it is not fair that this committee should remain in existence one moment longer, as if it were to be a depository of complaints or suspicions against these Senators or any others. We have stated our unqualified and unanimous conclusion that these documents are forgeries and fakes, and for the committee to remain in existence any longer would indicate that we have a doubt about it, which in fact we have not.

The committee has found the facts, it has made a final report on every particle of charges that has come to its attention, and it would be the height of injustice against all of these Senators—the Senator from Alabama, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the other two Senators—if we should continue as a committee in existence for one moment longer.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not objecting to the part of the report which exonerates the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Nebraska. All Senators know that they are entirely innocent of any wrongdoing and that all of the false testimony that has been accumulated against them is the work of crooks and criminals. There is no doubt about that. The country believes that they have been imposed upon, and that all of us have been imposed upon, by crooks and criminals.

I objected to the partial report that was made by the committee before when it asked for further time. Now it comes with its final report—and listen to a part of its partial report of a few months ago.

Speaking of Mr. Hearst, the committee said:

> Mr. Hearst laid before the committee 71 documents, some, but not all, of which had been published in his newspapers. He testified that he had no evidence and knew of none which would tend to show that any Senator had received any such payment, and he testified that he personally did not believe that any Senator had received any. He admitted that no Senator mentioned in the documents had been given any opportunity to see the documents before publication or to deny the implied accusations contained in them.

Senators, what will it take to arouse the Senate to a sense of its duty? Here we have charges against United States Senators who were seeking to prevent war between the United States and Mexico, seeking to save the lives of thousands of American boys, and who were accused by the interests that want to involve us in war with Mexico of having an ulterior motive, that we were being paid for the services we had rendered. They brought this Mexican here and to New York; and he had dealings with Mr. Hearst's agent and was paid money, and Mr. Hearst admitted it. Then Mr. Hearst himself came and testified before the committee; and the committee states that he stated that he did not give a single one of us an opportunity to be heard or to see the stuff that he was publishing against us which sought to destroy us at the bar of public opinion for what we had done in the Senate from a sense of patriotic duty.

I submit, when the committee said that Mr. Hearst admitted that he did not let us see the false and forged papers before they were published in his papers, that he did not permit us to see the scandalous charges that he was broadcasting in his papers throughout the country, and that he confessed that he did not believe a word that was in them and that he thought these men were innocent, why did not the committee then say, "We condemn Mr. Hearst for his part in this matter. He deserves the condemnation and the scorn of the American people for what he has done toward these four United States Senators."

Why did not the committee do that? Is the committee afraid to attack Mr. Hearst because of his chain of newspapers? If we have reached the time in this body when we will not attack anybody who assails the honor and integrity of a United States Senator, we are coming to the point where some need to be weeded out of this body and somebody else sent here who will stand up and fight for the honor and integrity of the United States Senate. I think the committee ought to amend its report before this body finally discharges it and let it say: "In conclusion the committee desires to express its condemnation of Mr. Hearst for his part in this scandalous performance. We think that he deserves to be censured, that he deserves the condemnation of the Senate and of the American people."

Why should not that be done? Why is not the committee willing to take the report back and amend it so as to include that statement? They have permitted a man to attack four Senators and he goes out unscathed with not one word of criticism against him in the report. He is not censured anywhere in this final report.

I think that ought to be done, and I ask that the report be referred back to the committee for further consideration or that the report at least be postponed until the testimony connected with it can be printed and put upon the desk of Senators. I ask unanimous consent that it may be withheld until the testimony can be printed and until we can have more time to look into the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. President; I must object. I think, in fairness to the Senators who have been named, the Senate ought to accept the report and discharge the committee now.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the committee itself is not in agreement as to whether it should be discharged——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The report is unanimous and the report asks that the committee be discharged.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. One of the members of the committee, if I can understand words correctly, has expressed a wish that the committee should not be discharged.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. We should bear in mind the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania himself gave the reason why only the typewritten report was offered at the present time, and it was because the testimony has not yet been printed. That was the reason given by the Senator himself.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In view of this disagreement and the fact that the debate is likely to be prolonged, and the further fact that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] and myself have been waiting for some time this afternoon to address the Senate upon the question of the Kellogg peace pact, I shall insist upon our right to go forward unless the matter can be acted upon by yielding the floor temporarily.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this is a matter of highest privilege which has been taken up by unanimous consent of the Senate. I do not think that it requires the consent of any Senator to act on it. But under all the circumstances perhaps it will be wiser to allow my motion to go over until the testimony has been printed. I am anxious that when the Senate acts on the matter its action shall be absolutely unanimous so that no doubt may remain in anyone's mind of the judgment which has been passed on these unworthy charges.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should hope if we could be unanimous on any subject it would be on this subject.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Therefore I withdraw my objection and agree that the motion to adopt the report and discharge the committee may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations December 19, 1928.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I desire to speak very briefly upon the subject under discussion, namely, the ratification of the Kellogg peace pact, and also to submit some observations with respect to the cruiser bill.

Mr. President, as I have listened to the debate and read the correspondence and the discussions with respect to this treaty in the various countries concerned, I have been profoundly impressed with the meager consideration given to the problem of peace and the means of promoting and securing it. The outstanding fact is that the entire discussion has been devoted to the consideration of the ways and means by which war can be waged by the several countries without violating this peace pact and escape its moral consequences.

The statesmen of nearly all these nations, including some of our own, have been vying with each other to read into this treaty ways and means of resorting to war. It is a sad commentary upon the extent to which many statesmen are removed from the popular pulse of the war-stricken peoples of the world and the intense and prayerful longings of the human family for immediate and irrevocable measures for the establishment of world peace.

During the time this treaty has been under consideration, namely, since June, 1927, not one less war machine or implement of war has been produced. On the contrary, more money has been appropriated and larger militaristic programs elaborated during this period than in any other period since the World War. The Republic of France is to-day maintaining a larger armed force, with Germany disarmed, than it did in 1914 when Germany was armed. With Austria and Hungary disarmed by reason of the peace treaties of 1919–1921, the succession States, namely, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Yugoslavia, maintain to-day larger armies than was maintained by the former Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Since the Washington treaty of 1922, excluding vessels to be completed under the treaty, Great Britain has laid down and "appropriated for" for naval expansion 288,684 tons—74 vessels. Japan has laid down and appropriated for in the same period 125 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 361,452 tons. France with 119 and Italy with 83 new vessels, particularly submarines and destroyers, have closely followed the example of Great Britain and Japan. All have far exceeded the efforts of the United States in both total tonnage and in new naval vessels. During this period the United States has alone among the powers of the world refused to increase her military armament. Exclusive of 6 small river gunboats for use in China we have laid down only 11 new naval vessels with a total tonnage of 88,200.

Let me recapitulate: Since the Washington reduction of naval armaments treaty of 1922, excluding vessels permitted to be completed under that treaty, the great powers of the world have laid down and "appropriated for" for naval expansion, as follows: Japan, 125 vessels; Great Britain, 74; France, 119; Italy, 82; and the United States, exclusive of the small river gunboats, 11.

No statement of naval defenses, however, is comprehensive without considering merchant ships, for they are, in fact, an important part of a nation's navy. The World War demonstrated the great importance of large and modern merchant vessels in connection with naval operations. From the viewpoint of merchant vessels being an essential element of naval strength the United States' record displays a lamentable weakness. During the period from 1922 to 1927, covering ships of transoceanic service tonnage, the United States has been outbuilt by Great Britain 50 to 1, Germany 10 to 1, France 5 to 1, Italy almost 5 to 1, and Japan more than 4 to 1. This evidence of naval and merchant vessel expansion shows no aggressive attitude on the part of America, an attitude in sharp contrast to that of the other powers.

To such an extent has the mad race of armament proceeded since the World War that for several years following the conclusion of peace, France stipulated in her financial loans to the little entente states that large portions, from 20 per cent up, should be used for buying armaments from French industries. In one instance the whole loan was granted for the purpose of armament. Other loans were granted for the building of strategic railroads which had no productive purpose.

In the face of this record and in view of America's long delay in strengthening her greatly limited military equipment because of her desire to lessen the tax burden of her people and show an example of her sincere desire to bring about world peace and disarmament, it is not to be wondered at that our Government finds itself to-day so far behind the other great powers in naval establishments that it is reluctantly forced to undertake the building of new cruisers to maintain the semblance of an efficient Navy that is, in part at least, comparable with the navies of the other great powers which have refused to join with her in a further limitation of naval armament.

If any world power does not realize that the great majority are indignant at the apparent necessity of now taxing the people of the United States vast sums of money for the building of new cruisers, they do not know the public sentiment of America. It is with no enthusiasm that millions of Americans who are in no sense pacifists now realize because such little progress has been made in international disarmament that their Government is compelled to increase its financial burdens, not upon the wealthy classes but upon the masses of our people who finally bear all tax burdens, for national insurance in a "self-defense" war-conniving world.

In the last analysis the principal difference between the sentiments of so-called pacifists and other Americans, except the jingoes, is that the former, notwithstanding the attitude of the other nations toward disarmament, oppose any appropriation for additional armament in the hope of leading others to follow; the latter are reluctantly convinced that for the present at least the protection of the lives and property of our people demands the maintenance of our present military establishments—scarcely adequate under present world conditions for a nation preferring peace to aggression.

As an example of the subtle methods resorted to by the signatories of this peace pact to escape the moral responsibility of the treaty and justify future wars, let us quote from the correspondence of the Czechoslovakian Government preceding the signature of the pact.

I read in the Czechoslovak note of July 20, 1928, in paragraph (2) the following statement:

> It is clear that there is nothing in this treaty in opposition either to the provisions of the covenant of the League of Nations, or to those of the Locarno treaties or the neutrality treaties, or, in general, to the obligations contained in existing treaties which the Czechoslovak Republic has hitherto made.

It seems to me that this is a very broad statement, and I was interested to look at some of those treaties which Czechoslovakia has concluded. Among others I found, for instance, a treaty between Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia on August 14, 1920; another between Czechoslovakia and Rumania on April 23, 1921. I also found that article 2 of these treaties provides for military conventions. The treaties have been published by the League of Nations, but I was unable to find anywhere the military conventions. On the other hand, I see that these military conventions must exist somewhere, because in the renewal of these treaties—also published by the league—there are also provisions for the renewal of these military conventions. Does anyone seriously claim that military conventions are, as a rule, concluded for the purpose of renouncing war as an instrument of national policy. I am certain that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will agree that secret military conventions should not be excluded from the operation of this peace pact, or, in fact, from any international treaty which genuinely seeks to promote world peace. This statement and many similar statements set forth in the correspondence by various governments shows that by renouncing war they have sought to reserve means by which to resort to war.

I shall vote for the ratification of this treaty not because I am entirely certain that it is a real, genuine movement that will materially advance the ending of war and the promotion of peace of the world but because if the United States fail to ratify it now in view of their participation in the international negotiations that have brought it into being, would be misunderstood. It would place the United States, regardless of her sincere and profound desire and purpose to bring about peace in the world, in the position of an obstructionist to such a movement. The pact itself is nothing more than a statement of principle. We believe in the principle; why not say so? To do otherwise would justify the suspicion that perhaps after all we do not. Mankind, I believe, will still entertain the hope that, notwithstanding the efforts of the nations who have signified their approval of this treaty to reserve further for themselves various loopholes which would justify future wars and their studious efforts through their correspondence to provide excuses for future wars, the treaty may be another link in the chain now being forged by the public opinion of the world to bind the war spirit and to make resort to war less liable.

I feel very strongly, as I believe most Americans do, that we ought to keep free from obligations to support European quarrels or political alliances; but this should not prevent us from assuming moral obligations to help rather than hinder all movements to remove provocation to conflicts of arms. This is exactly what this pact does. Our very strength imposes this duty upon us. It sets up no machinery to enforce it. Its great purpose is to organize the moral influences of the world in behalf of adjustment of difficulties without conflict.

No one claims that any paper treaty can absolutely guard against war; but law can help to that desired end. This document is but a scrap of paper unless there is behind it the good faith of the rulers and people of the respective nations. Frankly, the haste and zeal with which they have sought to reserve to themselves excuses for future wars is disappointing to those who realize that without good faith the whole business is a gigantic piece of hypocrisy, temporarily narcotizing innocent and serious-minded lovers of peace.

As I see it, only one thing can put an end to warfare. It is not diplomacy nor disarmament. The people of the world must insist that the spirit of warfare be ruled out of their chanceries. What an indictment of democratic political leadership it is to realize that one of the main sources of strength and growth of the Bolshevism movement in Europe has been its advocacy of peace and its programs of disarmament!

The masses of human beings everywhere must realize who are responsible for war and center their attention upon remedies at the fountain source. Who are the war makers? The man in the street does not want war. It is he who must meet its terrible drafts of life and health; of man power and woman power and national resources; of taxes and waste and destruction; of corruption and violence and oppression.

The average citizen does not cherish the ideas that provoke war, hate and hyprocrisy, fear and suspicion, industrial or commercial selfishness, deceitful propaganda, cunning and circumvention, espionage and treachery. He is guiltless of the common cause of war—ambition, envy, and national rivalry.

He knows too well what war has always meant for him and his children. He may be inarticulate, but he is persuaded of the vast and incurable immorality of war, and he hails with joy every argument or plan that tends to abolish it or diminish its menace. It is this common understanding which is now becoming articulate and is making outlawry of war the one sentiment that is paramount to the spirit of nationalism.

It is in the higher circles of life and of government, in the world of statesmanship, so-called, that wars originate. Statesmen and predatory forces are responsible for war.

For these men justice and charity, the great preventatives of war or its best remedies, are too often unfamiliar or impossible terms. Their philosophy of life is purely secular, usually a compound of materialism, of greed, of tangible advantage and cynical mistrust of human nature.

What the plain man and woman the world over want and will demand, once their power is internationally coordinated, from statesmen is good faith—that is, honesty of purpose and expression—and from jingoes dispossession of control of the agencies of government.

But there can be no good faith among men without an habitual sense of justice and charity; of justice because no difficulty or wrong is ever settled until it is settled rightly; of charity, because human nature is fallible, and therefore we ought to observe the golden rule, and deal with our neighbor as we want him to deal with us.

On these solid outlines of justice and charity and on them alone can public order, international law, and civilization rest secure. Unless they are worked, seriously and practically, into the education of all modern youth in every part of the world, I see no hope for a universal and lasting peace.

And their general recognition and acceptance, somehow, are indispensable, if we seriously hope to rid ourselves of the immemorial plague of war.

It may be said that this is religious education, but no one can say that it is sectarian, since it must appeal to all earnest lovers of peace, and has the approval of all men and women for whom the Old Testament and the New are yet law and light and hope. It is a part of that natural religion to which every heart can be led to pay homage.

I repeat, to me it seems certain that the criminal and immoral character of most war, and its unspeakable horrors, can never through legal enactment alone, be efficiently set forth for all mankind. It is in the light of the noble moral forces of justice and charity to which, in the long run, we owe all that is permanent in our civilization, that world peace will be consummated.

Mr. President, no man can here and now assess the benefits which may in years to come flow from this pact. They may be many, they may be few. It seems to me that it is much too soon to hail it as a great triumph or to brand it as an empty gesture. Time alone will determine that. It is a forward step toward world peace, but whether a large step or a tiny step the future will disclose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a few moments to state my position upon this treaty.

Mr. President, I expect to vote in favor of ratifying the so-called Kellogg peace proposal.

Since I have been in the Senate I have supported the Bryan peace proposals; I have supported the League of Nations without reservations; I have supported our entrance into the World Court; and, with this record, I feel that I should support this pact, however weak and impotent it may be or seem. Some good might possibly come from it. It might deter some nation from making war. It might be the means of aiding in the peaceful solution of some international disagreements, and I want to take no chances. At least it can do no great harm.

Again, our ratifying the pact may draw our country to look more favorably upon the League of Nations or upon our entrance into the World Court, and for these reasons I am going to vote for the treaty.

It is true, I am quite convinced that some of those who are now urging this pact would not do so if they thought its adoption would bring us any nearer into the league or any nearer into the World Court, but I am hoping that they are mistaken. I believe they are for this reason: While it is true that substantially all of the leading nations who are now members of the league and of the World Court have signed this treaty on condition that it does not interfere with their membership in those organizations, when we ratify the treaty in substance we tacitly assert that our associates are members of those organizations, and that being members of those organizations they are at least desirous of peace. Under these circumstances I do not see how the United States in the event of a controversy with another power which is a member of the League of Nations can very well refuse to settle the difficulty peaceably by submitting it to the tribunals set up by the league or by submitting it to the Permanent Court of International Justice if the other party to the dispute asks for this means of settlement. Therefore I am persuaded that our ratification of this document will bring us in closer connection with the league and with the World Court and their instrumentalities of settling disputes, and, believing in the efficacy of those instrumentalities to bring about peaceful solutions of international difficulties, I think I ought to cast my vote in favor of the pact, and I shall do so.

Another reason, Mr. President, why I am going to vote for the ratification of the pact is because while under the conditions set out by the various powers the treaty may be substantially meaningless, to vote against it might make my position as to war misunderstood. I think all international disputes ought to be settled by peaceful means, and, even though the value of this treaty with the conditions imposed seems to be remote, I want to take even a remote chance to prevent war.

Again, Mr. President, the treaty having been negotiated, the position of our country might be misunderstood by our neighbors if we should not ratify it, although it is true that whatever real value the ratification of the treaty may have has been greatly lessened or even dissipated by the conditions imposed by the various Governments in ratifying it.

For instance, take the case of Great Britain. She retains the right to disregard the treaty entirely as to all questions affecting her colonies or interests in any part of the world, wherever situated.

Mr. Chamberlain states the matter plainly:

> His Majesty's Government have been at pains to make it clear in the past that interference with these regions can not be suffered. Their protection against attack is to the British Empire a measure of self-defense. It must be clearly understood that His Majesty's Government in Great Britain accept the new treaty upon the distinct understanding that it does not prejudice their freedom of action in this respect.

This exception is all embracing and it leaves Great Britain in exactly the same position she was before she signed the pact. She can spend any sum, pursue any course, build any forts or arsenals or navies, take any steps in reference to her colonies anywhere—and they cover the world. She also reserves full freedom of action in reference to any matter as to which she might be bound under the League of Nations covenant or under the treaty of Locarno. If, under those treaties, an offensive war should be called for, she would be at perfect liberty to enter into such warfare.

All the other great nations have to a more or less degree made similar conditions. As I understand the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, our country is the only one of the great nations that have been called upon to sign the treaty without reservations, limitations, or conditions.

I have read Secretary Kellogg's notes and speech, and apparently he has made a very definite and studied effort not to raise in any way the question of the Monroe doctrine. This, to my mind, is very unfortunate. Our signature to the pact ought to be on the condition that it is not in any way to affect our adherence to the Monroe doctrine. It ought not to affect in any way our protection of our dependencies. It ought not to affect in any way our self-defense. In other words, we ought to sign this pact on conditions similar to those which have been imposed by other nations which have signed it. Unless we do, instead of its being a multilateral treaty it will be a unilateral treaty binding only the United States. I shall cheerfully vote for a reservation by the Senate that it is understood that the Monroe doctrine is not to be interfered with.

In casting my vote in any event I want it distinctly understood that I reserve for myself, and as far as I can for my country, absolute freedom of action as to our own self-defense, freedom of action as to our dependencies, and our continued and absolute adherence to the Monroe doctrine.

It is admitted, Mr. President, that all these various letters of the various powers are substantially parts of the treaty, or, at least, that they constitute the various nations' interpretation of the treaty, of which all parties to the compact must take notice.

It is peculiar, therefore, Mr. President, that all the great nations except the United States alone have signed upon conditions. Thus Germany has inserted her conditions, Great Britain hers, Canada hers, Japan hers, Poland hers, and France hers. Italy of the great powers alone seems not to have yet made conditions. Whether she has signed the treaty or not I am not sure. I have no doubt that when she does sign it she will impose the same conditions as have been imposed by France, Great Britain, and Japan. Why is it, then, that the United States should be required to sign without conditions? It can not be pride of authorship, for as I read these letters it is admitted that the treaty was first drawn in substantially the same language by Monsieur Briand, of France. There can not be the fear of causing offense to our South American neighbors, because our South American neighbors are just as much interested in our Monroe doctrine as we are. Why, then, the studied effort to exclude all mention of the Monroe doctrine from any of the negotiations? There must be some motive behind it. Why should we ratify the treaty without having this motive expressed?

Everyone admits that there is no way of enforcing the treaty, and everyone admits that each nation shall be the judge of whether it has violated the treaty. If all the other nations affix conditions which will give them excuses for violating the treaty and America fixes no such conditions, then it is perfectly apparent that it is a treaty which virtually binds only America. I am greatly interested in binding America to keep the peace, but at the same time I want all the other nations signing the treaty bound in like manner as we are bound. Then if we can not bind them with us we should be bound in the same manner that they are bound.

Mr. President, I would to heaven that there should never be another war. It is a barbarous way of settling international disputes. We should leave no step untaken to secure the permanent peace of the world; but it will be of little avail if we bind ourselves never to go to war and fail to bind at least our warlike neighbors.

Our Government made a unilateral agreement in 1922 under the guise of a multilateral agreement. I speak of the disarmament pact, under which pact the United States dismantled the best part of its Navy, or sunk the best part of its Navy, while no other country did. It was a very unwise step, and as soon as that treaty expires by limitation it ought not to be renewed.

Everybody knows now that in the limitation of arms agreement we did not get what we bargained for. Everybody knows now that while the United States yielded her place of equality on the seas she got no reduction in the British naval armaments. She just sunk her own Navy and gave Great Britain until 1936 the continued undisputed mastery of the seas. The British people are our kinsmen and our friends, and I hope this relation of friendship will ever exist; but, Mr. President, if it does exist, as it ought to exist, it ought to exist on terms of national equality. It can only exist in that way upon terms of equality.

In my judgment the peace of the world can only be permanently secured by the United States and Great Britain each having a Navy equal in size, in armament, and in power, so that neither will be able to go to war with the other, with an agreement that each will keep the peace. Whenever this is brought about it will be easy for these two great English-speaking peoples not only to secure but to enforce the peace of the world. Whenever this is done it will be easy to secure a real limitation of armament. In my judgment it is the only way in which the permanent peace of the world can be secured.

Of course, it is all well enough to express ourselves as being in favor of peace, but we can not blind ourselves to the facts of history and to the frailties of human nature.

We all recall from history that after the Napoleonic wars ended in 1815 there were innumerable peace treaties. Everybody wanted to put an end to war forever. The most celebrated of these treaties was the Holy Alliance between the Emperor of Austria, the King of France, the King of Great Britain, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias.

I quote from one of these treaties, as follows:

> The intimate union established among the monarchs, who are joint parties to this system, by their own principles, no less than by the interests of their people, offers to Europe the most sacred pledge of its future tranquillity.
>
> The object of this union is as simple as it is great and salutary. It does not tend to any new political combination—to any change in the relations sanctioned by existing treaties. Calm and consistent in its proceedings, it has no other object than the maintenance of peace, and the guaranty of those transactions on which the peace was founded and consolidated.
>
> The sovereigns in forming this august union have regarded as its fundamental basis their invariable resolution never to depart, either among themselves or in their relations with other States, from the strictest observation of the principles of the right of nations; principles which, in their application to a state of permanent peace, can alone effectually guarantee the independence of each government and the stability of the general association.
>
> Faithful to these principles, the sovereigns will maintain them equally in those meetings at which they may be personally present, or in those which shall take place among their ministers; whether they be for purpose of discussing in common their own interests, or whether they shall relate to questions in which other governments shall formally claim their interference. The same spirit which will direct their councils, and reign in their diplomatic communications, will preside also at these meetings; and the repose of the world will be constantly their motive and their end.
>
> It is with these sentiments that the sovereigns have consummated the work to which they were called. They will not cease to labor for its confirmation and perfection. They solemnly acknowledge that their duties toward God and the people whom they govern make it peremptory on them to give to the world, as far as it is in their power, an example of justice, of concord, and of moderation; happy in the power of consecrating, from henceforth, all their efforts to protect the arts of peace, to increase the internal prosperity of their States, and to awaken those sentiments of religion and morality, whose influence has been too much enfeebled by the misfortune of the times.

This declaration, while a little more high-sounding and a little longer than the so-called Kellogg pact, nevertheless contains about the same sentiments, namely, that these nations were not going to resort to war. The Kellogg pact goes a little further, and states that only peaceful methods of settling international disputes will be used, and that war is renounced; but, after all, it is a declaration of sentiment just as the proposal of the Holy Alliance. That alliance did some good, though it was not long before the nations were at war again.

I am sincerely hopeful that the expression of sentiment contained in this pact will likewise do some good. At all events, the psychology of it is good. At all events, its expression of purpose is good. At all events, the intention of it is good. Evidently it has caught to a very large extent the attention of the public in this country, and, I hope, in all countries. In this way the treaty may have a good moral effect—a good psychological effect. Being an ardent advocate of peace, I sincerely hope that its effect will be all that is claimed for it by its friends.

Mr. President, I want to add just a word.

I read in this morning's Washington Post, in an article under the headline of Drive Against Cruiser Bill Seems to Help Passage, a statement given out by some unnamed person who quotes me as saying the following:

> Tennessee next.
>
> I called on Senator McKELLAR, and he said the pact didn't amount to anything. He said the only way you can have peace on earth is to have a navy bigger than England's. Can you believe me when I say it?

I just want to say, Mr. President, that, of course, I can not believe this unnamed person, whoever it may be, when he or she says it. There is not a word of truth in the statement. I made no such statement. I never made any statement concerning Great Britain and America and peace other than that which I have just made in the few remarks I have made. Whoever quoted me as making any such statement has quoted me wrongly. There is no ground whatsoever for the statement. If it is a lady who makes the statement, I will simply say that she is mistaken. If it is a gentleman who made the statement, he did it without having any right to make it.

I have said for many years that the best way to secure the peace of the world is for the two great English-speaking nations of the world—to wit, Great Britain and the United States—to agree that there will be peace, and then, to guarantee their agreement, to have their navies just exactly, as far as it is practicable, of the same size. That is the only statement I have made; and, of course, whoever attempted to quote me did so wrongly.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. I just wanted to be clear about the situation, and inquire whether the Senator's position was not very much like that of the distinguished Premier of Italy, when he said, "Why, we will just rush to sign any peace pact, but, mark you, we are going to arm to the teeth."

Mr. McKELLAR. My feeling is not exactly that. However, I think, being a man of common sense—and I hope I have common sense—we ought to deal with these pacts with great care. I notice in the literature that has been published in connection with this pact every other nation except the United States has announced its adherence to the pact upon conditions, and those conditions are printed, and are published throughout the world. Of course, we must take those statements for what they are worth, and as each of these nations has the right to construe its own advocacy of this pact, or the conditions each lays down in having signed the pact, then such statements are a part of the treaty. Whether they are in so many words or not, they are a part of the treaty.

What I can not understand is why, with all other nations having signed the pact conditionally, America alone is asked to sign it unconditionally. So far as I am concerned, I very much prefer that the Monroe doctrine be specially exempted from it, or that we should pass an independent resolution stating our adherence to the Monroe doctrine, whether or not we sign the pact with reservations. I am as strong for the Monroe doctrine as I have ever been, and I expect to so continue.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta on the western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 4616. An act to legalize the existing railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio.

RIGHTS OF NEUTRALS AND FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to submit a resolution and I want to offer a word of explanation. I shall not take more than three minutes. I ask to have the resolution read for the information of the Senate. I will not ask for action on it to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 294) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is respectfully requested to negotiate treaties with the principal nations for the protection of the rights of neutrals and freedom of the seas, embracing the doctrines set forth in article 12 of the treaty of 1785, negotiated by Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and John Adams, between Prussia and the United States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, in order that the resolution may be understood, I desire to read article 12 of the treaty referred to in the resolution. It is as follows:

ARTICLE XII

If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining neuter with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted. On the contrary, in that case, as in full peace, the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports and on the coasts of the belligerent parties, free vessels making free goods, insomuch that all things shall be adjudged free which shall be on board any vessel belonging to the neutral party, although such things belong to an enemy of the other; and the same freedom shall be extended to persons who shall be on board a free vessel, although they should be enemies to the other party, unless they be soldiers in actual service of such enemy. (From treaty of amity and commerce concluded September 10, 1785; ratified by the Congress May 17, 1786; ratifications exchanged October, 1786.)

Mr. President, I am not offering this as any reservation or resolution in connection with the pending treaty, or as in any manner connected with it. I intend to address the Senate touching this resolution at the appropriate time and to ask for action upon it. Let it be distinctly understood that it has nothing to do with the pending treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table.

STATE AERONAUTICAL LEGISLATION

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD Aeronautics Bulletin No. 18, of the Department of Commerce aeronautics branch, dated August 1, 1928, entitled "State Aeronautical Legislation and Abstract of State Laws."

This is the season when State legislatures are convening, and I desire to call the attention of Senators to the fact that the air commerce act of 1926, which regulates flying, flying machines, and pilots, applies only to interstate commerce, and there is no law in some 20 States which would prevent a pilot who had no license from taking money to take up a passenger who was unacquainted with the situation in a plane that had not passed the Government test, provided that he did not go out of the boundaries of his own State.

It is quite extraordinary, Mr. President, that States that have as much interest in flying and as much territory to fly over as Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, Texas, and a number of others which are given in a list here have no legislation whatever regulating flying of an intrastate character.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator considered the advisability of printing the provisions of the Federal law on the subject in connection with the document to which he is referring?

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator mean the air commerce act of 1926 or the regulations?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The air commerce act, and any other statutes, if there be other statutes, dealing with the subject, or compilation or codification of the provisions of Federal law relating to the subject. I merely made the inquiry because it seems to me that it would be very convenient to have the Federal statutes in connection with the State statutes which the Senator is having printed. I have no objection to the request the Senator is making.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator for his suggestion, and in accordance with the suggestion I shall be glad to ask that there be printed at the end of this pamphlet the Federal statute regulating flying in interstate commerce.

The pamphlet which I have in my hand suggests various forms of legislation which the legislatures of the different States might adopt. It also contains the text of a uniform State law, which has already been adopted by Delaware, Idaho, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and Vermont.

That uniform State law has certain defects, to one of which in particular I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment. It is in section 5 of this proposed law, which provides that—

The owner of every aircraft which is operated over the lands or waters of this State is absolutely liable for injuries to persons or property on the land or water beneath, caused by the ascent, descent, or flight of the aircraft, or the dropping or falling of any object therefrom, whether such owner was negligent or not.

That law does not apply in States like Connecticut and Massachusetts, which have their own State laws, and which recognize the fact that the operator and owner of an airplane should not be liable if something happens for which he is not responsible and for which he can not be held negligent. With that exception, I think the uniform State law is a good one.

About 14 States have adopted their own legislation, as I have read, and about 10 or 11 States have adopted this uniform State law. But 20 States have not adopted any legislation, and in view of the fact that the Department of Commerce has pointed out that 85 per cent of the fatal accidents in aviation in the United States last year took place with unlicensed pilots and unlicensed planes, it seems to me that for the future of aeronautics and for the safety of aviation Senators ought to urge upon their States that they either do what New York State did last year, in adopting a law that no one could fly in the State unless he had a Federal license, and was flying in a Federally inspected plane, adopt a good law of their own, or adopt the uniform State law. Something should be done to make flying safer in the States which have no legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the subject matter is of very great importance, but as to the Senator's suggestion, I would not undertake to tell my State, with my present limited knowledge, what I think it ought to do about it. I think Congress does very well if it legislates intelligently within the sphere of its own powers.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator that the State of Arkansas, which he represents in such a distinguished manner on the floor of the Senate, has its own aeronautical legislation, and is not one of the States that has passed no legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The State of Arkansas is very greatly interested in the subject of aeronautics, and many aeronautical organizations exist, many landing fields have been established, and there is quite an active effort there to promote air navigation.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield just for a suggestion——

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. There is an organization known as the Commission on Uniform Legislation, and I understand that all of the States are represented on that commission. They have been working out uniform legislation along the lines of banking and many other subjects, and that is the appropriate organization to which a subject of this kind might be referred by any individual who was interested in it. That is a very effective way to bring about uniformity in legislation. I think the commission is a very earnest body; they have their annual meetings, they have their separate committees, as I understand it, and devote a great deal of time and consideration to developing uniformity of legislation. If some suggestion were made to that commission along the line suggested by the Senator, there would not be a feeling that the Senate of the United States or a Member of the Senate was undertaking to tell the State what it ought to do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that his own State has passed legislation prohibiting flying over thickly settled areas and at low elevations, but has done nothing with regard to protecting individuals who desire to fly from flying with pilots who are unfitted for their work or in aircraft that are unairworthy. There is no mention made in the law with regard to the licensing of pilots or of planes, and I hope very much that he will call the attention of his friends at home to the fact that Wisconsin has an opportunity there to protect its own citizens from the dangers of flying in unlicensed planes or with unlicensed pilots in intrastate traffic when the Federal Government has already protected them in interstate traffic.

I yield now to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand it, Tennessee is one of the States that has a uniform law.

Mr. BINGHAM. Tennessee has passed a uniform State law as recommended by the commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's only purpose this afternoon is to have the article printed in the RECORD? It is not to take any steps?

Mr. BINGHAM. There are no steps that Congress could properly take, in my opinion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not imagine what steps, other than the mere use of good influences, a step which Congress could take, because it would have no right or authority.

Mr. BINGHAM. Absolutely. It is not a matter of interstate commerce but of intrastate commerce. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that some States have no legislation to protect their citizens from flying in unlicensed aircraft with unlicensed pilots within the boundaries of their own State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Connecticut is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Aeronautics Bulletin No. 18 (formerly Information Bulletin No. 41), August 1, 1928]

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
AERONAUTICS BRANCH.

STATE AERONAUTICAL LEGISLATION AND ABSTRACT OF STATE LAWS

Because of the fact that the air commerce act of 1926, under which the Department of Commerce functions in the matter of regulating civil aeronautics, does not require intrastate operators and aircraft to be registered and licensed, there has developed the necessity for uniform State legislation. The interest on the part of the various States has become so universal, and the requests for suggestions in the premises so numerous that the department has prepared this bulletin, containing three drafts of proposed State legislation covering the subject. Each is designed to accomplish the apparent necessities and at the same time bring about the extremely desirable feature of uniformity. There is also included suggested legislation concerning the acquisition and maintenance of airports.

The drafts dealing with licensing have been designated by the numbers 1, 2, and 3, in the order of their apparent desirability, and are discussed in that order. The fourth draft concerns acquisition and maintenance of airports.

No. 1. This draft is premised upon legislation recently enacted by the State of New York, with changes which are designed to remove certain ambiguities. It requires a Federal license for all pilots and all aircraft operating within the State. It would not necessitate any additional personnel or any increase in cost to the State. Local police authorities could handle violations thereof in the same manner now provided for motor vehicles. Transgressions thereunder would be for violation of the State law requiring a Federal license rather than a violation of the Federal act.

No. 2. This draft is suggested as an amendment to the State penal code and accomplishes the same result as outlined above. It has been suggested that this draft may conflict with some of the State constitutions; therefore consideration should be given this question before enactment is undertaken. It is recommended for its brevity and conciseness and is without equivocation.

No. 3. This draft is modeled after one prepared by a committee of the American Bar Association and requires either a State or Federal license. Such legislation would necessitate setting up a State inspection system with its attendant costs and complications. The draft, however, does not contemplate the actual issuance of licenses by the State. Rather it is intended that the State and Federal license requirements will be identical, in which case the applicant would prefer the latter because of its broader privileges. This draft does not definitely assure uniformity to the same extent as the preceding ones. It would permit a given State to depart from the Federal requirements, with its consequent confusion to the industry, thus defeating the purpose of uniform State legislation. If, due to some State constitutional provision, this draft is the best type of legislation that can be enacted, it is highly desirable that extreme caution be exercised in promulgating requirements for State licenses in order that they may conform to the Federal requirements.

Legislation throughout the United States requiring only Federal licenses would be of real benefit to manufacturers, operators, and pilots, who would then know that compliance with the Federal regulations would also be compliance with State regulations; also, there would then be uniform throughout the country one set of aeronautical standards, obviating a multiplicity of licenses and conflicting regulations with their attendant costs to the States.

No. 4. This draft is a suggested premise for States desiring to acquire landing fields and airports. Such legislation will depend entirely upon the fiscal legislation of the State and has been provided for informative purposes only, being a revision of legislation already enacted by some of the States. Such legislation may be combined with regulatory features outlined above or may be enacted as a separate measure.

"NO. 1. AN ACT CONCERNING THE LICENSING OF AIRMEN AND AIRCRAFT AND TO MAKE UNIFORM THE LAW WITH REFERENCE THERETO

"Be it enacted—

"SECTION 1. Definition of terms: In this act 'aircraft' means any contrivance now known or hereafter invented, used, or designed for navigation of or flight in the air, except a parachute or other contrivance designed for such navigation but used primarily as safety equipment. 'Operating aircraft' means performing the services of aircraft pilot.

"SEC. 2. Aircraft; construction, design, and airworthiness; Federal license: The public safety requiring and the advantages of uniform regulation making it desirable in the interest of aeronautical progress that aircraft operating within this State should conform with respect to design, construction, and airworthiness to the standards prescribed by the United States Government with respect to navigation of aircraft subject to its jurisdiction, it shall be unlawful for any person to navigate an aircraft within the State unless it is licensed and registered by the Department of Commerce of the United States in the manner prescribed by the lawful rules and regulations of the United States Government then in force.

"SEC. 3. Qualifications of operators; Federal license: The public safety requiring and the advantages of uniform regulations making it desirable in the interest of aeronautical progress that a person engaging within this State in navigating the aircraft described in section 2 hereof in any form of navigation for which license to operate such aircraft would be required by the United States Government shall have the qualifications necessary for obtaining and holding the class of license required by the United States Government. It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in operating such aircraft within this State in any form of navigation unless he have such a license.

"SEC. 4. Possession and display of license: The certificate of the license herein required shall be kept in the personal possession of the licensee when he is operating aircraft within this State, and must be presented for inspection upon the demand of any passenger, any peace officer of this State, or any official, manager, or person in charge of any airport or landing field in this State upon which he shall land.

"SEC. 5. Penalties: A person who violates any provision of this article shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than 90 days, or both: Provided, however, That acts or omissions made unlawful by this article shall not be deemed to include any act or omission which violates the laws or lawful regulations of the United States; but it shall not be necessary to allege or prove, as part of the case for the people, that the defendant is not amenable, on account of the alleged violation, to prosecution under laws of the United States. That he is amenable to such prosecution shall be matter of defense, unless it affirmatively appear from the evidence adduced by the people.

"SEC. 6. Time of taking effect: This act shal ltake effect the —— day of ———, 192—.

"NO. 2. AN ACT CONCERNING AERONAUTICS

"Be it enacted—

"SECTION 1. Definition of terms: In this act 'aircraft' means any contrivance now known or hereafter invented, used, or designed for navigation of, or flight in the air, except a parachute or other contrivance designed for such navigation but used primarily as safety equipment. The term 'public aircraft' means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service. The term 'civil aircraft' means any aircraft other than a public aircraft. The term 'airman' means any individual (including the person in command and any pilot, mechanic, or member of the crew) who engages in the navigation of aircraft while under way and any individual who is in charge of the inspection, overhauling, or repairing of aircraft.

"SEC. 2. Licensing of aircraft and airmen: Any person who navigates within this State any aircraft without a pilot's certificate issued by the Department of Commerce of the United States, or without a valid certificate of airworthiness for such aircraft issued by said Department of Commerce, or in violation of the air commerce regulations which have been, or may hereafter be, promulgated by the Department of Commerce of the United States, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than ——— dollars or imprisonment for not more than ———, or both.

"SEC. 3. Repeal: All acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 4. Time of taking effect: This act shall take effect ———.

"NO. 3. AN ACT CONCERNING THE LICENSING OF AIRMAN AND AIRCRAFT AND TO MAKE UNIFORM THE LAW WITH REFERENCE THERETO

"Be it enacted—

"SECTION 1. Definition of terms: In this act 'aircraft' means any contrivance now known or hereafter invented, used, or designed for navigation of, or flight in the air, except a parachute or other contrivance designed for such navigation but used primarily as safety equipment. The term 'public aircraft' means any aircraft used exclusively in the Federal governmental service or the State governmental service. The term 'civil aircraft' means any aircraft other than public aircraft. The term 'airman' means any individual (including the person in command and any pilot, mechanic, or member of the crew) who engages in the navigation of aircraft while under way and any individual who is in charge of the inspection, overhauling, or repairing of aircraft.

"SEC. 2. Power to regulate: The ——— shall administer the provisions of this act, and for such purpose is authorized to make such regulations as are necessary to execute the functions vested in him by this act, which regulations shall conform to and coincide with, so far as possible, the provisions of the air commerce act of 1926, and amendments thereto, passed by the Congress of the United States, and the air commerce regulations and air traffic rules issued pursuant thereto.

"SEC. 3. Aircraft license required: No civil aircraft shall be flown or operated in this State unless such aircraft is licensed as provided by section 5 of this act, or shall have been licensed and registered under the provisions of the air commerce act of 1926 and amendments thereto and the air commerce regulations and air traffic rules issued pursuant thereto.

"SEC. 4. Airman license required: No person shall serve as an airman in connection with any civil aircraft when such aircraft is flown or operated in this State until he shall have obtained a license as provided in section 6 of this act, or shall have been licensed under the provisions of the air commerce act of 1926 and amendments thereto and the air-commerce regulations and air-traffic rules issued pursuant thereto.

"SEC. 5. Licensing of aircraft: The ——— shall provide for the issuance and expiration and for the suspension and revocation of licenses of civil aircraft not licensed and registered under the provisions of the air commerce act of 1926 and amendments thereto and the air-commerce regulations and air-traffic rules issued pursuant thereto.

"SEC. 6. Licensing of airmen: The ——— shall provide for the issuance and expiration and for the suspension and revocation of licenses as airmen not licensed under the provisions of the air commerce act of 1926 and amendments thereto and the air-commerce regulations and air-traffic rules issued pursuant thereto, but to persons applying for such licenses in accordance with the regulations promulgated by him.

"SEC. 7. Public aircraft excepted: The provisions of this act shall not apply to public aircraft owned by the Government of the United States or by this State.

"SEC. 8. Violation of this act a misdemeanor: Any person who navigates within this State any civil aircraft without an airman's license issued in accordance with the provisions of this act or the air commerce act of 1926 and amendments thereto, or without a valid license for such aircraft issued in accordance with the provisions of this act or the air commerce act of 1926 and amendments thereto, or who violates any provision of this act or any rule or regulation promulgated hereunder shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than ——— dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than ——— or both.

"SEC. 9. Uniformity of interpretation: This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those States which enact it.

"SEC. 10. Short title: This act may be cited as the 'Uniform State air licensing act.'

"SEC. 11. Repeal: All acts or parts of act which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 12. Separability: If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the applications thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 13. Time of taking effect: This act shall take effect ———.

"NO. 4. AN ACT AUTHORIZING CITIES, VILLAGES, TOWNS, AND COUNTIES TO ESTABLISH, CONSTRUCT, IMPROVE, EQUIP, MAINTAIN, AND OPERATE AIRPORT OR LANDING FIELDS

"Be it enacted—

"SECTION 1. The local legislative body of any city, village, or town in this State is hereby authorized to acquire, establish, construct, own, control, lease, equip, improve, maintain, operate, and regulate airports or landing fields for the use of airplanes and other aircraft either within or without the limits of such cities, villages, and towns, and may use for such purpose or purposes any property suitable therefor that is now or may at any time hereafter be owned or controlled by such city, village, or town.

"SEC. 2. The local legislative body of any county in this State is hereby authorized to acquire, establish, construct, own, control, lease, equip, improve, maintain, operate, and regulate airports or landing fields for the use of airplanes and other aircraft within the limits of such counties, and may use for such purpose or purposes any property suitable therefor that is now or may at any time hereafter be owned or controlled by such county.

"SEC. 3. Any lands acquired, owned, controlled, or occupied by such cities, villages, towns, or counties for the purposes enumerated in sections 1 and 2 hereof shall and are hereby declared to be acquired, owned, controlled, and occupied for a public purpose and as a matter of public necessity, and such cities, villages, towns, or counties shall have the right to acquire property for such purpose or purposes under the power of eminent domain as and for a public necessity.

"SEC. 4. Private property needed by a city, village, town, or county for an airport or landing field shall be acquired by purchase if the city, village, town, or county is able to agree with the owners on the terms thereof, and otherwise by condemnation, in the manner provided by the law under which the city, village, town, or county is authorized to acquire real property for public purposes, other than street purposes, or, if there be no such law, in the manner provided for and subject to the provisions of the condemnation law. The purchase price or award for real property acquired for an airport or landing field may be paid for by appropriation of moneys available therefor or wholly or partly from the proceeds of the sale of bonds of the city, village, town, or county, as the local legislative body of such city, village, town, or county shall determine, subject, however, to the adoption of a proposition therefor at a municipal election, if the adoption of such a proposition is a prerequisite to the issuance of bonds of such municipality for public purposes generally.

"SEC. 5. The local legislative body of a city, village, town, or county which has established an airport or landing field and acquired, leased, or set apart real property for such purpose may construct, improve, equip, maintain, and operate the same, or may vest jurisdiction for the construction, improvement, equipment, maintenance, and operation thereof, in any suitable officer, board, or body of such city, village, town, or county. The expenses of such construction, improvement, equipment, maintenance, and operation shall be a city, village, town, or county charge as the case may be. The local legislative body of a city, village, town, or county may adopt regulations and establish fees or charges for the use of such airport or landing field, or may authorize an officer, board, or body of such village, city, town, or county having jurisdiction to adopt such regulations and establish such fees or charges, subject, however, to the approval of such local legislative body before they shall take effect.

"SEC. 6. The local authorities of a city, village, town, or county to which this act is applicable having power to appropriate money therein may annually appropriate and cause to be raised by taxation in such city, village, town, or county a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. This act shall take effect immediately."

The State laws abstracted herein are by no means recommended, but are set forth as a comparison to emphasize the need of uniformity in State legislation in conformity with the progress aeronautics have made within the last two years. The so-called uniform State law of aeronautics set forth in detail is an especially good example of the urgent need for revision of such legislation.

The confusion to the industry at the present time is obvious from a study of the multiplicity and variation of requirements.

The drafts suggested at the beginning of this bulletin were prepared to minimize this confusion.

ABSTRACT OF STATE LAWS ON AERONAUTICS

NOMENCLATURE

Aeronautics: The science and art pertaining to the flight of aircraft.
Aviation: The art of operating heavier-than-air craft.
Aerostation: The art of operating lighter-than-air craft.

TYPES OF STATE AERONAUTIC LAWS

State aeronautic legislation has been of two types—regulatory laws providing for licensing of airmen and aircraft, air-traffic rules, etc., and nonregulatory laws, such as the uniform State law, the purpose of which is to establish the legal status of air navigation in relation to general law.

The District of Columbia law, being regulatory in character, and the regulatory provisions of the Hawaii law were superseded by the Federal air commerce act of 1926. The California and Florida laws became void under express provisions that they would be in effect only until Federal legislation entered the field. Regulatory provisions of other State laws are superseded by the Federal air commerce act of 1926 in so far as they are inconsistent with it.

In the following States there is no State aeronautical legislation:

Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Washington, and West Virginia.

UNIFORM STATE LAW

A "uniform State law of aeronautics" has been adopted and is still in force in the following States and Territories. In Michigan the uniform State law has been supplemented by regulatory legislation. The regulatory provisions added to the uniform State law as adopted in Hawaii were superseded by the Federal air commerce act of 1926.

Delaware, 1923 (ch. 199, approved March 23, 1923).
Hawaii, 1923 (Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1925, secs. 3894–3905).
Idaho, 1925 (ch. 92, approved February 25, 1925).
Maryland, 1927 (ch. 637, approved April 26, 1927).
Michigan, 1923 (No. 224, approved May 23, 1923).
Nevada, 1923 (ch. 66, approved March 5, 1923).
North Dakota, 1923 (ch. 1, approved February 5, 1923).
South Dakota, 1925 (ch. 6, approved February 24, 1925).
Tennessee, 1923 (ch. 30, approved February 16, 1923).
Utah, 1923 (ch. 24, approved February 28, 1923).
Vermont, 1923 (No. 155, approved March 26, 1923).

TEXT OF UNIFORM STATE LAW

"An act concerning aeronautics and to make uniform the law with reference thereto

"Be it enacted—

"SECTION 1. Definition of terms: In this act 'aircraft' includes balloon, airplane, hydroplane,[1] and every other vehicle used for navigation through the air. A hydroplane while at rest on water and while being operated on or immediately above water shall be governed by the rules regarding water navigation; while being operated through the air otherwise than immediately above water, it shall be treated as an aircraft.

"'Aeronaut'[1] includes aviator, pilot, balloonist, and every other person having any part in the operation of aircraft while in flight.

"'Passenger' includes any person riding in an aircraft but having no part in its operation.

"SEC. 2. Sovereignty in space: Sovereignty in the space above the lands and waters of this State is declared to rest in the State, except where granted to and assumed by the United States pursuant to a constitutional grant from the people of this State.

"NOTE.—Hawaii substitutes 'Territory' for 'State.' Both Hawaii and Michigan omit the words 'pursuant to a constitutional grant from the people of the State.'"

"SEC. 3. Ownership of space: The ownership of the space above the lands and waters of this State is declared to be vested in the several owners of the surface beneath, subject to the right of flight described in section 4.

"NOTE.—Idaho omits the words 'subject to the right of flight described in section 4'; deleted on amendment.

"SEC. 4. Lawfulness of flight: Flight in aircraft over the lands and waters of this State is lawful, unless at such a low altitude as to interfere with the then existing use to which the land or water, or the space over the land or water, is put by the owner, or unless so conducted as to be imminently dangerous to persons or property lawfully on the land or water beneath. The landing of an aircraft on the lands or waters of another without his consent is unlawful, except in the case of a forced landing. For damages caused by a forced landing, however, the owner or lessee of the aircraft or the aeronaut shall be liable as provided in section 5.

"NOTE.—Utah adds 'or damaging' after the word 'dangerous.'

"SEC. 5. Damage on land: The owner of every aircraft which is operated over the lands or waters of this State is absolutely liable for injuries to persons or property on the land or water beneath caused by the ascent, descent, or flight of the aircraft, or the dropping or falling of any object therefrom, whether such owner was negligent or not, unless the injury is caused in whole or in part by the negligence of the person injured or of the owner or bailee of the property injured. If the aircraft is leased at the time of the injury to person or property, both owner and lessee shall be liable, and they may be sued jointly, or either or both of them may be sued separately. An aeronaut who is not the owner or lessee shall be liable only for the consequences of his own negligence. The injured person or owner or bailee of the injured property shall have a lien on the aircraft causing the injury to the extent of the damage caused by the aircraft or objects falling from it.

"NOTE.—Utah adds 'or damage' after the words 'liable for injuries' and after the words 'causing the injury.' There is also inserted 'injury or' after the words 'to the extent of the.'

"SEC. 6. Collision of aircraft: The liability of the owner of one aircraft to the owner of another aircraft or to aeronauts or passengers on either aircraft for damage caused by collision on land or in the air shall be determined by the rules of law applicable to torts on land.

"SEC. 7. Jurisdiction over crimes and torts: All crimes, torts, and other wrongs committed by or against an aeronaut or passenger while in flight over this State shall be governed by the laws of this State; and the question whether damage occasioned by or to an aircraft while in flight over this State constitutes a tort, crime, or other wrong by or against the owner of such aircraft shall be determined by the laws of this State.

"SEC. 8. Jurisdiction over contracts: All contractual and other legal relations entered into by aeronauts or passengers while in flight over this State shall have the same effect as if entered into on the land or water beneath.

"SEC. 9. Dangerous flying a misdemeanor: Any aeronaut or passenger who, while in flight over a thickly inhabited area or over a public gathering within this State, shall engage in trick or acrobatic flying, or in any acrobatic feat, or shall, except while in landing or taking off, fly at such a low level as to endanger the persons on the surface beneath, or drop any object except loose water or loose sand ballast, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"NOTE.—Idaho sets the penalty as $100 or six months, or both. Maryland sets penalty at $1,000 or six months, or both. Nevada makes the imprisonment six months. In South Dakota the fine is $1,000 and imprisonment six months. Utah adds 'loose sheets of paper' after 'water' and sets the fine at $300 and the imprisonment six months. Vermont's fine is $100. Hawaii adds 'or paper handbills' after 'ballast' and sets the fine at $1,000.

"SEC. 10. Hunting from aircraft a misdemeanor: Any aeronaut or passenger who, while in flight within this State, shall intentionally kill or attempt to kill any birds or animals shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not more than ——— or by imprisonment of not more than ———, or both.

"SEC. 11. Uniformity of interpretation: This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those States which enact it and to harmonize, as far as possible, with Federal laws and regulations on the subject of aeronautics.

"NOTE.—Nevada adds at the end of this section: 'It shall not be interpreted or construed to apply in any manner to aircraft owned and operated by the Federal Government.' Hawaii adds 'and Territories' after 'States.' Michigan omits this section.

"SEC. 12. Short title: This act may be cited as the uniform State law for aeronautics.

"SEC. 13. Repeal: All acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 14. Time of taking effect: This act shall take effect ———."

ABSTRACTS OF OTHER STATE LAWS

Acts granting authority to acquire land for airports or other navigation aids and the like have not been included. Neither have there been included local ordinances.

Each of the following States requires original or periodic examination of pilots and inspection of planes:

Arkansas, Connecticut, Colorado, Florida, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Wyoming.[2]

A similar requirement prevails in all Territories and possessions of the United States[2] and in the District of Columbia[2] and the Panama Canal Zone.[3]

The State laws hereinafter digested do not, of course, comprise either a digest of the entire law applicable in respect of the registration or licensing of pilots and aircraft, or all the air-traffic rules applicable to interstate or intrastate air navigation. Under the air commerce act of 1926 the air-traffic rules promulgated by the Secretary of Commerce apply to all air navigation, commercial or noncommercial, interstate or intrastate.

Under the air commerce act of 1926 the requirements as to the registration of aircraft and certificates of airworthiness therefor and as to certificates for airmen apply not only to interstate transportation of passengers or property for hire but also to interstate "navigation of aircraft in furtherance of a business or navigation of aircraft from one place to another for operation in the conduct of a business."

Such requirements also apply to such transportation and navigation between two points in the same State but through any place outside thereof, and between two points within the Territories of Alaska or Hawaii or the District of Columbia or any possession of the United States.

[1] The word "hydroplane" and "aeronaut" are erroneously used, according to official nomenclature.

[2] Registration in Wyoming dependent on Federal licenses, which require pilot examination and plane inspection.

[3] Federal regulations under air commerce act control. Licensed planes are inspected, while those "identified" or merely registered are not required to be inspected.

	Uniform State law	Arkansas	Colorado	Connecticut
Authority	No mention	State aircraft board, 3 members	Commission of aeronautics, 3 members.	Commissioner of aviation(sic)[1] and advisory board of 7 members.
Aircraft registration and inspection.[2]	do	Annual on inspection, free; additional inspection, $5.	Board to provide	Annual, on inspection.
Transfer	do	Vendor notifies board; vendee obtains transfer on $1 fee.	No mention	Registration expires, on transfer; vendor returns certificate with notice.
Pilot license	do	Annual, on examination	On periodic examination	Annual, on examination.
Students	do	No license until solo stage	No mention	No license until solo stage; nonlicensed persons must be accompanied by licensed pilot.
Fees	do	Private plane, $15; commercial plane, $50; private pilot license, $10; commercial pilot, $50; manufacturer or dealer license, $50 for 3 planes.	do	Plane registration, $25; experimental registration, $2; initial pilot examination, $15; annual pilot examination, $10; semiannual pilot examination, $5; operating license, $5; transfer, $1.
Suspension or revocation	do	No mention	Pilot license may be suspended or revoked on hearing.	For sufficient cause.
Traffic rules	do	Board may prescribe	No mention	No mention.
Acrobatics	Prohibited over thickly settled areas or assemblies.	Prohibited over populated areas	do	Prohibited over thickly settled areas or assemblies.
Normal altitude	Flying unlawful at such low altitudes as to endanger or interfere with existing use.	Minimum over cities, 1,000 feet; over thickly populated premises 250 feet, except in fog or forced landing.	do	At least 2,000 feet over thickly settled areas or assemblies.
Nonresidents	No mention	Private operation only exempt 15 days, conditional on compliance with home State, foreign, or Federal registration and license laws.	do	Exempt 30 days if plane registered and pilot licensed, home State or Federal. If no home State law, commissioner may waive provisions. Exhibitions or flights for hire require compliance. Arrivals to be reported in 48 hours.
Exemptions	do	Pilots and aircraft of U. S. Government.	Aircraft of U. S. Government and sovereign States and countries.	Pilots and aircraft of U. S. Government.
Violations	Penalty varies. The uniform State law also includes penalty for hunting with aircraft.[3]	$25–$100	$20–$500	Not more than $100 or six months, or both.
Relation to Federal law	Law construed to harmonize with Federal laws.	Provisions of the act may be waived by board if conditions of Federal regulations are met.	Regulations which may be promulgated by the commission to be in harmony with air commerce act.	No mention.
Miscellaneous		Board empowered to regulate all navigation, inspection, and examination of pilots and craft, regulate traffic, and field markings. (Act 17, approved Feb. 16, 1927.)	Commission to generally foster air commerce, provide regulations, encourage airports, airways, record accidents; National Guard may set aside fields for air commerce and fix rentals. (H. B. 79, approved May 5, 1927.)	Commissioner may make, alter, or repeal all regulations. Pilot and employer liable for damage due to negligence. Other provisions include reporting of damages; inspection of airports, tampering with aircraft, airports, or airways, reports of accidents, etc. (Approved May 10, 1927, ch. 324.)

	Kansas	Kentucky	Louisiana	Maine
Authority	Aircraft board, 3 members	Air board, 5 members	No mention	Secretary of state.
Aircraft registration and inspection.	Annual, on inspection	No mention	do	Annual, on inspection.
Transfer	Vendor notifies board, vendee requests transfer.	do	do	Registration expires and vendor notifies secretary of state.
Pilot license	Annual, on examination	do	do	Annual, on examination.
Students	No license until solo stage	do	do	No license; must be accompanied by licensed or military pilot.
Fees	Registration and inspection, $15; other inspection, $2.50; pilot license, $10; manufacturer and dealer license, $20 for 3 aircraft and $1 each for additional; transfer, $1.	do	Bond in sum of $15,000 for 1 airplane and $1,000 for each additional airplane to cover injuries to persons or property required in carrying passengers for hire.	Registration, $5; inspection, $5; pilot examination, not over $25; operating license, $2; passenger-carrying permit, $1.
Suspension or revocation	No mention	do	No mention	On hearing for sufficient cause.
Traffic rules	Board may prescribe	do	do	Provided.
Acrobatics	Prohibited over thickly settled areas.	do	do	Prohibited over thickly settled areas or assemblies.
Normal altitude	Minimum over cities, 1,000 feet, or anywhere under 250 feet, fog and forced landings excepted.	do	do	Minimum altitude 1,000 feet in city limits.
Nonresidents	Exempt 30 days if plane registered and pilot licensed in home State; flight for hire requires compliance.	do	do	Private pilots exempt 15 days if licensed in home State; commercial pilots and passenger aircraft must comply.
Exemptions	Pilots and craft of U. S. Government.	do	do	Pilots and planes holding Federal authority.
Violations	$25–$500	do	Maximum of $1,000 or 6 months, or both.	$10–$100 or 1–6 months, or both.
Relation to Federal law	No mention	do	No mention
Miscellaneous	Board authorized to regulate and control air navigation, including markings for airports. (Ch. 264, approved Mar. 1, 1921.)	Board may acquire land and equipment and provide airports and airways. (Approved Mar. 3, 1926.)	Act mentions only operators carrying passengers for hire. (Act 52, approved June 26, 1926.)	Permit necessary to carry passengers for hire. Pilots must maintain log. (Laws of 1923, ch. 220; as amended, 1925, ch. 185.)

	Massachusetts	Michigan	Minnesota	New Jersey
Authority	Registrar and advisory board of at least 3 members.	No mention	Adjutant general	No mention.
Aircraft registration and inspection.	Annual on inspection	Aircraft must comply with Federal regulations.	Semiannually on inspection	Must comply with Federal regulations and have Federal license if operating commercially.
Transfer	No mention	No mention	No mention	No mention.
Pilot license	Annual on examination	Pilots carrying passengers for hire must have Federal license.	On examination	Pilots operating commercially must have Federal license.

[1] Delaware—Maximum $500 or 1 year, or both. Idaho—Maximum $100 or 6 months, or both. Maryland—Maximum $1,000 or 6 months, or both. Nevada—Maximum $500 or 6 months, or both. North Dakota—Maximum $500 or 1 year, or both. South Dakota—Maximum $1,000 or 6 months, or both. Tennessee—Maximum $500 or 1 year, or both. Utah—Maximum $300 or 6 months, or both. Vermont—Maximum $100 or 1 year, or both.

[2] "Registration" as used herein means official entry or record of aircraft, whether licensed or merely identified.

[3] Law covers all aircraft, however, whether lighter or heavier than air.

	Massachusetts	Michigan	Minnesota	New Jersey
Students	No license; must be accompanied by licensed pilot unless over approved field.		No mention	No mention.
Fees	Pilot license, $5; examination, $5; plane registration, $15.	No mention	Registration, $10; renewal, $2; pilot license, $10.	Do.
Suspension or revocation	On hearing, for cause	do	For cause	Do.
Traffic rules	Registrar may provide	do	No mention	Do.
Acrobatics	Prohibited over thickly settled areas and in commercial passenger carrying. Wing walking, transfer, etc., prohibited.	do	Prohibited over thickly settled areas or assemblies.	Do.
Normal altitude	Minimum, 3,000 feet over thickly settled areas; 1,000 feet over assemblies; 500 feet over any building or person.	1,500 feet over assemblies except at flying fields.	Such as to enable glide to landing [4]	Do.
Nonresidents	Private pilots and planes or commercial pilots and planes in interstate traffic which have complied with home or Federal laws exempt; all others must comply.	do	No mention	Do.
Exemptions	Pilots and craft of the State or U. S. Government, or licensed pilots and registered planes under Federal authority; experimental craft.	1,500 feet over assemblies except at flying fields.	Pilots and aircraft of the State or U. S. Government.	No mention.
Violations	$10–$500 or 1–6 months, or both	$10–$100 or 90 days, or both	Violation is misdemeanor	Violation is misdemeanor.
Relation to Federal law	None except as above	As above	No mention	As above.
Miscellaneous	Other requirements are set as to landing in public parks, establishment of landing places, reporting damage to planes, limitation of load, etc. (Acts of 1922, 534, secs. 35–40; acts of 1925, 189, secs. 41–59.)	These regulatory provisions are in addition to the provisions of the uniform State act. House enrolled act 127, Public Act 138, approved May 11, 1927.	The adjutant general is charged with promulgation of regulations; these were published as G. O. 18, Sept. 1, 1927. (Approved Apr. 25, 1925, ch. 406.)[4]	Ch. 63, New Jersey laws of 1928. Effective Mar. 19, 1928. Same as stated on New York.

	New York	Oregon	Pennsylvania
Authority	No mention	Secretary of state	Secretary of internal affairs, advised by State aeronautics commission, 7 members.
Aircraft registration and inspection.	Must comply with Federal regulations and have Federal license if operating commercially.	Annual, on inspection	On inspection.
Transfer	No mention	Vendee notifies secretary of state	No mention.
Pilot license and examination	Pilots operating commercially must have Federal license.	No mention	On examination.
Students	No mention	do	Regulations provide for.
Fees	do	Registration fee, $10; transfer fee, $1	No mention.
Suspension or revocation	do	No mention	On hearing.
Traffic rules	do	do	Covered by regulations promulgated by Department of Internal Affairs under authority of act.
Acrobatics	do	do	Do.
Normal altitude	do	do	Do.
Nonresidents	do	do	Do.
Exemptions	do	do	Airmen and aircraft of U. S. Government, of Pennsylvania State, or those Federally licensed.
Violations	Not more than $100 or 90 days or both	$10–$100	$10–$100 or not more than 30 days.
Relation to Federal Law	As above	No mention	Regulations not to be inconsistent with Federal laws and regulations.
Miscellaneous	Ch. 233, Mar. 5, 1928. Effective July 1, 1928. Requires Federal licenses for pilots and aircraft engaged in operation which would require such license if operation was interstate.	Approved Feb. 11, 1921, ch. 49; amended Feb. 23, 1923, ch. 186.	Department of internal affairs authorized to adopt regulations for registration and licensing of aircraft, airmen licensing, and regulation of airports except those of U. S. Government. (Acts of Assembly No. 164, Apr. 13, 1927; No. 250, Apr. 26, 1927.)

	Virginia	Wisconsin	Wyoming
Authority	State Corporation Commission	No mention	Secretary of state.
Aircraft registration and inspection.	State or Federal license (State license under rules promulgated by commission).	do	Registration on presentation, Federal license only.[5]
Transfer	No mention	do	No mention.
Pilot license	State or Federal license (State license under rules promulgated by commission).	do	On presentation of Federal license only.[5]
Students	No mention	do	No mention.
Fees	do	do	Do.
Suspension or revocation	May under rules promulgated by commission	do	Pilot and plane, on conviction for violation.
Traffic rules	No mention	do	Traffic rules, navigation obstruction lights, signals, etc., provided.
Acrobatics	do	Prohibited over thickly settled areas or assemblies.	Prohibited over thickly settled areas or assemblies, or with passengers, or over an airport, or within 1,000 feet horizontally, or under 2,000 feet above an airway, or by plane carrying passengers for hire.
Normal altitude	do	No flying at such low altitudes as to endanger persons below.	Minimum altitude over thickly populated areas or assemblies, 1,000 feet; elsewhere, 500 feet.
Nonresidents	do	No mention	No mention.
Exemptions	Aircraft of U. S. Government and State of Virginia.	do	Do.
Violations	Not more than $100 or one month, or both	$10–$100 first offense; $100–$500 or 6 months, or both.	$50–$500 or 30 days to 1 year, or both.
Relation to Federal law	State license not required if federally licensed	No mention.
Miscellaneous	Effective date. Act also prohibits establishment, maintenance, or operation of airport or landing field without permit from commission. Fine not less than $100 or more than $500 for each day operated.	Approved Apr. 2, 1925, ch. 35	Act also authorizes governor to set apart air space and municipalities to acquire property and conduct airports. (Approved Feb. 26, 1927, ch. 72.)

[4] Law of 1921 set 2,000 feet over cities, with fine not over $100 or 60 days, or both. This law not repealed by 1925 act.
[5] Wyoming registration not necessary in case of transit over the State.

REGULATORY POWERS—AIR COMMERCE ACT

SEC. 3. Regulatory powers. The Secretary of Commerce shall by regulation—

(a) Provide for the granting of registration to aircraft eligible for registration, if the owner requests such registration. No aircraft shall be eligible for registration (1) unless it is a civil aircraft owned by a citizen of the United States and not registered under the laws of any foreign country, or (2) unless it is a public aircraft of the Federal Government, or of a State, Territory, or possession, or of a political subdivision thereof. All aircraft registered under this subdivision shall be known as aircraft of the United States.

(b) Provide for the rating of aircraft of the United States as to their airworthiness. As a basis for rating the Secretary of Commerce (1) may require, before the granting of registration for any aircraft first applying therefor more than 8 months after the passage of this act, full particulars of the design and of the calculations upon which the design is based and of the materials and methods used in the construction; and (2) may in his discretion accept in whole or in part the reports of properly qualified persons employed by the manufacturers or owners of aircraft; and (3) may require the periodic examination of aircraft in service and reports upon such examination by officers or employees of the Department of Commerce or by properly qualified private persons. The Secretary may accept any such examination and report by such qualified persons in lieu of examination by the employees of the Department of Commerce. The qualifications of any person for the purposes of this section shall be demonstrated in a manner specified by and satisfactory to the Secretary. The Secretary may, from time to time, rerate aircraft as to their airworthiness upon the basis of information obtained under this subdivision.

(c) Provide for the periodic examination and rating of airmen serving in connection with aircraft of the United States as to their qualifications for such service.

(d) Provide for the examination and rating of air-navigation facilities available for the use of aircraft of the United States as to their suitability for such use.

(e) Establish air-traffic rules for the navigation, protection, and identification of aircraft, including rules as to safe altitudes of flight and rules for the prevention of collisions between vessels and aircraft.

(f) Provide for the issuance and expiration, and for the suspension and revocation, of registration, aircraft, and airman certificates, and such other certificates as the Secretary of Commerce deems necessary in administering the functions vested in him under this act. Within 20 days after notice that application for any certificate is denied or that a certificate is suspended or revoked, the applicant or holder may file a written request with the Secretary of Commerce for a public hearing thereon. The Secretary, upon receipt of the request, shall forthwith (1) arrange for a public hearing to be held within 20 days after such receipt in such place as the Secretary deems most practicable and convenient in view of the place of residence of the applicant or holder and the place where evidence bearing on the cause for the denial, suspension, or revocation is most readily obtainable, and (2) give the applicant or holder at least 10 days' notice of the hearing, unless an earlier hearing is consented to by him. Notice under this subdivision may be served personally upon the applicant or holder or sent him by registered mail. The Secretary, or any officer or employee of the Department of Commerce designated by him in writing for the purpose, may hold any such hearing and for the purposes thereof administer oaths, examine witnesses, and issue subpœnas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses, or the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence, or the taking of depositions before any designated individual competent to administer oaths. Witnesses summoned or whose depositions are taken shall receive the same fees and mileage as witnesses in courts of the United States. All evidence taken at the hearing shall be recorded and forwarded to the Secretary for decision in the matter to be rendered not later than 10 days after completion of the hearing. The decision of the Secretary, if in accordance with law, shall be final. The denial, suspension, or revocation shall be invalid unless opportunity for hearing is afforded, notice served or sent, and decision rendered within the respective times prescribed by this subdivision.

SUGGESTED UNIFORM CITY ORDINANCE

An ordinance to require the licensing of aircraft and pilots operating over the city of ———.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the common council of the city of ———, that on and after the first day of ———, 192—, only aircraft and pilots licensed by the United States Department of Commerce shall be permitted to operate in or over the city of ———: Provided, however, That this restriction shall not apply to public aircraft of the Federal Government, or of a State, Territory, or possession, or of a political subdivision thereof.

SEC. 2. Any person violating the provisions of this ordinance shall upon conviction be found guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not more than ——— dollars or imprisonment for not more than ——— days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

COOK COUNTY, ILL.

The following resolutions were passed in 1927 by the board of county commissioners of Cook County, Ill., to bring all local activities within the scope of the regulations of the Department of Commerce:

"Be it resolved, That the board of county commissioners hereby prohibits the flying of aircraft within the corporate limits of the county of Cook, excepting such aircraft as has been inspected and licensed by the Department of Commerce of the United States and when operated by pilots possessing licenses issued by the Department of Commerce of the United States; and

"Be it further resolved, That no pilot of aircraft be permitted to operate aircraft within the corporate limits of the county of Cook, excepting those who are in possession of licenses issued by the Department of Commerce of the United States."

Similar ordinances have also been passed by other municipalities.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business behind closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate, as in open executive session, take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) took a recess in open executive session until to-morrow, Thursday, January 10, 1929, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 9 (legislative day of January 7), 1929

COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION

Norval P. Nichols, of Porto Rico, commissioner of immigration at the port of San Juan, P. R.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

Commander (Engineering) Christopher G. Porcher to be a captain (engineering) in place of Capt. (Engineering) John E. Dorry, retired, to rank as such from September 26, 1928.

Lieut. Commander (Engineering) Frederick H. Young to be a commander (engineering) in place of Commander (Engineering) Christopher G. Porcher, promoted, to rank as such from September 26, 1928.

The above-named officers have passed the examinations required for the promotions for which they are recommended.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

MARINE CORPS

Lieut. Col. Edward A. Greene to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 2d day of January, 1929.

Maj. Franklin B. Garrett to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps from the 22d day of December, 1928.

Maj. Samuel W. Bogan to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps from the 2d day of January, 1929.

Capt. DeWitt Peck to be a major in the Marine Corps from the 2d day of January, 1929.

First Lieut. Merton A. Richal to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 19th day of May, 1928.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 9 (legislative day of January 7), 1929

POSTMASTERS

CALIFORNIA

Gladys B. Evans, Knights Landing.
Mamie L. Royce, Pittsburg.
Clement J. Nash, San Mateo.

COLORADO

Valcie V. Vining, Wray.

GEORGIA

George E. Youmans, Adrian.
John H. Boone, Hazlehurst.
William H. Blitch, Statesboro.

INDIANA

David E. Conrad, Lapel.

IOWA

Gay S. Thomas, Audubon.
Samuel A. Garlow, Avoca.
Homer C. Thompson, Bayard.
William W. Gundrum, Casey.

KENTUCKY

Edmund T. Davern, Kenvir.
Everett E. Davis, Louellen.
E. Paul Counts, Olive Hill.

MARYLAND

William G. Smyth, Chestertown.
Louis J. DeAlba, Glenburnie.
Robert G. Merryman, Monkton.

MISSOURI

Clara Harlin, Gainesville.
Charles W. Lowry, Normandy.

NEBRASKA

Laurence N. Merwin, Beaver City.
Clarrissa Bilyeu, Big Spring.
Marcus H. Carman, Cook.
Joe G. Crews, Culbertson.
Charles H. Fueston, Dakota City.
William C. Coupland, Elgin.
Lucy L. Mendenhall, Elk Creek.
Charles E. Cook, Franklin.
James J. Green, Moorefield.
Herbert L. Wichman, Norfolk.
George A. Ayer, Oxford.
Olaf H. Larson, Shickley.
Lulu C. Brown, Stockville.
Franz J. Riesland, Wood River.

NEW YORK

John A. Crager, Hagaman.
Hazel I. VanNamee, Richville.

OHIO

Calvin M. Crabtree, jr., Convoy.
Charles F. Shoemaker, Pickerington.
Clarence S. Frazer, Xenia.

OREGON

Earl B. Watt, Falls City.
Jay W. Moore, Harrisburg.
William R. Anderson, Milton.
Clarence C. Presley, Newport.

PENNSYLVANIA

Anna R. Parker, Kulpmont.
David L. Bly, Watsontown.

WASHINGTON

Albert Maurer, Kelso.
Pearl B. Burrill, Snoqualmie Falls.

WISCONSIN

Alfred H. Krog, Darlington.
George L. Harrington, Elkhorn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, January 9, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TILSON.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in Heaven, for the enfolding ministries of Thy providence. We praise Thee that through repentance and divine love we have access to the Father, who pardons and restores all who are of a humble heart. Restrain the discordant notes of unrest and defiance to law and authority. Subdue the unwise critics of the Republic, and in every way help us to preserve our national inheritance and traditions, which have made us respected and honored throughout the world. Bring into bonds of unity all our citizens, and let them enjoy a righteous freedom from every form of repression and oppression. Give the blessings of courage, confidence, and good cheer to all sick and sorry hearts. Bless us this day, and may we not fear to-morrow. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on Friday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, for 30 minutes on some phases of the activities of the Treasury Department.

Mr. CLARKE. Reserving the right to object, what is to be the subject of the address?

Mr. CELLER. The subject of the address will be certain activities of the Treasury Department, particularly as they refer to treaties concerning liquor.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while I do not know of any objection, I would not want this to get in ahead of the completion of the Army bill. If the Army bill is completed at that time, I would have no objection.

Mr. CELLER. I have not often made requests of this sort and I would appreciate having this one granted.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will modify his request and ask the permission following the completion of the Army bill on Friday——

Mr. CELLER. I understood we were to have the Army bill under consideration on Saturday also.

Mr. SNELL. We hope to complete its consideration by Friday. If the gentleman will modify his request and ask for the time after the completion of the Army bill on Friday, I shall not object.

Mr. CELLER. I agree to that. The request is changed, Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, and I ask for this time after the completion of the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the modified request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE GREAT KANAWHA RIVER

Mr. ENGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLAND. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, a river and harbor improvement bill is now pending on the House Calendar. This bill was favorably recommended by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors at the first session of the Seventieth Congress. Both of our great political parties are pledged to river and harbor improvement. This pledge should be kept and the improvement rushed to completion as rapidly as is consistent with economy. Any delay in this highly important legislation is wholly unjustified. Millions of dollars have been expended in the improvement of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. The improvement of the Ohio River is practically complete. An increase in tonnage is needed for shipment over these two great waterways in order to justify the large sums of money expended in these improvements.

The improvement of the Great Kanawha River which flows through the district I have the honor to represent will furnish more tonnage than any other river which empties into either the Mississippi or Ohio Rivers.

The Great Kanawha Valley and surrounding territory has the greatest deposit of smokeless coal in the world, all of which may be shipped over the Great Kanawha River as soon as the river is improved so as to afford adequate transportation facilities.

I assert without fear of contradiction that the Great Kanawha River affords the greatest possibilities in the shipment of tonnage than any river in the country. In addition to the unlimited quantity of coal, estimated by competent engineers to be 18,000,000,000 tons within sufficient proximity to be marketed by shipment on the Great Kanawha River, there are numerous factories in this great industrial center. Clay, brick, iron, steel, chemicals, glass, bottles; in fact, everything nearly that can be manufactured is manufactured in this valley. The coal business is as near on the rocks of ruin as any other industry in existence. Relief should be had before it is too late. The improvement of the Great Kanawha River will perhaps afford greater relief to our coal business than anything else which might be done.

Numerous civic organizations and coal operators' associations have sent me messages urging the immediate passage of the river improvement bill.

These organizations are: St. Albans Business Men's Association, the Rotary Club of Montgomery, the Beckley Chamber of Commerce, the Beckley Kiwanis Club, the Beckley Rotary Club, the Winding Gulf Coal Operators Association, the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, the Great Kanawha Valley Improvement Association, Oak Hill Chamber of Commerce, and the Montgomery Chamber of Commerce.

Permit me to say that the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, in proportion to the amount necessary to expend for proper transportation purposes, means more in the development and prosperity of the country than any other river within its borders.

Let us do our duty and pass this bill during this session of Congress, and thereby afford the coal business, farmers, and other industries relief without any further delay.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLAND. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman know the attitude of the leadership on his side of the aisle as to the passage of this bill?

Mr. ENGLAND. I do not. At the present time I do not know that there is any specially defined attitude. So far as I know, there is none.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the gentleman realize that unless we do something in this Congress it will probably be more than 12 months before we can consider river and harbor legislation?

Mr. ENGLAND. That is exactly the reason I am urging immediate action at this particular time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Has the gentleman any hope that the leadership on the majority side will help us to get this bill up and pass it?

Mr. ENGLAND. I certainly hope they will. I do not know that the leadership has any views as to what action may be taken or what they are going to do.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It rests absolutely with them. All they have got to do is to say so, and the matter will be taken up.

Mr. ENGLAND. I do not know as to that.

Mr. KNUTSON. In fairness to the gentleman, if the gentleman has any information as to the attitude of the leaders on this side, I think he should give it to the House so that we may know what it is. I have not heard any expression myself.

Mr. ENGLAND. I have heard no expression as to the purpose or decision of the leadership.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is exactly what is troubling us now—we have heard no such expression, and we want some expression from them.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLAND. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The gentleman asked consent to put in his remarks an editorial of a certain publication. How long is that?

Mr. ENGLAND. It is not very long.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I want to inquire why the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has become head waiter and sanitary inspector for this House recently, does not object to your requests, when he turns on the Democrats in the House?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman has not given me a chance yet.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. And the gentleman was not going to, either.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He was, too.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. ENGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLAND. It is well known what the coal industry means to our national life and prosperity to the entire country.

This being an indisputed fact, Congress should act promptly in the passage of legislation to revive this industry, which is now practically prostrate.

The speedy improvement of the Great Kanawha River is one means of affording a measure of relief to the coal business in our section, and for that reason, among many others, legislation for the improvement of river transportation facilities should not be delayed. Such improvements will afford cheaper transportation and broader markets for our coal products. [Applause.]

REUNION OF THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CLARKE. Reserving the right to object, is this in order or out of order?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I do not know. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read in my time the following bill which I have introduced.

The Clerk read as follows:

[H. R. 14461, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for a joint reunion of the surviving veterans of both sides of the war of 1861 to 1865, in the city of Washington, in the year 1929; to authorize the appropriation of sufficient money from the United States Treasury to pay the expenses of such joint reunion; and to provide for a commission to carry into effect the provisions of the act

Be it enacted, etc., That it is deemed appropriate that a joint reunion of both sides of the few surviving veterans of the war of 1861 to 1865 be held in the city of Washington in the year 1929, in order that opportunity be given to the American people to express their affection for said veterans; and that the expenses of such joint reunion be borne by the United States Government.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of moneys in the United States Treasury a sum or sums of money sufficient to pay all expenses of said joint reunion.

SEC. 3. That for the further purpose of carrying into effect the objects of this act and arranging for said joint reunion there is hereby created a commission, to consist of the following persons, to wit: The General of the United States Army, the commander of the Spanish-American War Veterans, the commander of American Legion, the commander of Veterans of Foreign Wars, and such other persons as the President of the United States may appoint.

SEC. 4. Full power is hereby granted to said commission to arrange for and carry into effect said joint reunion.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I have asked and graciously received permission to speak for five minutes for the sole purpose of calling the attention of the House to this Christian good-will offering providing for a joint reunion of the survivors of the armies of the blue and the gray in Washington during the present year.

When I first presented the bill it provided that the commission should be composed of the General of the United States Army, governors of the several States, and such other persons as the President of the United States might be pleased to appoint. I have thought now that it would be better to have the commission composed of the General of the United States Army, the commanding officers of the Spanish War Veterans, the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, having the thought in mind that it would be beautiful if these men of the younger organizations could stand in a sense as hosts of the veterans of the great Civil War.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, my particular purpose is to remind Members of the House that to-morrow morning the hearing on this bill will be held before the House Committee on the Judiciary, and I would like to ask those who are in accord with the Christian good-will spirit of this bill to appear before the committee and plead for favorable action.

A few mornings ago the House was honored by the presence of the commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, who sat in the gallery, and this House did pay honor to his presence. He was in Washington for the express purpose of pleading for the passage of this legislation. He was called to another State yesterday and may not get back in time for the hearing, but his heart and soul are in favor of it, and I earnestly hope that all of those Members of the House—and particularly all you who are ex-service men—who favor this movement in behalf of brushing away the last vestige of bitterness between two sections of our country once at war but now fully united may appear before the committee and ask for early action on the bill.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. DYER. Has the gentleman inquired of the veterans of the gray whether they are in accord with the proposed reunion?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I will say that I have received some 4,000 letters from survivors of the two armies. Out of all these I have received but four antagonistic to the movement. One of them came from Maine, 1 from Massachusetts, 1 from Maryland, and 1 from Virginia. Two of the objectors said that they did not want to march down Pennsylvania Avenue with the "damned Yankees." [Laughter.] The other two said they did not want to march with the "damned rebels." All the other 4,000 applauded the purpose of the bill. [Applause.]

MICHIGAN CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, the Criminal Code of Michigan has raised a great deal of talk in the last two weeks throughout the Nation because of the celebrated case against Etta Miller. I would like to have read in my time an editorial from the Detroit Free Press, of January 8, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Detroit Free Press, Tuesday, January 8, 1929]

NEEDLESS TEARS

There seems to be no end to the tears the professional sob squadders feel they must shed over Mrs. Etta Miller, now serving a life term in the Detroit House of Correction because she insisted upon repeatedly defying the liquor laws of the State. Actually there is no reason to weep over the woman's situation, as far as her treatment by the agencies of the law is concerned. Mrs. Miller has borne 10 children, it is true—so have many other women who have not found it necessary to run blind pigs—but only 4 of the 10 survive, and 3 of those are married and the other is being supported by the State; so the theory that she was driven to illegal practices in order to support a family rather falls by the wayside.

And although Mrs. Miller has been convicted only four times, she has been in trouble with the law a large number of times, if apparently reliable reports are accurate; and when last apprehended, she had a 12-year-old girl in her place serving drinks to customers. Mrs. Miller is a confirmed and obstinate lawbreaker. She was a menace to the community where she lived, and the thing to do was to place her where she could cause no more trouble.

Those who for propagandist reasons, which have nothing whatever to do with love of justice or the public good, are trying to make a heroine and a martyr out of an aged purveyor of rotten booze, do not worry much over the harm the woman has been doing. They are not concerned about the injury to persons she has sold her wares to. And in that connection it is pertinent to notice that some of those who mourn assiduously over the woman's troubles are persons or publications who also make a specialty of crying over the hard fate of assassins while forgetting about those they have murdered.

The Detroit Times said in a recent editorial: "Grandma Miller made the mistake of violating the eighteenth amendment in a dry community. She also made the mistake of being poor." And with this as a premise the publication proceeded to an utterance that was close to an inferential incitement to lawbreaking and meant nothing at all, if it did not mean that in the opinion of the newspaper Mrs. Miller and others like her have a perfect right to defy the statutes and practice bootlegging if they are able to get away with it, and ought not to be punished if they are caught.

We are inclined to the belief that the Michigan Criminal Code, though a most excellent legal instrument as it stands, is perhaps a little severe in dealing with fourth offenders who have done nothing except violate the liquor laws in a relatively small way, and that perhaps a term of years, something less than life, would be a sufficient punishment for chronic wrongdoers of that sort. But the hardship, if any exists, is not very great, because nobody is obliged to break the law; and the overseverity certainly is not so serious an evil as that created by reckless persons or publications who incite individuals to break the law of the land and undertake to glorify and make heroes of those who suffer penalties for doing so. An apology for crime which tends to incite crime is as real an offense against society as is the commission of crime itself.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the record of the Social Service Bureau of the city of Lansing, beginning with the files that are now in existence after the fire of 1920, and about every three months from 1921 on, this record shows that this family has been in police trouble for harboring immoral people, for leading immoral lives themselves, and being constantly arrested for bootlegging and intoxication, both on the part of the father and the members of the family. The woman in question has four children by her first husband, and three by the last. The stepson of the first husband has been arrested a number of times as a bootlegger and has served time. The oldest daughter lived for over a year immorally with a man that the community afterward forced her to marry. The woman has been arrested for immoral practices. The second daughter is in the industrial reform school for girls, and the last child is committed to another State institution. I shall read now into the RECORD this woman's record of crime.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Not now. This is the police record of Mrs. Miller:

September 24, 1924: Illegal possession of liquor, served 60 days in the county jail at Mason.

October 10, 1924: Illegal furnishing of liquor, charge dismissed.

January 24, 1925: Illegal possession of liquor, no disposition of the case listed.

October 10, 1925: Illegal furnishing of liquor, six months to a year at the Detroit House of Correction.

March 10, 1927: Illegal furnishing of liquor, six months to a year in the house of correction.

March 19, 1927: Illegal possession of liquor. Pleaded guilty; no disposition.

May 24, 1927: Illegal furnishing of liquor. Pleaded not guilty; no disposition of case recorded.

October 4, 1928: Illegal possession of liquor.

Then in December came the conviction that culminated in the fourth felony offense for which the judge had no recourse except to send her under the criminal law of Michigan to prison for life. The Supreme Court has upheld that. My contention is that if we are going to waste our tears and sobs over somebody who has been hurt by the law, then we should take some one who is worthy of it and not a character of this kind.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. I yield back whatever time I have.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not for one moment attempt to defend this notorious Michigan bootlegger who has been sentenced to life imprisonment. I notice that the preceding speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON], has read into the RECORD a statement of convictions and moral lapses on the part of certain members of the woman's family. It may be well if those who read his presentation and who have heard it keep in their minds that the daughter of the family who is charged with having had moral lapses may have been emulating that notorious gentleman from New York who contributed $500,000 to the Anti-Saloon League and who, it was found, had been maintaining a love nest in the great State of New York.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I made a few moments ago may be extended in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD which he made a few minutes ago. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I have no objection if they are his own remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from West Virginia was speaking a few moments ago I asked the question as to why an objection had not been made to his including an editorial in his remarks. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that he intended to. I want to know if he did. I do not intend to object, but I want to know whether the gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet to object to extraneous matter going into the RECORD.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I want to know whether the gentleman did object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and the gentleman from Massachusetts has objected to any remarks other than his own remarks.

Mr. ENGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw that for this reason: The editorial referred to is not long and it deals with the effect that coal has upon our industries generally. I felt it was better expressed in this short editorial than I could express it in my own words. For that reason I would like to have it incorporated as a part of my remarks. The other matter consists of telegrams from various civil organizations down there. None of those telegrams is very long. They are regarding the improvement of this great river. For that reason I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, these are matters to which I have conscientiously and consistently objected. The gentleman has presented his case in a convincing manner, and so far as these telegrams and editorials are concerned, there is a place in the basket for them, and they will take their usual course and be entered into the RECORD as having been received by this House. There is no necessity of publishing them as a part of the gentleman's remarks, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I rise to make an announcement. Several Members have asked me when we intended to call up the rules that are on the calendar. It is expected that the rule for the reapportionment bill will be called up immediately after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table to-morrow, and that right after the disposition of the War Department appropriation bill, after the time allotted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], we intend to call up the bill changing the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee of the House and also the one that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] introduced relative to the printing of amendments to the bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the War Department appropriation bill, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15712, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army transportation: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; of authorized baggage, including that of retired officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men when ordered to active duty and upon relief therefrom, and including packing and crating; of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; of necessary agents and other employees, including their traveling expenses; of dependents of officers and enlisted men as provided by law; of discharged prisoners, and persons discharged from St. Elizabeths Hospital after transfer thereto from the military service, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect): Provided, That the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of horse equipment; and of funds for the Army; for the purchase or construction, not exceeding $200,000, alteration, operation, and repair of boats and other vessels; for wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for drayage and cartage; for the purchase, manufacture (including both material and labor), maintenance, hire, and repair of pack saddles and harness; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official military and garrison purposes; for purchase and hire of draft and pack animals, including replacement of unserviceable animals; for travel allowances to officers and enlisted men on discharge; to officers of National Guard on discharge from Federal service as prescribed in the act of March 2, 1901 (U. S. C. p. 197, sec. 751); to enlisted men of National Guard on discharge from Federal service, as prescribed in amendatory act of September 22, 1922 (U. S. C. p. 197, sec. 752); and to members of the National Guard who have been mustered into Federal service and discharged on account of physical disability; in all, $16,802,731, of which amount not exceeding $2,000,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement and transportation of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TREADWAY. For the purpose of moving to strike out the last word and asking unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, for some time past there has been a great deal of interest shown in relation to contracts made for various supplies made by the different departments of the Government. There were some hearings last spring before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on a resolution known as the Wood resolution, and as a result of those hearings I think some slight changes were made in the phraseology of the language having to do with Government contracts. About a week ago the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] introduced and had printed in the RECORD a lengthy bill relative to methods of Government purchases, particularly calling attention, as I read the bill, to a change in method whereby to a certain extent Government contracts were to be handled through General Lord's office, and in that way perhaps have more or less uniformity. Now, the clause of the bill of the gentleman from Michigan to which I called attention the day that he had permission to reprint the bill in the RECORD is section 16, and if I may be permitted I would like to read section 16 as amended by the proposed bill of Mr. CRAMTON. It reads as follows:

SEC. 16. Domestic materials: In the making of contracts to be performed in the United States, its Territories, and possessions preference shall be given to articles or materials of domestic production, conditions of quality and price, including duty, being equal. The term "articles or materials of domestic production" means articles or materials manufactured or assembled in the United States, its Territories, or possessions.

That does not change in any material way the present law. The law provides for a preference for domestic manufactured articles, other things being equal, including price and quality. On April 30 last I introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whereas the bill containing the language I have just read is before the Committee on the Judiciary. There is, therefore, some conflict of jurisdiction in that the subject is being considered by two different committees of the House. My bill goes further than either the Wood resolution or the paragraph I have read from Mr. CRAMTON'S bill. I believe we should do more for our home industries than simply to give them an equal break with foreign production. [Applause.] I believe we should give a preference of at least 10 per cent to American and domestic production rather than simply to say in the law that, other things being equal, our officials should select American-made goods. The point as I see it is this: We are paying out the money of the American taxpayers to the American manufacturer employing American labor. As their scale of wages is greatly in excess of the wages of our competitor nations, why should not we give our home production a preference in the form of a differential? That is the purpose of the bill I have before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Why should they not have a 10 per cent preferential over the foreign competitor for our Government contracts?

I think such an idea as this is both right and proper, because we all know how great the difference is in the cost of production here and abroad. In private business this competition must be met by our producers, but when it comes to the production of goods for Government use I maintain that the American producer is entitled to a fair differential in order to have these contracts if possible kept at home. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask for five additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Has the gentleman fixed in his mind whether 10 per cent represents the difference in cost of production between here and a foreign country? Is there any reason why you pick that percentage?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; only to give a preference to our people which is not unreasonable in competition with foreign goods.

Mr. CELLER. You are not fixing in mind a difference in cost of production?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. It is an arbitrary favoritism. It is not a scientific favoritism; neither is it an exclusive favoritism. I would not advocate that. I think our people have to take a fair amount of competition, but I think they are entitled to some preference.

I have made some inquiry about this bill as to its provoking any possible retaliatory action by other countries, and I find by reference to the Department of Commerce, through Doctor Klein's bureau, that while there is no specified difference in one country or another, practically every country does something of this same nature, showing a preference to a homemade product in paying out the taxpayers' money from the national treasury; so that no one could claim, if this were done, that there would be any likelihood of retaliatory measures against our products in foreign countries. We would be simply following the example set us by other countries. In that connection, by way of revising and extending my remarks, I would like to insert some references to other countries and a copy of the bill I have introduced.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. My attention was called first to this matter a year ago by certain concerns in my district who were trying to supply the Navy Department with certain tools such as would be used ordinarily on shipboard. On examination I found that they could not get certain Government contracts in competition with the agencies in New York handling goods imported from foreign countries. Later on I found that one of the distinguished Senators from New Jersey was interested in the subject and had taken up the matter of the sale to the Navy Department of cotton waste for wiping material for wiping engines and machinery, and had found that thousands of pounds of that ordinary waste out of the cotton mills of our country were continued to be regarded as waste, whereas a contract was awarded for a German product.

A couple of years ago when our Government was providing headstones to mark the graves of our soldiers in our national cemeteries in France the War Department purchased them in Italian marble, finished in Italy. The design selected by the commission called for a minimum amount of stone and a maximum amount of work. So great is the difference in the cost of labor in Italy from its cost in this country that these stones were bought in Italian marble delivered at the site at much lower cost per stone than that for which they could be obtained in this country. Even so, it would seem fitting from reasons of sentiment alone that our soldier dead who lie in foreign soil should at least have the crosses which bear their names and mark their resting places made from stone quarried in their native land and chiseled by their fellow countrymen.

Now, every Member of this House can find upon inquiry of manufacturers in his district similar illustrations of where our people have been discriminated against, because if we say in the language of the law, "Other things being equal, he shall get the preference," still we give him practically no preference, because it is a well-known fact that in the manufacture of most articles we can not compete with foreign goods on an equal basis. So I bring this idea before the House.

I talked with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] about his resolution. I believe I saw him here a short time ago, but I am sorry he is not here at this moment. He agrees with me that his resolution only makes a little more definite the actual equality between various bidders, competitive bidders, foreign and domestic, and he feels that the discrimination that I seek to establish in behalf of our products is much better than the idea that he suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Wood resolution simply undertakes to reiterate the policy heretofore expressed by Congress—that is, that American goods should have the preference over foreign goods whenever conditions of price, quality, and so forth, are equal. My bill would go further and give the American producer a 10 per cent advantage over his foreign competitor.

It has long been felt by those interested that the American manufacturer and producer was not receiving the advantage in Government contracts which Congress intended he should have. In making awards Government purchasing agents have been confronted with two sets of statutory requirements, one holding that, conditions being equal, the American should have the preference over the foreigner, the other holding that awards should be made to the lowest responsible bidder. If the purchasing agent failed to adhere strictly to the first requirement, the only comeback on him would be the protest of the unsuccessful American bidder. On the other hand, if the purchasing agent violated the restriction concerning the lowest responsible bidder by so much as a penny in favoring an American manufacturer over a foreign manufacturer, his accounts were suspended by the accounting officials of the Government. It is therefore easy to see where a purchasing agent, in a case where American and foreign bids were substantially equal, might be inclined to resolve the doubt in favor of the foreigner if he felt there was the slightest question of doubt about the American bid being absolutely as low as that of the foreigner.

My bill, if enacted into law, would entirely relieve this condition. It is needless to say that the measure will have the hearty support of all American manufacturers and producers who compete for Government business.

As the proposed measure will constitute a radical change in the existing practices and procedure in Government departments, it is expected there will be some opposition from Government officials. Whether this opposition will be sufficient to offset the indorsement of American producers and manufacturers remains to be seen.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, April 30, 1928.

Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Foreign goverenmental practices re local purchase of Government supplies.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In accordance with your request, I am happy to send you herewith a collection of material available in the bureau on the practices of foreign governments in giving preference for local purchase of government supplies.

I believe this will be just what you need. You will note that there is no uniform policy followed by any great number of different countries, but that the system varies from fixed percentages of preference as provided for in New South Wales, Australia, or other specific regulations covering the preference to be granted as with the automotive industry in Spain, to a general tendency to favor domestic production, as indicated under Germany.

If you think we can supplement this information in regard to any specific points on which you might need further data, or if at any time we can be of assistance to you in any other way, I hope you will feel free to call on us.

Sincerely yours, JULIUS KLEIN, Director.

COLLECTION OF MATERIAL ON GOVERNMENTAL PRACTICES IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES RE LOCAL PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES

CANADA

The Canadian Government is at present actively cooperating in the British Empire shopping week being held in Canada, which sponsors considerable propaganda in favor of the preferential treatment of British goods. The preference policy, however, had relatively hard sledding in Canada because of the industrial ambitions of the various Provinces of the Dominion and the participation of American capital in the development of the country. Of course, there is a very strong sentiment in favor of the use of local materials, and where the price differential is not particularly great contracts are undoubtedly awarded on this basis. American firms in Canada have repeatedly stated to our representatives and others that where price is not a material consideration they prefer to award orders locally because of the favorable influence on their operations. In the legislation before Parliament at the present time regarding the permission to build the Port Huron Sarnia bridge, an unsuccessful attempt was made to insert wording which would establish a definite required percentage of material contracts to be placed with Canadian firms. On the other hand, the summer of last year, Canadian firms made a strong effort to obtain the contracts for the five steamships ordered by the Government for the West Indies service, the contract approximating $10,000,000. They were underbid by Cammell Laird to the extent of some 50 per cent, the government taking refuge in the statement that the contract was awarded to a British firm by reason of the fact that the Canadian bids were not considered competitive but that the business was, nevertheless, thus kept within the Empire.

GREAT BRITAIN

We have no concrete examples with which to demonstrate British voluntary preference to domestic production, although British purchasing agencies quite generally favor the assumption that preference is always given to local production when the goods of domestic producers are at all competitive with similar foreign products. Discussion on the situation ordinarily is only brought about when a British buying agency purchases foreign material, such agency then finding it necessary to defend the course taken.

Three examples are quoted:

1. In or around April, 1927, the Southern Railway Co. of Great Britain placed a $600,000 order for rotary convertors with a Swedish electrical firm. The railway issued an official statement in justification of its action on the grounds that the British electrical manufacturers held such a strict control of prices and conditions of supplying equipment that the railway company felt that it was being subjected to dictation in regard to the terms of purchase. The railway stated that the price quoted by the Swedish firm was lower than that quoted by British manufacturers, but that this was not the principal reason for placing the order abroad as their chief object in doing so was to avoid being dictated to by the alleged British electrical manufacturers' combine.

2. Early in 1928 the Stockport town council decided (according to an open letter to the press) to place an order for electrical generating plant in Switzerland. The difference between the British and Swiss prices in connection with the Stockport contract was said to be about $85,000 out of a total of about $257,000, a difference of 33 per cent, and apparently sufficient in the opinion of the Stockport town council to justify purchasing the material from the Swiss.

3. Early in March, 1928, there was considerable discussion in the Sheffield press over the action of a committee of the city council of the Sheffield (city) corporation in passing a recommendation that a well-known American typewriter be considered the standard typewriter when new machines are acquired by the corporation. British typewriter manufacturers strongly protested that they had not been asked to submit bids for supplying recent requirements of the Sheffield corporation; they insist upon this stand notwithstanding the statement of one of the councilmen to the effect that all first-class makers of typewriters were invited to send in estimates and that the terms offered by the American firm represented a savings of slightly more than $29 in the case of each machine. Following the councilman's statement one of the British makers supplied the press with a lengthy statement reaffirming the contention that his company had not been approached in the matter.

A statement appeared in the London Times of February 9, 1927, to the effect that British shipbuilding firms had secured contracts aggregating nearly $5,000,000 in the face of strong competition from continental shipbuilders, and there have been some more general statements to the effect that the British shipbuilding industry has been favored by British shipping companies partly, at least, because of the yards' great need for work.

It is reasonable to assume that some benefit must naturally accrue to British producers because of the advertising activities of the Empire Marketing Board and similar propaganda carried on by governmental and private organizations.

FRANCE

There is no central purchasing organization for supplies required by the various ministries of the French Government. Each ministry secures its supplies either by direct orders placed with local firms, except in rare instances, or by making public a call for bids. There is no hard and fast rule barring foreigners from participating in Government contracts for supplies. Notwithstanding the latitude offered to foreign firms in bidding on government contracts, the placing of orders with such firms is very uncommon in France. Officials state that this is due to the fact that bids tendered by local firms are more attractive and add that no discrimination is shown.

BELGIUM

Purchases by the government departments in Belgium are governed by a law of May 15, 1846, and a royal decree of December 10, 1868. All contracts for government supplies are competitive and public with certain exceptions, including, primarily, supplies of small value, operations which must be held secret, merchandise manufactured under exclusive patent, works of art which can be intrusted only to artists or specialized workmen, and goods urgently needed. Except in cases of urgency, calls for bids are made 15 days in advance, and are advertised in the Bulletin des Adjudications.

Bids on Belgian Government contracts are made by Belgians and foreigners on equal terms, and in some cases preference is even given to foreign firms because of well-established reputation for quality. The tendency to award contracts to the lowest bidder, regardless of nationality, has even caused some dissatisfaction on the part of Belgian firms, notably when orders have been placed in ex-enemy countries. Few requirements are made of foreign firms wishing to enter bids for government contracts. Residence in the country must be established by the bidding firm or by a person representing the firm, with power of attorney drawn up in a form prescribed by the ministry. Another requirement of firms entering bids is to have a postal checking account in Belgium. These requirements form no obstacle to foreign firms, but the question of time is a serious handicap to American firms. The time required for filing bids renders it impossible for American firms not represented in Belgium to make bids within the time limit allowed, and even when an American firm is represented it is often impossible to meet the time requirement if the nature of the material or work calls for blue prints or long technical details which can not be satisfactorily cabled.

THE NETHERLANDS

Contracts for all supplies for the Netherlands Government are not centered in one bureau. There is, however, a Government purchasing bureau at The Hague which buys supplies destined for interdepartmental use, including such things as stationery, office supplies, fuel, etc. Bids are not announced or advertised, but several reputable firms are invited to bid. Very little purchasing is done abroad. The director of the purchasing bureau may accept any bid, regardless of price or terms. In addition to the Government purchasing bureau, there is the Government building service which has charge of the purchasing, hiring, construction, and upkeep of all Government buildings.

Only those corporations or individuals having a domicile in the Netherlands (or abroad) are admitted as suppliers and in regard to whose ability to carry out the contract the minister entertains no doubt. The minister may award a contract without having to accept the lowest bid and without stating his reasons for doing so. At the same time, he may also throw out all bids if such procedure seems desirable. Domestic suppliers are given preference up to a percentage of 10 to 15 per cent in connection with bids, although this margin is not always strictly adhered to. As a security for performance, the successful bidder is often required to name two guarantors who will each be held responsible for the carrying out of the contract and who have to affix their signatures to the bid in question. The guarantors must be persons residing within the kingdom.

SPAIN

There is a law of February 14, 1907, which lists those foreign products which may be purchased abroad for Government contracts. In a decree of July 27, 1926, it is required that among the products which that list outlines only those which can not be procured from local industries may be purchased abroad. The reasons for such foreign purchases can be: (1) Quantity not available; (2) quality not available; or (3) can not be produced within required period of time.

Enterprises dedicated to public transportation of persons and merchandise, entities having contracts with the State, Provinces, or municipalities, and the various branches of the Government requiring automobiles, trucks, tractors, steam rollers, tanks, etc., must communicate with the Comisión Oficial del Motor y del Automóvil (Official Commission of the Motor and Automobile) regarding such purchases.

In case of competitive bids, Spanish products will be given preference when the price does not exceed the foreign bid by more than 10 per cent or in some cases 5 per cent.

Three general classes of automobile manufacturers are established: (a) Manufacturers of automobiles or those manufacturing all classes of the mechanical elements entering into motor vehicles; (b) manufacturers of bodies; (c) manufacturers of auxiliary elements and accessories. Manufacturers are considered in the first category and entitled to the highest degree of preference when they manufacture or use 75 per cent of Spanish-made elements entering into their product. In considering a motor vehicle the following elements are given the percentage noted below:

	Per cent
Motor	29
Transmission	3
Differential and rear axle	13
Axles	6
Stearing gear and brakes	5
Control	2
Feed, suspension, wheels, and tires	26
Shifting gears and clutch	16

ITALY

[Law published Gazzetta Ufficiale, April 25, 1927]

It is obligatory for all Government departments, semiofficial institutions, and organizations in any way dependent either directly or indirectly on the Government, including those holding concessions from or in any way subsidized by the State to give the preference to local firms in connection with all purchases of supplies or work to be done. Foreign bids will only be received when the local industry is unable to offer satisfactory prices for the quality required or where it is not possible to obtain the entire quantity needed within the necessary period of time, in which latter case such bids must be limited to the quantity exceeding the capacity of the local industry. In all other cases bids must also be requested locally, and the competition can be limited to foreign firms only in the event that the local industry is not in position to produce the material required. In connection with contracts made by the Government departments, where necessary, the opinion of the Minister of National Economy or of the General Confederation of Industry as to whether or not the conditions outlined above exist shall be obtained, and such departments must furnish quarterly to the minister in question a list of the contracts concluded abroad, indicating in each case the name and nationality of the firm, the nature of the goods furnished, and their value. The only exception made is in the case of materials purchased by the military departments for purposes of experiment or study where it is desirable that secrecy should be maintained. A special commission will be appointed to consider doubtful cases.

The Government departments and other organizations where freedom to make purchases abroad is limited by the decree just issued can not request competitive bids from abroad without the previous authorization of the Minister of National Economy, which is also required in the case of private negotiations with foreign firms except in connection with the purchase of repair parts for machines manufactured abroad. Where foreign bids are allowed, the limits of protection granted to local firms by a previous decree dated January 7, 1926, will apply; that is to say, the price of the domestic product may exceed that of foreign products offered in competition, including customs duty and transportation charges to destination, by not more than 5 per cent, and in exceptional cases this percentage may be increased to 10 per cent. If the most favorable foreign bid increased by the percentage indicated above is equal to or greater than the lowest Italian bid, preference shall be given to the latter. However, this protection is only granted to Italian firms which manufacture in Italy and to the establishments of foreign firms situated in Italy which employ for the most part Italians and assume an obligation to manufacture the goods in question in Italy, using Italian materials as provided in a later article.

Local firms which have been awarded contracts for furnishing supplies or carrying out work are obligated to employ exclusively materials of local production except in the following cases:

(a) Where it is a question of goods not produced in Italy.

(b) Where it is impossible to obtain the quality required or a sufficient quantity to insure the observance of the conditions of delivery.

(c) Where the price of the local materials exceeds that of foreign materials by more than the percentage of protection granted to the local industry as indicated above.

There shall be considered as local products goods of all kinds which are produced in Italy either using raw or semifinished materials of Italian production or raw or semifinished materials produced abroad, provided that in the latter case the finished product represents an increase in value of at least 40 per cent over the value of the foreign materials used in its manufacture. Under special conditions this percentage may be less than 40 per cent, but in no case below 20 per cent. In no instance will products that are simply assembled in Italy from separate parts manufactured abroad be considered as Italian products, even if there are added accessories manufactured in Italy.

Firms which do not comply with the conditions laid down are punishable with a fine up to 10 per cent of the value of the raw or manufactured materials of foreign origin employed, and in case of a second offense may be excluded for a period of from one to two years from all contracts with the State and the other bodies to which the decree applies.

POLAND

Although not officially revealed, it has been an open secret for some time past, especially since the inauguration of drastic import restrictions in 1925, that the Polish Government is pursuing a policy of eliminating, whenever possible, foreign products not only in cases of bids on government contracts but also for use by municipal and communal institutions. This policy is being enforced chiefly, indirectly, by means of confidential circulars. At least in one instance such a circular was brought to the surface by a contractor in connection with the delivery of American products (lard and fatback) for the Polish War Ministry.

While the discrimination against foreign products is essentially a part of the policy of import restrictions, it is also intended for the protection of domestic industries and labor. For instance, all the contracts of the American contracting firm "Ulen & Co." on the construction of public utilities for several municipalities contain a stipulation limiting to a minimum the use of foreign materials and labor. Even the Harriman-Anaconda concession on the Giesche Zinc & Metallurgical Works, generally very broad, contains similar limitations. Municipalities have been admonished by the central government to refrain from placing orders abroad without the consent of the respective ministries.

RUMANIA

The elimination of foreign materials not produced within the country is effected exclusively by means of prohibitive duties. The draft of the contract of "Ulen & Co." with the municipality of Bucharest on public-utilities construction work provided practically for the elimination of foreign materials obtainable within the country. No other information concerning discrimination against foreign products by the government or municipal authorities has been brought to the attention of this office.

SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRIES

There is no information which would indicate that the government of any of the Scandinavian countries gives preference to local firms to the extent of awarding a contract, although their bidding be higher than that of a foreign firm. Occasionally, when a contract is awarded to a foreign firm because of their ability to underbid local firms, the press often expresses regret that high wages followed by high cost of production makes it impossible for native firms to obtain the contract. There is considerable agitation in the Scandinavian countries for buying home products. This, however, has never taken the form of excluding fair competition by foreign countries.

GERMANY

Persons of any nationality are permitted to bid on government contract requirements. There is a natural tendency, of course, to place orders with German firms, especially in view of the present very large number of unemployed and Germany's high financial obligations to the nations who participated in the war, but orders are also placed abroad if the offer of the foreign bidder is attractive. No particular preference is shown to the United States.

There is no definite percentage in favor of domestic bidders.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

The Government of the Union of South Africa has a well-defined policy for the preferential treatment of the goods made in the Union and allows a 10 per cent buying preference for those manufactured in South Africa from South African raw materials; goods made in South Africa primarily from imported materials are given a buying preference of 5 per cent. While the adoption of this regulation in 1926 has had the effect of permitting an increasing participation of South African goods, on the whole it probably favors also the participation of American goods represented in the market by resident agents, as compared with their position under the former régime by which contracts were exclusively awarded through the High Commissioner's office in London.

While essentially following the British Empire preference policy, the extent of the government's preference to empire firms, as opposed to other nationals, is less well-defined. In fact it has been the subject of considerable complaint on the part of British firms who feel that the government does not maintain a consistent position with respect to the preferential award of contracts. In some cases the specifications for government tenders have been so drawn as to practically exclude any but British products and it is generally accepted as a fact that in the case of large and important orders a considerable pressure has been brought to bear on South African officials for the preferential treatment of British goods, particularly as a result of the influence of British trade organizations and industrial interests, the latter, of course, predominant in South Africa.

Within the past few months there has been a great deal of criticism of the last Government award in railway tenders, which constitute the most important group of the Government's purchases. German firms received contracts for 93 of the 120 locomotives ordered on a bid which was stated to have been 25 per cent under the British tender and between 30 per cent and 50 per cent under the tender of American firms. British firms received a contract for 29 locomotives and Italian firms a contract for 10 locomotives of a special type. We have seen unconfirmed reports to the effect that the British bidders were requested to submit the second tender in order to make the award more nearly competitive. It appears, however, that the question of delivery was the most important factor in the award and probably explains the request for a second tender. Aside from the Government's awards, it is possible to select a number of instances of awards in South Africa which went to German and Belgian concerns over the heads of British bidders, the price differential in all of these cases having been the conclusive factor. The Durban Corporation extends a voluntary preference of 10 per cent to British firms over other suppliers, but has been compelled to make purchases from German concerns because of the size of the price differential in German bids.

The proportion of South African goods in the total award of Government stores is undoubtedly increasing substantially year by year. The proportion of British participation in this business has dropped from 81 per cent in 1922 to 65 per cent in 1926. Government store imports from Germany have increased from 1 per cent in 1922 to 11 per cent in 1926. The percentage of United States participation is erratic, due to our interest in a somewhat narrower range of commodities. It was 12 per cent in 1925 and 2 per cent in 1926, the drop being due wholly to the participation in railway contracts.

LATIN-AMERICAN COUNTRIES

It is difficult to give specific instances where local manufactures have been preferred despite price or quality differentials favoring foreign merchandise. There are undoubted tendencies in that direction, particularly in governmental and municipal works; but even where there is a marked difference in the price of the foreign and the domestic product, it is not always feasible to determine the relative qualities.

However, we know of one case where the Chilean Government ordered certain railway materials, and specified that these should be manufactured within the country, notwithstanding that none of the materials ordered had ever heretofore been produced in Chile. Although we have no means of ascertaining the prices eventually paid and the qualities delivered, nor the probable prices and qualities had foreign merchandise been ordered, it is safe to assume that the native-made freight cars, gondolas, tank cars, etc., were more costly than and inferior to the imported article.

Another instance is an order placed by the municipality of Buenos Aires, in which it was stipulated that domestic cement was to be used in construction. No prices were mentioned, but it is probable that at the seaport of Buenos Aires the foreign cement could have been supplied at a lower cost, else the stipulation referred to would have been superfluous.

On the other hand, there has been a case in Peru where an order was given for German cement in preference to that locally manufactured at the Foundation Co.'s plant, despite the lower price of the latter. The German cement was allowed to come in free of duty in order to offset the market price differentials.

FAR EAST

BRITISH MALAYA

Singapore naval base: From all reports there appears to be a kind of unwritten agreement that all materials to be used in the construction of the naval base at Singapore must be of British origin.

In this connection it is interesting to note that Trade Commissioner Renshaw recently wrote from Singapore that "despite what amounts to practical orders that only British goods should be bought, a fair amount of American machinery and building material is going into the new naval base because of the acknowledged superiority of these goods."

BRITISH INDIA

An indirect preference is given domestic products by virtue of the fact that all articles purchased abroad, with a few exceptions, by the Government of India or a local government are assessed the same rates of duty as private purchases.

Whereas under former regulations Government purchases abroad were exempted from the payment of import duties, a law effective April 1, 1924, as amended, provides for the imposition of import duties on all goods imported by the Government of India or a local government, or which have been shipped on the order of a department of the Government of India or local government, and have been appropriated to such order at the time of shipment, with the exception of airplanes and parts thereof, arms, ammunition, and certain military stores, currency notes and postage and revenue stamps.

In a recent report regarding protection to the Indian Railway wagon industry, the Indian Tariff Board recommended to the British Indian Government that until the demand for wagons becomes more normal the Government should call for tenders only in India and place contracts if the tenders were within a certain maximum price. A bill was submitted to the legislative assembly in a modified form to give effect to these recommendations. After being considered by a select committee the bill was reported back to the legislative assembly with the recommendation that the Indian Tariff Board's recommendations be accepted rather than those of the Government. According to last reports no final decision had been reached in regard to the measure by the legislative assembly.

NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA

(Local government amendment (preference to Australian and Empire goods) act, 1926)

SEC. 2. The local government act, 1919, is amended by inserting next after section 517 the following new section:

517A. (1) In purchasing or obtaining any goods the council shall give effective and substantial preference to goods manufactured or produced in the Commonwealth.

(2) If goods manufactured or produced in the Commonwealth can not be purchased or delivered within a reasonable time, or can only be purchased in insufficient quantities, or of a quality unsuitable for the purpose required, the council shall give effective and substantial preference to British goods over foreign goods.

(3) The minimum rates of preference to be given under this section are indicated in the table following:

Rate of customs duty to which the goods are liable	Minimum rate of preference to be given to goods manufactured or produced in the Commonwealth over—
	British goods	Foreign goods
	Per cent	Per cent
Duty free	20	30
5 per cent	15	25
10 per cent or more	10	20

In all cases, subject to the provisions of this act, goods manufactured or produced in the Commonwealth are to be given preference of at least 10 per cent over British goods.

In all cases British goods are to be given preference of at least 10 per cent over foreign goods.

(4) In this section "British goods" means goods manufactured or produced at any place within the British Empire; "Commonwealth" means the Commonwealth of Australia; "foreign goods" means goods manufactured or produced at any place outside the British Empire; "goods" includes machinery or material.

(5) The provisions of section 213 with respect to surcharges shall apply in relation to any expenditure authorized by a council in contravention of the provisions of this section.

In addition to this actual preference, there is a sentimental preference in favor of local production which is effective in aiding local manufacturers.

JAPAN

It is the general policy of the Government in Japan to encourage the use of home products wherever possible. Commissions have been organized for the purpose of spreading propaganda on the advantages of using domestic goods in preference to foreign. The following law, passed during the last session of the Diet in 1927, and effective on March 31, 1927, indicates the Government's policy:

"For the purpose of encouraging national industries, and when it deems such action necessary, the Government, for the time being, may specify goods of domestic manufacture in purchases for its account. It may specify (at the time contracts are entered into with manufacturers or others tendering bids) that part or all of the materials which are to be used in construction or manufacturing processes shall be of domestic manufacture."

Commercial Attaché H. A. Butts reported to the bureau under date of March 20, 1928, that "The Home Industry Encouragement Commission of the Department of Commerce and Industry has definitely agreed upon 37 articles in which preference will be given to home manufactures. These include pig iron and various steel products, certain dyestuffs and chemicals, woolen goods, and miscellaneous technical appliances. It is said that a total of 118 articles will ultimately be designated for such preference as against imported articles. No definite statements have been forthcoming as to the degree of preference to be given."

[H. R. 13405, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

April 30, 1928.

Mr. TREADWAY introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 13405) to regulate the purchase of personal property for the use of the Federal Government

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where supplies, equipment, stores, or any other personal property for the use of the Federal Government are required by law to be purchased on the basis of competitive bids, each bid shall specify whether the bidder proposes to furnish a product of domestic origin or a product of foreign origin, as such terms are defined herein, and any bid which fails to comply with this requirement shall be rejected. After such bids and also those which fail to comply with the required specifications or conditions of purchase have been eliminated, the remaining bids shall be classified into (a) those proposing to furnish products of foreign origin, and (b) those proposing to furnish products of domestic origin. If the purchase is required by law to be made on the basis of the lowest acceptable bid and if the lowest acceptable bid proposes to furnish a product of foreign origin, such bid shall be compared with the acceptable bids proposing to furnish products of domestic origin. If any such acceptable domestic bid is not more than 10 per cent in excess of such foreign bid, the official charged with executing the contract may accept the domestic bid and reject the foreign bid. In determining whether to accept the foreign bid or a domestic bid, due weight shall be given by such official to promptness and certainty of delivery, the financial stability and known reputation of the bidders, the assurance of being able to obtain future repairs or replacements, the desirability of maintaining domestic sources of supply of said product for use in time of war or other national emergency, and to any superior quality or adaptability of the domestic product.

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "product of foreign origin" means any product all or the principal part, constituent, or ingredient of which is produced, mined, extracted, manufactured, assembled, or processed in any foreign country otherwise than by a citizen or group of citizens of the United States or a corporation or association organized under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "product of domestic origin" means any product other than a product of foreign origin.

SEC. 3. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POSTS

For construction and installation at military posts of buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto, as authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes," approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. p. 748), without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes (U. S. C. p. 219, sec. 1339; p. 1302, sec. 259; p. 1303, sec. 267), including also the engagement, by contract or otherwise, of the services of architects, or firms, or partnerships thereof, and other technical and professional personnel as may be deemed necessary without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law governing the employment and compensation of employees of the United States, $14,441,950, of which not to exceed $4,800,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorizations for these purposes carried in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, and in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1928: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated, $4,800,000 shall be payable from the military post construction fund created by section 4 of the act approved March 12, 1926 (U. S. C. p. 1913, sec. 1597), and $9,641,950 shall be payable out of the general fund of the Treasury: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to enter into contracts for the purposes specified in the said act of May 26, 1928, to an amount not to exceed $3,000,000, in addition to the appropriation herein made:

Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated or authorized to be contracted for in this paragraph shall be available for construction at Scott Field, Ill.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IRWIN: Page 25, line 16, after the word "made," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as Representative from the district in which this military post, Scott Field, is located, I want to protest against the language used in the bill. Therefore I have introduced this amendment.

In the Sixty-ninth Congress I introduced a bill for $100,000 for housing at Scott Field, and in the first session of the Seventieth Congress the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] introduced a committee bill for $150,000 for the same purpose. Those bills were authorization bills, and both passed the House. In the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929 an item for $100,000 was carried. It passed the House and went over to the Senate, and was eliminated in the Senate.

I am very anxious to know who is the author of this particular language in this paragraph of the bill. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the language was inserted in last year's appropriation bill in the Senate. As I recall, it was exactly the same language.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRWIN. I will.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have read in the hearings where the officials of the War Department themselves requested this committee to insert that language in the bill. The hearings so disclose.

Mr. BARBOUR. The language of the hearings shows, as I recall, that the War Department does not care one way or the other about it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; and you personally called their attention to it.

Mr. BARBOUR. The language was first inserted in the Senate. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRWIN] asked who was responsible for the language.

I stated to him that this language was written into the bill in the Senate, and this year the bill comes down with the same language in it.

Mr. IRWIN. Now, gentlemen, I appeared before the Subcommittee on Appropriations and tried to get this item of $100,000 inserted in this bill. I was told by the committee to go to the Bureau of the Budget. I talked with General Lord about the matter and he said it was purely up to the Secretary of War or the War Department. I got into communication with the War Department and have a letter from that department, which I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, stating that owing to the fact that this item was taken out of the bill in the Senate the War Department judged a change in policy was contemplated. The Secretary of War stated that he would willingly submit this whole matter to the Congress of the United States. In other words, I went to the committee, I went to the Budget, and I went to the War Department. I have been traveling around in circles but have not been able to accomplish anything.

It seems to me that the striking out of this item by the Senate is interpreted to mean the policy of Congress in this matter. I seriously protest against this discrimination against this one field. We have many more military posts all over the country and none is included in this proviso except Scott Field. I can not quite understand why this field should be discriminated against. From what information I have been able to get from the different activities of the Government I understand this field is supposed to be continued, but under the language of this bill, if it stays in the bill, there could not be one nail driven at this military post. Suppose we should have some contingency at the field or suppose a storm should blow down some of the barracks. If that happened nothing could be done.

The barracks are war-time barracks and are practically falling to pieces at the present time. I understand the Army intends to continue its activities at this field. While I am not asking to amend this bill by inserting an appropriation I am certainly asking that Scott Field may not be discriminated against, and I certainly hope that my amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

DECEMBER 6, 1928.

Hon. ED. M. IRWIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. IRWIN: I am pleased to reply to your letter of November 19, 1928, wherein you request information as to whether appropriations covering certain construction of barracks and noncommissioned officers' quarters at Scott Field, Ill., have been submitted to either the Bureau of the Budget or whether they are included in the War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, now under consideration by the House Committee on Appropriations.

Specifically the items referred to are—

One hundred thousand dollars for barracks (Public, No. 764, 69th Cong., 2d sess.).

One hundred and fifty thousand dollars for noncommissioned officers' quarters (Public, No. 518, 70th Cong., 1st sess.).

The item of $100,000 for barracks was included in the Army appropriation bill, fiscal year 1929, but was eliminated from the bill by the Senate. Subsequently, the Bureau of the Budget was requested to include this item in the second deficiency bill, 1928. It was found to be in conflict with the financial program of the President and was not included in the bill.

From the action of the Senate, to which reference has been made, it appears that there may be some intention on the part of Congress to change its policy with reference to lighter-than-air equipment. Pending a decision by Congress on this subject the War Department does not feel that it should again include such items in the Budget.

However, the policy of the War Department with reference to lighter-than-air equipment remains unchanged.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as the report shows, no funds are included in the bill for the preparation of lighter-than-air equipment, nor are any funds included for any building construction at the lighter-than-air post at Scott Field.

This means practically the end of lighter-than-air craft so far as the Air Service of the Army is concerned. The hearings show at the end of the present fiscal year we will have nine ships in operation, while July, 1930, there will be but three ships unless some provisions are made for this service in the pending bill.

I have carefully examined the record, and in no instance can I find any doubt existed either in the mind of the Assistant Secretary of War Davison or Major General Fechet, Chief of the Air Corps, of the advisability of continuing lighter-than-air operations.

This service is included in the 5-year program for the Air Service. Further, provisions have been made in two acts of Congress for the construction of barracks for noncommissioned officers and quarters for the commissioned personnel at Scott Field, Ill. Still the War Department failed to submit estimates to the Bureau of the Budget, and in view of this the committee has declined to recognize the needs of this branch of the Air Service. The subject is discussed no less than eleven times in the hearings, the subcommittee giving the officials every opportunity.

While in one breath those charged with the affairs of the Air Corps state the value of lighter-than-air craft in military operations is admitted, in another breath they recommend to the committee the insertion of this language in the bill, which means beyond question, if carried out, the discontinuance of this branch of the service after July, 1930.

When pressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] for a reason as to the failure of the department to submit estimates the officials replied it was waiting to see if Congress desired to change its policy in respect to lighter-than-air craft.

We all know the military policy of the Government is not changed by the Congress unless so recommended by the War Department, and I find at no time has the department made any recommendations of any character or even intimated that it desired a change.

We have 32 officers, 2 warrant officers, and 539 enlisted men at Scott Field, Ill. Neither the officers nor noncommissioned officers are properly housed; in fact, the officers reside in towns near the field, either at hotels or in private homes.

The failure of the department to make an estimate for the continuance of lighter-than-air craft is due to the objections of one Senator. In last year's appropriation bill he succeeded in eliminating the item covering this service. The House conferees made every effort to get the Senate conferees to recede from the amendment, but the Senate conferees held out and the appropriation was omitted. The $250,000 for quarters had been placed in the bill by the House after the department had submitted an estimate, and there was also a $200,000 appropriation for additional equipment. This was reduced to $13,000, seriously crippling the activities of this service.

In shirking its responsibility in this matter by declining to submit estimates this year the department officials yield to the opinion of one Senator, but at the same time take the precaution to state in the hearings the necessity of carrying on lighter-than-air.

The House committee has taken the stand if the department wants the appropriation it should ask for it and not expect the committee to assume responsibility. No complaint can be made of this course. The question is, Does the House desire its wishes as expressed by the 5-year program and the two authorizations for housing carried out, or will it, too, yield to the Senator, who is making a fight to destroy this branch of the Air Service?

I do not propose to refer to the military value of lighter than air, because I confess I have not sufficient knowledge to warrant me in expressing an opinion, but I do call attention of the House to the frank statements found in the hearings time and again where the officers of the Air Service not only say there is a military value but also say the service should be continued.

Only a few months ago hundreds of millions of people here and abroad followed the press reports day by day of the movements of the big airship that made the round trip from Germany to the United States. The hearings show England, Germany, and other countries are engaged in research work and experimenting, spending large sums on lighter-than-air craft, while our officials are content to say we want it but will not ask for the necessary funds.

The language the gentleman from Illinois seeks to have stricken from the bill, which provides that no part of the appropriation shall be used for construction of Scott Field, was submitted to the committee by the Chief of the Air Service. The Government has already spent large sums in establishing Scott Field, and this money will practically be a complete loss if the activities are not continued. It was my intention to offer an amendment providing for $200,000 for additional lighter-than-air equipment. However, after talking with members of the committee, I will accept the suggestion that the bill go to the Senate as reported. The language restricting the expenditure of any money at Scott Field should be stricken from the bill, and I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. IRWIN, will be adopted.

A Member of the Senate is now endeavoring to get the War Department to submit an estimate to the Bureau of the Budget and have it sent to the Senate committee in time to be added as an amendment to this bill. We hope he succeeds; and if he does, I feel confident the House committee will accept the amendment and the House will approve.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the 1929 appropriation bill, when it passed the House, did not carry this language. When the bill went to the Senate this proviso was written into it in the Senate, there being some question as to how far the Army should go in carrying on these lighter-than-air activities.

The Navy is engaged quite extensively in lighter-than-air craft manufacture and operation. Because of this fact it was considered, as I understand the situation in the Senate, that there was very apt to be duplication along these lines. Therefore, this language was written into the bill providing that none of the money appropriated or authorized to be contracted for in this paragraph should be available for construction at Scott Field.

The Army is reducing its lighter-than-air activities. According to the statements made to our committee, they will have on hand on June 30, 1928, and in operation, 13 lighter-than-air ships; on June 30, 1929, they will have on hand and in operation 9 lighter-than-air ships, and it is estimated that on June 30, 1930, they will be operating 3 lighter-than-air ships.

So in view of the fact that the Army is limiting and even reducing its lighter-than-air activities, and in view of the situation in the Senate the committee deemed it advisable to retain this language that was in the act last year.

There was no estimate from the Bureau of the Budget for this item for Scott Field. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRWIN] appeared before the committee, the committee took the position that in view of the situation, the Senate having written this language into the 1929 bill and insisted on its being retained, the gentlemen interested in this item should go first to the Bureau of the Budget and get an estimate. Then the matter could be presented to the committee in the regular way. But the real fight on this matter is in the Senate.

It is there that serious and strong objection has been made to the item, not here; and it is there, in my opinion, that the matter must be fought out. For that reason the committee felt that the only course it could pursue was to bring this bill back with the same language it contained when it was finally adopted last year.

Mr. IRWIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. I would like to ask the gentleman, who is chairman of the subcommittee, if he thinks it is entirely fair to single out this particular field. While we are concerned with what the body at the other end of the Capitol does, yet we are legislating on this side of the Congress. As I have protested by my amendment here, I feel that we are discriminated against. If this language is left out we are not discriminated against, but with this language in the bill, there could not be one thing done, as I have heretofore said, and I certainly feel that the House does not care to discriminate for or against any particular military field in the United States until such time as the War Department takes a definite stand as to the policies in respect of the various activities of that department.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that so far as the subcommittee is concerned, there is no disposition to discriminate against anybody, but here is the peculiar condition that confronts us.

As I said a moment ago, this item for Scott Field was in the bill last year and went out in the Senate. This was agreed to by the House in conference after the Senate insisted on its amendment, and since that time nothing further has been done until now; no effort to get the Budget to recommend it, no effort, as I understand, to get the War Department to recommend that it be provided for. It comes before us without any recommendation behind it whatsoever and the committee felt in view of the circumstances it would not be justified in changing the language of this bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather unusual situation. This is the section of the bill which provides for the construction of new barracks and quarters. It provides the money to complete all the barracks which have not now been completed.

At Scott Field we have this situation. As the chairman of our subcommittee has so clearly stated, the lighter-than-air activities are being reduced. At the same time it is contemplated by the War Department to carry them on in a reduced way over the period of the year 1930 and see what results—and see if there is a different policy determined upon by the Congress as to whether or not this activity should be carried on.

With this situation in mind it would be absolutely foolish to go ahead and build new barracks at this place when we do not know whether the final policy is to go ahead with the activity or not.

In the meantime the situation is not suffering, because the general provisions of the law carry money which can be used for the repair of the wooden barracks, and these wooden barracks are probably better than almost any other wooden barracks that we have left which are being used in this country. Having all this in mind, it is absolutely foolish for this House to go ahead and attempt to provide for the construction of new barracks there. Anyway the proper procedure would be for the gentleman to go to the Bureau of the Budget and get an estimate of what the cost of these barracks would be, because the Bureau of the Budget has not submitted an estimate which covers the construction of these buildings; and it can not be done, anyway, without that estimate and the item being included in the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. An effort is being made by a Senator to secure the estimate and submit it to the Senate committee.

Mr. TABER. It will be time to pass on that when they get it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There would be no objection by the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman is mistaken; I did not say there would be no objection; I said our action was not final until then.

Mr. IRWIN. In my amendment it does not call for an appropriation. I am only asking that the proviso be cut out.

Mr. TABER. It does not hurt the gentleman whether it is cut out or not.

Mr. IRWIN. Then why is this language in this bill?

Mr. TABER. Because it is generally understood that the construction is to be postponed until they determine whether we are going on or not.

Mr. IRWIN. Why does the gentleman object to striking it out if it does not mean anything?

Mr. TABER. Because it lets it be known that Congress does not intend to go ahead until the matter is determined.

Mr. IRWIN. My amendment simply strikes out the proviso. I am not asking for an appropriation. I am simply asking for the elimination of the proviso.

Mr. TABER. That can be done whenever the estimate comes up and has been passed upon by the committee. It is not proper for Congress to do it now.

Mr. IRWIN. I was told by the committee to go to the Budget, and I did. I went to the War Department, and I tried my best and did everything I possibly could up to this time to secure recognition for Scott Field.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman certainly has.

Mr. IRWIN. I am only asking that you shall not discriminate against Scott Field. We have many other fields, and why discriminate in this bill against Scott Field by expressly specifying it? That is what I object to, and I hope you will allow this provision to be stricken out and not discriminate against Scott Field.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee to the effect that by the 30th of June, 1930, the Army would have but three lighter-than-air ships in operation. Do I understand the gentleman to say that that will be the total number of lighter-than-air ships of the Army that will be in use by that time?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that is to be the program.

Mr. LANHAM. Now, I want to address myself to that situation. It seems to me that this country, of all countries, should retain its active interest in lighter-than-air work. We are peculiarly and fortunately blessed in being the only country under the sun that has in relative abundance the necessary agent for the safe and practical operation of lighter-than-air ship—namely, helium.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a short statement?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I think it is fair that I should inform the gentleman that the naval budget submitted to Congress, which the Naval Appropriation Subcommittee is now considering, provides for the continuation of the construction of the two large airships, the starting of which was provided for in the last year's naval appropriation bill, as rapidly as it can be done under the contract. And it also provides for the continuation of the operation of the Los Angeles in the same manner that it has been operated during the period of construction.

Mr. LANHAM. The construction of these two large dirigibles which have been authorized will necessarily require a considerable length of time. Consequently, by the end of the fiscal year we will have three lighter-than-air ships in the Army and practically but one in the Navy—the Los Angeles—because the two large ones will be under construction.

It has been my privilege to give considerable study to the operation of lighter-than-air craft. That study was stimulated in the first instance somewhat by reason of the fact that the helium production plant was located in the district that I have the honor to represent. Certainly I can not now be charged with any selfish motive in this regard, which might formerly have been imputed to me, because that plant is closed down and the new Government plant is set up 335 miles from Fort Worth in Amarillo, Tex., in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. JONES]. But my study has impressed me with the importance of our development in this line, because, I repeat, we are the only country that has this invaluable agent and asset of helium in any considerable volume. Other nations have sought for it, even going to the extent in Japan of attempting the hazardous undertaking of trying to find helium in the emanations of certain volcanic gases. And, now, the fact that other countries of the world are anxious to find helium within their boundaries and are spending their money in promoting lighter-than-air development—the great giant Graf Zeppelin of Germany having but recently made a trip across the Atlantic and back—shows that the rest of the world, not so favored as we are, is keenly alive to the possibilities of lighter-than-air craft. To me it seems almost preposterous to think that by the 30th of June of next year, favored and fortunate as we are, even for purposes of training personnel and of experimentation by land and by sea, we are going to have but three little ships in the Army and one large one in the Navy, which, according to the terms of the treaty, can not be used in military operations.

Should the foremost country in the world, favored by Providence in having a practically inexhaustible supply of this great agent, throw away its chances and opportunities, train no personnel, have no ships, when the other nations of the earth not so favored are proceeding diligently in the lighter-than-air field?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the conclusion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], though perhaps not for the same reasons. It seems to me that the Congress should not abandon lighter-than-air craft in the Army and the Navy. While at the present time there is doubt as to the real military value of large airships, owing to the development in airplanes, the field of airships has been by no means fully explored.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. In that connection, of course, the large ships will perhaps be more serviceable for the Navy, but those in the Army service are smaller ships, and it is not contemplated that they will be enlarged in size.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They have great potential possibilities. There has been very little developed in airships since the time that Count Zeppelin first built his large dirigible, and it would be a great mistake if, having the natural resources described by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], we were to abandon the experimentation and development of lighter-than-air ships. If there is one useful purpose of an army and navy in time of peace, it seems to me that it is along these lines in developing these new means of transportation, and I look at aviation as an agency of peace rather than as a weapon of war. We have the advantage of having an abundance of helium gas. We are certainly appropriating generously for the development of aviation, but I would not go along with the recommendation of the War Department to curtail along these lines. At the last world aviation conference held in Washington, I think it was brought out by some one that all of the discussion was on heavier-than-air planes, and very little was said concerning airships, because there was such little improvement and progress made in that field.

The lighter-than-air ships afford great possibility for the development of motors. With the new fuel used by the Germans in the Graf Zeppelin, which just made a round trip from Germany, and with the new ideas being put into the great dirigible now being built by the English, which ship will be ready in a few weeks, we ought to take advantage of the progress made by the English and the Germans and utilize the natural resources that we have and utilize the time and services of a large, efficient Air Corps and use some of the funds we are appropriating for the development of aviation and keep up the experimentation in the lighter-than-air ships. I for one say that we have not yet arrived at that time or stage of development where we can properly say, "Let us abandon the lighter-than-air ships."

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. In view of the fact that Scott Field is the largest lighter-than-air port in the United States, and in view of the fact that the gentleman says that this matter of lighter-than-air ships is in an experimental stage, does he feel that it would be proper to abandon this particular field, which is the greatest field in the country at the present time?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is but one of the details. I am never very much concerned and I can not get very much excited over the location of a field or barracks or experimental station. I always look at these things from a broad national viewpoint; it is a matter of indifference to me whether the field is at Scott Field or anywhere else, and I say that in due deference, because I believe the gentleman is entirely within his right in urging the particular field in his district.

Mr. IRWIN. I would say the same thing after the Government of the United States has expended millions of dollars there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am interested in the proposition in its broadest sense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, it is not the intention of the Air Corps to abandon either the balloons or airships. I had the matter up with both General Fechet and Mr. Davison. I have a similar letter from each and with the permission of the House I shall extend my remarks by inserting these letters at this time:

JANUARY 5, 1929.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JAMES: With reference to your letter of December 14 concerning Scott Field, I am inclosing a communication which is identical with a letter which I understand Mr. Davison has already forwarded to you.

Sincerely yours,

J. E. FECHET.
Major General, Air Corps, Chief of the Air Corps.

JANUARY 3, 1929.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JAMES: With reference to your letter of December 14 concerning Scott Field, the following data has been compiled:

a. Scott Field was established June 14, 1917; the land being leased by the War Department from that date until 1919, when it was purchased for $119,485.84. The area is approximately 626 acres.

b. Scott Field was first established for the purpose of primary heavier-than-air training.

c. Amount of appropriations: Permanent improvement, including original cost of land to June 30, 1928, approximately $3,561,056.67.

d. At present the Air Corps has located at Scott Field a balloon and airship school which has been suspended for the present fiscal year due to various causes. During the suspension of school activities the airship companies are operating as tactical organizations.

Inclosed is a copy of the recommendations made by me to The Adjutant General concerning the future of lighter-than-air. There is no intention of abandoning Scott Field. In war time this field will be the center for lighter-than-air training and the mobilization center for lighter-than-air organizations.

Sincerely yours,

J. E. FECHET,
Major General, Air Corps, Chief of the Air Corps.

[First indorsement]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF THE AIR CORPS,
Washington, D. C., October 6, 1928.

To: The Adjutant General, Washington, D. C.

In compliance with basic communication the following report is submitted. The report follows, in general, the form and captions as outlined in above-mentioned letter.

1. It is the opinion of this office that lighter-than-air craft are of great value and are necessary to the Army in war and that their operations should be continued during peace time in order to prepare for war activities. Although balloon companies were rendered inactive in 1922, it was not because balloons were considered as no future use in war. Balloons have in the past, and will continue to be in the future, the most efficient and effective means of observation of artillery fire and surveillance of limited areas when the ground observer is unable to properly function. It is readily seen that a balloon company, in peace time, although a very valuable asset as a training school for officers as well as for use in conjunction with ground troops, is not as necessary or important as heavier-than-air activities. With the limited appropriations available and the small size of the Army there are other activities which are of much more importance. It was necessary to curtail certain activities and it was believed to the best interest of all concerned that the balloon companies should be the ones to suffer. However, it is believed that balloons should again be used for work with the railroad artillery at Fort Eustis, Va., with the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, and possibly for use with the Second Division at Fort Sam Houston, in addition to other stations where it is desired that they cooperate with other arms. Their war-time function has not ceased or been changed. They are still considered our best means of observation in their particular line.

The development of the larger airships has been undertaken by the Navy as a result of an agreement between the members of the Joint Army and Navy Board with the understanding that when a satisfactory airship had been designed and tested that it would be available for the Army. In consequence very little, in fact no, experimenting had been done by the Army in the larger types of rigid airships. Although it is the opinion of this office that dirigibles will undoubtedly play a large part in the next war, especially in the transportation of personnel and supplies, nevertheless the Army is unable to carry out experiments and tests by virtue of the aforementioned agreement. However, the RS–1, a small semirigid airship, has been constructed by the Army at Scott Field, Ill., and considerable experimenting has been carried on with this particular type. Curtailment of funds prevent more thorough and exhaustive tests.

It is apparent that for coastwise patrolling the airship is a most valuable adjunct. The type now present in the Army is entirely too small for this purpose, and it is believed that the type developed by the Navy—that is, the Los Angeles—is too large. Therefore, considerable experimenting will have to be undertaken before this question can be definitely answered. However, the large airship affords great possibilities as a means of transporting limited personnel and supplies to reinforce our foreign possessions at the outbreak of war.

A. BALLOONS

(1) Free balloons: The free balloon is an instrument of training only. All types of lighter-than-air craft may at times become free balloons and must be operated in accordance with the laws of aerostatics. This is true of the captive observation balloon, should its cable break, and of the airship when the engines cease to function. It is, therefore, essential that the preliminary training of all pilots of lighter-than-air craft begin with training in free ballooning.

(2) Balloon, observation: The observation balloon, as its name implies, is a means of effecting aerial observation for the benefit of ground troops. It proved very effective during the last war, and is still considered an excellent method of observation for the adjustment of most types of artillery fire and the surveillance of certain areas of active operations. Because of the ability of the observer in the balloon to give his complete attention to the examination of his sector and because of the direct two-way telephonic communication available, the observation balloon provides an excellent method of carrying out general observation, command, and liaison missions over a limited area. The observation balloon should always be used in lieu of heavier-than-air craft, provided it can fulfill the mission. All balloon companies were placed on an inactive list by July, 1922. As a consequence, there has been little development of the observation balloon and the training and technique pertaining thereto since that date. The peace-time activities are covered in paragraph 1 above.

B. AIRSHIPS

The airship is used strategically or tactically in a situation favoring its employment as a complement or replacement of the airplane. Such conditions are cloudy or inclement weather, long-range operations by the aerial situation, and situations wherein the peculiar characteristics of airships make it a suitable agency for use in conjunction with or in lieu of heavier-than-air craft. The characteristics of the airship can be stated as follows:

(1) POWERS

(a) Ability to cruise for long periods of time.

(b) High percentage of useful load with a continued increase of percentage of useful load with an increase in size.

(c) Ability to navigate accurately under conditions of poor or no visibility.

(d) Ability to hover for extended periods at high ceiling or in lower altitude.

(e) Ability to "free balloon" during engine trouble or for the purpose of effecting surprise.

(f) Ability to fly in fog, clouds, and other kinds of inclement weather with less hazard than airplanes.

(g) Superior facilities and conditions for two-way communications due to greater weight-carrying capacity.

(2) LIMITATIONS

(a) Vulnerability. This characteristic will always remain with the lighter-than-air equipment until their speed will equal or surpass that of aircraft or until some means are effected of permitting the protection by either airplanes or machine-gun fire or possibly a combination of both. The vulnerability from fire caused by incendiary bullets or from explosion of its gases has been overcome by the use of helium.

(b) Comparative slow speed.

(c) Limited ceiling of the nonrigid and semirigid types.

(d) The difficulty of handling while on the ground. This difficulty is being lessened by the added use of mechanical appliances.

(3) MISSIONS

The airship is particularly well adapted to perform coastal and observation missions in coast defense, especially in those sectors where a landing in force is not probable but where raids may be expected. It is unlikely that there will be sufficient airplanes available for employment in such sectors in a major war.

The efficiency of such as are available can be greatly increased by operating them in conjunction with patrol areas which will perform much of the reconnaissance duty at ranges greater than can be covered by heavier-than-air craft. Airships in such employment will be able to spot hostile submarines to greater advantage than airplanes because of their ability to travel at much slower speed and, consequently, conduct a more thorough search. Airships can destroy submarines by bombing the same as by heavier-than-air craft. The ability to travel at slower speeds make the airship useful in inspecting friendly mine fields. Another employment mission for airships is in situations such as those present at the Panama Canal and the Hawaiian Islands where attack is likely to take the form of occasional raids, particularly from the air. It is believed that the airship can do much of the aerial patrolling, patrolling ranges greater than the radius of action of heavier-than-air equipment.

(4) AIRSHIPS, PRIMARY TRAINING

The function of the training type airship is to provide instruction in flying and in the principles of flight of lighter-than-air craft supplied with power. A small airship is used to furnish this necessary primary instruction.

(5) AIRSHIPS, OBSERVATION

Airships for observation will be of several different sizes, depending upon the type of observation work required. It is possible that there is a definite place for a small airship so equipped and rigged that it can be flown to a particular location, anchored by means of a cable and operated as a captive balloon. Such an observation airship could supplement a captive observation balloon to a certain extent. The large size airship will be required for observation missions at great distances or during weather in which it is impracticable for heavier-than-air craft to operate.

(6) AIRSHIPS, PATROLLING

The function of the patrolling airship is that of furnishing continuous patrol over large stretches of border area, sea area, or seacoast. Such an airship, by virtue of its ability to remain in the air for long periods, can furnish an effective and continuous patrol. The size of the airship will be dictated by the distance to be flown, frequency of patrols, and altitude required. The ability of the airship to hover over a given point for detailed observation and to remain on patrol for a long period with a small crew and without great apparent hardship or fatigue on the crew gives to this type of craft a distinct advantage for patrol over long stretches or over great areas.

(7) AIRSHIPS, CARGO

Although there has not been a great amount of work done along this line, nevertheless it presents great possibilities and undoubtedly in future wars will play an important rôle. It can be visualized that the day is not far distant when it would be possible to send a pursuit group by lighter-than-air craft from the Pacific coast to Hawaii. It also has possibilities as a means for the evacuation of the sick and dangerously wounded to bases in the zone of the interior.

It is believed that further experiments will disclose a very important rôle for this type as a medium of transportation for personnel and supplies from base depot to advance depot; points in the zone of interior to points in the communications zone; method of rapidly reinforcing our foreign possessions, particularly Panama and Hawaii, and like uses.

a. Present equipment: The Nineteenth Airship Company now maintains in commission two airships of the TC type. The equipment of Scott Field consists of three TC type airships and two of the TA type, together with the necessary spares. These are used for training purposes. There are also at Scott Field, undergoing service test, airships of the TE and TF types. The TE type is intended, if satisfactory, to replace the TA type for training purposes. The RS–1 is also in commission at Scott Field.

The present lighter-than-air organization is as follows:

Station	Organization	Enlisted strength
Langley Field, Va	Nineteenth Airship Company	120
Scott Field, Ill	Eighth Airship Company	116
Do	Ninth Airship Company	117
Do	Twelfth Airship Company	123
Do	Twenty-fourth Airship Service Company.	100

The Air Corps 5-year program provides that with the second increment of personnel which was to be made on July 1, 1928, the Eighth, Ninth, and Twelfth Airship Companies, at Scott Field, Ill., be brought to an enlisted strength of 130 men each, and that the Sixteenth Airship Company be organized with a strength of 130 men.

To date none of these increments have been added, nor has the Sixteenth Airship Company been organized.

b. Balloons: The 5-year program should be carried out as approved except that two captive balloons be temporarily furnished each Airship Company in addition to their present equipment as soon as the equipment is available and hangar space can be obtained.

AIRSHIPS

The 5-year program which is now being carried out should not be materially changed, and the airship policy, increase in personnel, equipment, etc., should be followed as given in this program except for such minor changes and modifications as are necessary from time to time.

c. In order to carry out the recommendation in paragraph b (balloons) above, it will be necessary to determine the actual amount of equipment necessary—i. e., balloons, balloon winches, etc.—before a comprehensive statement can be furnished. Inasmuch as the Budget hearings for the 1930 fiscal year are already under way, it is thought proper to thoroughly study this matter and include the funds necessary in the 1931 estimate rather than attempt to hurry the matter and include the items in the 1930 fiscal year funds. A study covering this proposed change will be immediately undertaken and definite recommendations will be furnished your office at the earliest possible date.

As previously stated, the cessation of balloon activities and curtailment of activities is not as a result of the premise that they had little or no place in the scheme of national defense but was required in order to keep the Air Corps funds within the limit prescribed and at the same time carry out the best heavier-than-air program possible. A study of the appropriations in the past few years will disclose the fact that funds for lighter-than-air activities have continually diminished until the point was reached in the 1930 fiscal year funds when nothing was included. It is proposed to include funds for this branch in the 1931 fiscal year appropriation and gradually bring back into being a well-balanced and active lighter-than-air component.

d. The Air Corps Balloon and Airship School had been rendered inactive for the fiscal year 1929 per third indorsement, Adjutant General's Office, September 12, 1928, file A. G. 352, A. C. Bln. & Airship Sch. (8–28–28) Misc. (C).

J. E. FECHET,
Major General, Air Corps, Chief of the Air Corps.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRWIN] would not make any difference either way, whether you adopt it or reject it, because if you will read the rest of the paragraph you will see that it has already been allotted to different places.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. What the gentleman should do, as I advised him, is, instead of adding $250,000 to this bill, to go to the Director of the Budget and get a supplemental estimate and have it come up in the deficiency appropriation bill, and get it in that way.

Mr. IRWIN. I am not asking for an appropriation. I am asking that this language be cut out in this amendment prior to asking for an appropriation later. I am just asking that this proviso be cut out—that is, the whole amendment—because I feel it is a discrimination, and if we want to continue lighter-than-air activities I do not think we ought to discriminate against this field at this time. I am not asking for an appropriation now, but I expect to later.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman from Michigan will yield for a question in reference to the program he is reading. I notice on page 34 this bill carries this proviso:

No part thereof may be expended for the production of lighter-than-air equipment.

Will not that language, if it stays in, prevent the use of any money provided in this bill for construction of lighter-than-air equipment?

Mr. JAMES. For the present year; yes.

Mr. JONES. Let me ask this question: What about the reconditioning and remodeling of the RS–1, which they claim has depreciated? I understand they desire to recondition, remodel, and recover the RS–1, and I wondered if this clause here would not prevent that being done?

Mr. TABER. This has nothing to do with anything whatever of the regular Air Service appropriation. It simply relates to the construction of barracks and quarters.

Mr. JONES. I understand that, but I call attention to the language on page 34 and ask if that prevents them from going ahead with lighter-than-air matters?

Mr. TABER. No——

Mr. JONES. "For experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft."

Mr. TABER. It does prevent the building of lighter-than-air craft with any of the money, but does not——

Mr. JONES. It says here "and their equipment, experimental, and research work."

Mr. TABER. No; it says lighter-than-air equipment, and that means new and not replacement or reconditioning or recovering. It means the construction of new equipment.

Mr. JONES. To follow it up it says here that no part thereof may be expended for production of lighter-than-air equipment. Would that in any way prevent the reconditioning or remodeling or recovering of a ship they have now on hand?

Mr. TABER. Not reconditioning or repair of that which they have on hand.

Mr. JONES. Then it was not the intention of the committee in putting this language in any way to interfere with the program of remodeling and recovering the RS–1 should they decide to do so?

Mr. TABER. Not at all.

Mr. JONES. That could be undertaken notwithstanding that provision?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I referred to that in my remarks, and I had an amendment prepared to strike out that language, but in view of what was stated by the chairman I thought it advisable not to offer it.

Mr. JONES. I have prepared an amendment but in view of the assurances received I shall not offer it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of obtaining information. After listening very carefully I could not but reach the conclusion that that proviso means nothing according to the committee. It makes no difference whether it is stricken out or left in the bill.

Mr. TABER. I would say if it was stricken out it would not mean the construction of these barracks.

Mr. SCHAFER. If this proviso is stricken out, will the War Department have authority to use any of the appropriation for that particular field?

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then it does not mean anything, and I do not think the House should adopt the policy of putting language in a bill that does not mean anything.

Mr. BARBOUR. The appropriation was in the bill last year, and it is rewritten in the bill this year. There is no Budget estimate for it. In all probability the War Department would not use any of it for Scott Field, there being no Budget estimate for it in connection with this bill. But they probably would have a right to do it if they undertook to do it deliberately. They could use some of this money for Scott Field, but I do not think there is any probability that they will do it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then why not strike it out? If you add two or three lines of language to this bill and two or three lines of language to another bill, lines of language that do not mean anything, it adds to the expense of printing, to say the least.

Mr. DYER. It would be economy to strike it out?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes. However, I think there is something deeper in this proviso than appears on the surface. If this proviso is left in the bill, I venture to say that in the future should the gentleman from Illinois request the Budget to approve appropriations for this field that he will be told that they will not be approved because Congress by adopting the proviso had indicated a policy against further appropirations for this field.

Mr. IRWIN. The language of this bill specifically prohibits the War Department from using it at all. There might be some contingency arising whereby they might have occasion to use some of the money, and therefore I am objecting to this proviso.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think the gentleman's amendment is proper. The House should adopt it by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. JAMES. Did not the Budget send an estimate of $100,000 last year, which was reported by your committee and which was passed by the House and stricken out by the Senate?

Mr. BARBOUR. This is what happened: This language provides that none of this money shall be used at Scott Field. That was the action of Congress in the 1929 act, and it will be the action of Congress if this bill carries this language. Last year it was ratified and adopted by both Houses.

Mr. DYER. No matter what the necessities may be as they arise, they could not use any of this money for this purpose?

Mr. BARBOUR. In view of the status of lighter-than-air ships in the Army, I think we should have this language until some definite decision is made by the Army as to what the policy shall be. A new helium plant is being constructed at this time down at Amarillo, Tex. The Navy is providing $8,000,000 for its experimental work in connection with lighter-than-air ships and the Army will carry out its policies at the present time. In view of the activities of the Navy there is no reason why the two branches of the Government should be experimenting along the same line and spending perhaps twice as much money as may be necessary.

Mr. IRWIN. The reason why I press the amendment is that if there should be a contingency arising the Government could not spend a dollar on this project. That is the reason why I want the language eliminated. Something might turn up in 12 months by which you might want to do some building. Therefore I think the War Department ought not to be hampered by this language.

Mr. BARBOUR. The War Department does not feel that it is hampered. They are not interested one way or another.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. We might have a fire out there or something of that kind.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; and then the matter could be reached in a deficiency bill. We have fires at Army posts off and on, and they are always taken care of. We had one at Fort Sill a year or so ago.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And one the other night at Bolling Field.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; they have had several over at Bolling Field. They are taken care of.

Mr. IRWIN. After Congress adjourns there might be a fire, and we could not then appropriate money for Scott Field.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then we might have an extra session.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I want to interrogate the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. When I came into the Chamber one gentleman was speaking of the helium situation.

Mr. LANHAM. Did the gentleman understand me to say there was not enough helium?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman misunderstood me. I think there is sufficient helium, and I contend further that, if we reduce our operations in lighter-than-air craft, the new plant at Amarillo, Tex., with its possible production at a very low cost, will produce more helium than the available ships can take.

Mr. SHREVE. I am glad to have that statement. The committee having charge of the matter was desirous of furnishing all the helium required by the Army and the Navy, and we really made another appropriation and set aside $500,000 more to be used at the discretion of the President.

Mr. LANHAM. I commend the committee and the gentleman's activity in that regard. We have plenty of helium, and the means are available for producing helium, and all we are concerned about now is to have the proper airships into which to put that helium.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact and does not the evidence show that there is much helium going to waste in gas fields in which the plants being operated by the Bureau of Mines are not located?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; and we have been giving that consideration. What we are endeavoring to do now is to secure a great area of land that the Government will own where helium will be produced as found necessary and where there will be no leakage and wastage.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. What I am driving at is to have a little more conservation, for the reason that I know in the Osage Nation, in my district, there is a certain percentage of helium in the gas, every bit of it, and it is going to waste, and in addition to producing helium in a Government plant I was wondering whether or not your committee had given consideration to the question of conserving that which is being destroyed.

Mr. SHREVE. I will say we are making a study of the whole helium-bearing section, with the idea in mind of determining just what eventually should be done in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IRWIN) there were—ayes 34, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking for a little general information relative to the item in connection with the construction of military posts. I think everyone has recognized for some time that there was a very urgent need for the construction of proper barracks or military posts in order to provide comfortable and sanitary quarters for our troops. I wonder just to what extent the War Department has proceeded in the way of the construction of barracks. In other words, what percentage of the work has been accomplished or will be accomplished with the appropriation carried in this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. Was that question directed to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; I ask for that information from the gentleman from California who, of course, is fully advised on the subject.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that in the report on the bill, page 10, there is a statement showing the construction that will be undertaken under this appropriation. It shows all of the various posts at which moneys will be spent under this appropriation for permanent construction, the character of the construction, and the estimated cost of each building.

Mr. BYRNS. That does not give the information I wanted. This program covers a period of years. When is all this work to be completed, how much has been expended up to this time, and how much is it contemplated will be expended?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the money carried in this bill, together with the contract authorization of $3,000,000, carries the amount that will be provided in 1930 up to almost $40,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS. That will have been appropriated if this appropriation is made?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; including the items in this bill. Their whole program of permanent construction at posts amounts to something over $100,000,000. There is in the hearings a table showing the status at the present time of every project for which we have made appropriations heretofore. The statement in the report shows the posts at which the money carried in the 1930 bill will be expended and the character of the buildings which will be erected. There is a statement in the hearings showing the status at the present time of each of the buildings heretofore appropriated for, some practically completed, others in course of construction and some for which they are preparing plans and specifications. Now, as to the results that have been accomplished by this building program—and I think that is what the gentleman from Tennessee is interested in—I will say that the sum carried in the 1930 bill, plus the contract authorization of $3,000,000 carried in this bill and prior appropriations will make provision for 23,798 enlisted men, 797 noncommissioned officers, 727 officers, 1,408 hospital beds, and 192 nurses.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman says $40,000,000 will have been appropriated and that it will require more than $100,000,000 to complete the program. Does that mean in addition to the $40,000,000?

Mr. BARBOUR. As I understand it that is the estimate of the War Department for the complete housing program.

Mr. COLLINS. If the gentleman will yield, I think the figures show that the total building program will be around $200,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS. That appears to me to be quite a sum.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that that has not all been authorized as yet.

Mr. BYRNS. It has not been authorized?

Mr. BARBOUR. No.

Mr. BYRNS. I was just wondering as to the character of these quarters.

Mr. BARBOUR. They are modern buildings, very well constructed, with all the latest improvements in the way of sanitary plumbing and things of that kind. They are buildings in which they take into consideration the surrounding landscape and they are appropriate to the particular location. They are very fine, comfortable buildings, and well constructed.

Mr. BYRNS. I think everyone wants to see these buildings provided in a manner that will be comfortable, sanitary, and architectural to a certain extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. If we are going to proceed with a plan that will involve $200,000,000 in the construction of these quarters, that is a greater sum than I anticipated would be necessary, and I have wondered just how much of that is being spent in providing large and handsome homes for major officers, so to speak.

Mr. BARBOUR. I would state to the gentleman from Tennessee that, so far as the officers are concerned, they have a fixed price for officers' quarters, $14,500 for an officer with the rank of major or above and $12,500 for captains and lieutenants. There was a limitation of less than that up until a short time ago, and an act was passed by Congress increasing the amount of the officers' quarters, because it was found they could not build satisfactory quarters with the former amount that was permitted by law. So we increased it about $2,000 on each class of quarters.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Are these posts being constructed under what might be called one general plan, or are we having a different plan and different kind of construction and architecture for each post as it is being built?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is a general plan to a certain extent, depending upon the use or the character of the building, for instance, whether barracks or officers' quarters. The plans are modified to meet the climatic conditions of various sections of the country. For instance, in the northeastern section of the country they have one type of building.

In California we are told that they are building their barracks of the Spanish type of architecture with tiled roofs and other characteristics of the Spanish type. In the southern section of the country I understand they are using the so-called southern type of architecture, and in the other parts the old Colonial type.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman knows that some of us for years contended with reference to the construction of buildings for post-office purposes that there should be a general type adopted for buildings that were to cost something like the same amount and cut out so much expense for architects and for other professional services. Since they are paid upon a percentage basis, it costs a great deal to secure these professional services. The Treasury Department, as I understand, for some years has been conforming to this idea. Now, why carry in this bill continually a provision making it possible to expend unnamed and unknown sums for architects and professional services and things of that sort. It seems to me a great deal of money could be saved by adopting some general type or form for these barracks. We could at least save a little of this $200,000,000 that is going to be expended for this very worthy purpose. I am not criticizing the purpose for which the money is being expended.

Mr. BARBOUR. We went into that matter with the Quartermaster General, and General Cheatham stated to the committee that they only employed architects in very rare instances. Most of the work is done by the architects of the Quartermaster Corps. There are cases where they like to have their building plans, when completed, looked over by an architect who is located in that particular section of the country and is familiar with conditions there and have possibly some suggestions made which would be valuable. The purpose of carrying this provision in the bill is to permit them to do that. We are told by the Quartermaster General that only in rare cases do they employ these architects. Most of the work is done by their own architects.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee a moment. I have a telegram from Florida's adjutant general of our National Guard relative to the appropriation for that service, and I would like to know how the appropriation in this bill compares with the one we passed last year; is the appropriation for this purpose as liberal or more liberal?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Florida that we are coming to that item later in the bill, and it is the expectation of the committee that there will be a full and free discussion of it, as much so as is possible, having due regard to the time available.

Mr. GREEN. Does this bill provide a sufficient appropriation for the National Guard, and is it as much as the appropriation last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. The total appropriation for the National Guard is larger than it was last year. I have in mind the matter that the gentleman from Florida refers to and I understand that an amendment will be offered on the floor, and it is our purpose to go into the matter fully at that time.

Mr. GREEN. I appreciate the information and would like to say that it is our desire to ably and well take care of this item.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to join in the sentiment of the gentleman from Florida. I understand there will be an amendment of some $400,000 additional, will there not?

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee is not going to offer it. All we have to go on is the report that we hear. We have not seen the amendment. We are getting our information from telegrams coming to the Members of Congress from various sections of the country.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The National Guard feels they should have about $400,000 more than is provided in the bill, does it not?

Mr. BARBOUR. I would not say that the National Guard feels that way although some persons connected with the National Guard are urging increased appropriations for one or two items. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland, as I stated to the gentleman from Florida, that we are going into the matter fully at the proper time.

Mr. GREEN. We trust the committee will look with favor on this amendment and help us to adopt it. Our National Guard serves a great purpose and is ready to rescue in disaster, danger, or peril, and I want it well provided for.

Mr. BARBOUR. We will present the views of the committee in regard to the matter and I presume that the gentlemen offering the amendment will present their views. It is an item that we are going to reach later in the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was hopeful the committee would give the matter consideration in advance so they would not oppose us.

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee has already given careful consideration to all these items.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is there not some money that might be reappropriated?

Mr. BARBOUR. We considered all those matters. I might say to the gentleman that I think we will be able to show that the National Guard is being pretty well taken care of by this bill.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BARRACKS AND QUARTERS AND OTHER BUILDINGS AND UTILITIES

For all expenses incident to the construction, installation, operation, and maintenance of buildings, utilities, appurtenances, and accessories necessary for the shelter, protection, and accommodation of the Army and its personnel and property, where not specifically provided for in other appropriations, including personal services, purchase and repair of furniture for quarters for officers, warrant officers, and noncommissioned officers, and officers' messes and wall lockers and refrigerators for Government-owned buildings as may be approved by the Secretary of War, care and improvement of grounds, flooring and framing for tents, rental of buildings and grounds for military purposes and lodgings for recruits and applicants for enlistment, water supply, sewer and fire-alarm systems, fire apparatus, roads, walks, wharves, drainage, dredging channels, purchase of water, and disposal of sewage, $11,648,041: Provided, That not more than 19 procurement-planning offices may be maintained during the fiscal year 1930, and not more than 1 such office may be maintained in any city. Where space was occupied in a public building on December 31, 1928, wholly or in part for procurement-planning work, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for renting space for procurement-planning work in a city where such public space was so occupied: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental of offices, garages, and stables for military attachés: Provided further, That not exceeding $100,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the proviso appearing on page 36, between lines 12 and 20.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WAINWRIGHT: On page 36, line 12, after the figures, strike out all down to and including the word "occupied," in line 20.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this proviso sought to be stricken from the bill refers to the industrial procurement planning by the Assistant Secretary of War.

I took occasion yesterday, in discussing an amendment I offered, also curtailing, or seeking to curtail, the activities of the Secretary of War in regard to the number of officers that may be assigned to him, to explain the importance of this work. The Assistant Secretary of War, by virtue of the duty cast upon him by section 5–A of the national defense act, is seeking to fulfill his duty to assure adequate supplies, matériel, and industrial organizations for war-time needs, namely, for the event of another war. It is a tremendous task. The duty was cast upon the Assistant Secretary of War as the result of our experience in the Great War, where we all know the tremendous delay and extravagance and the enormous dislocation of industry that then ensued from our having no plan or made any provision for procuring necessary supplies. This responsibility that is cast upon him relates to planning to take care of the purchase of supplies that may run into billions of dollars. In the late war we know they ran into sums way over twenty billions of dollars. Think how much less the burden of expense of that war might have been had we made some such provision.

As was brought out yesterday, the entire expense of the Assistant Secretary of War is incurred in connection with this planning, outside of the salaries of the Regular Army officers, and is less than one-quarter of a million dollars.

It is manifest that the work must be done throughout the country where the supply services of the Army are located. That requires office space in many places.

What is this proviso? That there shall be not more than one office in any city where these procurement planning activities are carried on; that in any city where at the end of the last fiscal year an office for such work was being maintained in a public building, thereafter from now on no office can be maintained in any other than a building or office space rented.

That means that if the Assistant Secretary of War has an office in connection with the bureau of engineers, where planning in regard to what might be engineers' supplies in case of war, or with the Quartermaster General's Department for quartermaster supplies, he will be prohibited from having any other office in that city for his planning activities for the other services, even though those other services may have their own separate offices; that is to say, that all the planning activities of the Assistant Secretary for all the several services must be crowded into one office.

Now, it is as unreasonable to expect that all of the activities should be crowded into one office as it would be to require that all of the services could be combined into one service. So far as the second part of the amendment is concerned, namely, that where he is now in a public building, he can never be located in any other than a public building. Suppose, as may be the case, the engineer office that supplies planning is in a public building. If he was crowded out of the building, if it had to leave that office for any reason, if it was torn down, the result would be that, even during the time another public building was being erected, he could never thereafter have rented space anywhere else.

The aggregate they are expending for rent to-day is only $15,000. I have a list here of 18 offices. They do not seem to be paying over $800 in any one city.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. To tie the Assistant Secretary down to any such restriction will result in a complete dislocation and curtailment of the work as at present being carried on and can not fail to be little short of disastrous.

I take occasion to again emphasize the fact that while we are providing to spend over $400,000,000 in this Army appropriation bill it seems unreasonable to adopt a hampering clause like this, to obstruct and curtail this transcendentally important activity of the Army, relating to the possible procurement of millions if not billions of dollars of supplies where we can, under a proper industrial plan, effect great economies in the event of another war.

I urge the committee to strike out this clause and not to hamper in this manner the present very efficient Assistant Secretary of War, who is doing his best, and a very good best, to meet the great responsibility cast upon him by law. A very small amount of money is involved. The economy that would be effected by this proviso would be far out of proportion to the great disadvantage of the Government in tying down this work in the manner proposed. I urge that this amendment be adopted and this proviso stricken from the bill.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Under the present regulations of the Army they have 48 offices. Under the proposed plan of the bill we cut those offices down to 19. We do not take away from any city an office, but we are trying to place in these different cities where they have a number of different offices one main office, combining them into one. These offices all relate to the procurement planning of the United States Army. For instance, in the city of San Francisco they have an office for the ordnance procurement planning, and another one for the Quartermaster's Corps, another for the Air Corps, the Signal Corps, the Chemical Warfare, and also the Engineers—seven different procurement offices for the Army in that one city. All those offices should be combined in one. Those men are not there all of the time. Under this planning these officers go out to different manufacturing plants, and things of that kind, and it is a useless expense to have seven different offices where one will be sufficient. We are not taking away an office from any of the cities that have one. This is a matter of economy. There is no reason why, when there is more than one office in a city, they can not be combined into one office. We are leaving an office in every city that now has one. There are 19 cities which now have procurement offices for the Army, and under the bill it provides one office for each of the cities now having one.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I have here a list of offices, and in San Francisco there are only four.

Mr. CLAGUE. We have a list of offices also.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Not seven, but four, and there are more in San Francisco than in any other city. No other city appears to have more than three.

Mr. CLAGUE. We have a map here furnished by the War Department that shows that in the city of San Francisco they have seven. They have seven in the city of New York, and a large number in other cities, and all of these in Chicago, Cleveland, New York, and San Francisco, or anywhere else can be combined into one office in each city. It is time that we had some efficiency. I have a very high regard for the Secretary of War; he is a well-equipped member of the Cabinet, but it is about time that in many of these places where we are spending large amounts of money we have a little efficiency. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not the Secretary of War that shapes the policy. It is the General Staff. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are simply rubber stamps.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF HOSPITALS

For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, and for temporary hospitals in standing camps and cantonments; for the alteration of permanent buildings at posts for use as hospitals, construction and repair of temporary hospital buildings at permanent posts, construction and repair of temporary general hospitals, rental or purchase of grounds, and rental and alteration of buildings for use for hospital purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including necessary temporary quarters for hospital personnel, outbuildings, heating and laundry apparatus, plumbing, water and sewers, and electric work, cooking apparatus, and roads and walks for the same, $578,880: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of new hospitals.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: On page 29, line 1, strike out "$578,880" and insert "$603,880," and add the following after the word "hospitals," at the end of line 2: "Provided, That out of this sum herein appropriated there shall be used $25,000 for the construction of a veterinary hospital at Fort Bliss, Tex., on lands now owned by the Federal Government and not at present in use for military purposes."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the following letter from the Surgeon General of the Army be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, December 19, 1928.

Hon. C. B. HUDSPETH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HUDSPETH: It was gratifying to me to have your inquiry of December 15 with reference to the need of a veterinary hospital at Fort Bliss. I have personal knowledge of the inadequacy of the veterinary hospital arrangements at Fort Bliss, which are a makeshift and of a temporary nature.

Since Fort Bliss has a larger number of mounted troops than any other station in the Army, it is my opinion that they are entitled to the modern veterinary hospital building and equipment, as provided in blue prints and specifications on file in this office and approved by the construction division of the Quartermaster General's office. An up-to-date veterinary hospital of a size to provide accommodations at Fort Bliss is estimated to cost approximately $25,000.

A necessary adjunct to the proposed hospital is an isolation ward to be used for the purpose of isolating animals suffering from contagious diseases, and especially for the purpose of isolating newly purchased remounts from the animals of the garrison, and it is estimated that this building will cost approximately $10,000. Such construction has been carefully considered, and while these buildings will provide adequate hospital facilities for the animals at Fort Bliss under normal conditions, it is believed that nothing less would suffice.

More than a year ago the veterinary division and the supply division of this office made an effort to procure a small but efficient veterinary hospital for Fort Clark, Tex., and we thought that we were about to get it, when it was discovered that the money appropriated for construction and repairs was interpreted as being for "repairs" only. It therefore will be necessary to have a sufficient sum of money appropriated for the specific purpose of such construction at Fort Bliss; and inasmuch as this office is strongly in favor of this much-needed improvement, we will render every assistance possible that you may desire.

I am very much obliged to you for your interest in this matter; and with the season's greetings for you and your family, believe me,

Very sincerely yours,

M. W. IRELAND,
Major General, the Surgeon General.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I trust that my friend from California will not insist upon his point of order. This sum is recommended by the Surgeon General of the Army. This post at Fort Bliss is the largest Cavalry post in the United States. They have 5,000 or 6,000 cavalry horses there. Their loss every year from disease which this hospital would prevent is much greater than the sum we are asking for.

Mr. BARBOUR. I shall be compelled to insist upon the point of order because there has been no authorization for this construction. We can not appropriate in this bill for a building not authorized. The proper procedure would be to have a bill introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and have the construction authorized, then the appropriation will follow.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The appropriation here, under the heading I seek to amend, is, "For construction and repair to hospitals."

Mr. BARBOUR. That means those that have already been authorized by law.

Mr. HUDSPETH. This would be an adjunct. I take it that it would be a continuing project, according to the language used by the Surgeon General.

Mr. BARBOUR. We have in this bill over $17,000,000 all together in appropriations and authorizations for new construction, all of which has been authorized by law. We have no right to include an item in the bill that has not been authorized by law. It is not that I object to the item, because I know nothing about it, other than what the gentleman has stated.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The Surgeon General states that they now have a makeshift hospital there. This is to construct an addition to that which has been held by various chairmen as a continuing project.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the conditions are as they are reported to be at Fort Bliss, it seems to me that it would be the duty of the War Department to ask for authorization to construct a veterinary hospital there.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As the gentleman will see by the statement there, they thought they had the funds to build this hospital in a former appropriation; but find that they could not use it because it did not provide for a specific hospital at Fort Bliss.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Military Affairs Committee is considering these authorization items all of the time, and the regular procedure would be to first get an authorization and then afterwards the appropriation would follow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am not going to take up the time of the committee, but my idea from the language of the letter from Surgeon General Ireland is that it is a continuing project, and therefore it is, as held by Mr. Towner when chairman of the committee—the gentleman will recall in reference to the land purchased at Leon Springs and El Paso—where he held that it was a continuing contract, and therefore it was in order. I think under that decision it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any knowledge of an act of legislation authorizing the erection of a veterinary hospital at Fort Bliss?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No. There is a hospital, a makeshift, as General Ireland says. I think this project is a continuing project, but all the information I have is the letter from General Ireland. I know they have an old makeshift hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I understood from the reading of the amendment that it calls for the construction of a new veterinary hospital at Fort Bliss.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair does not think the construction of a new veterinary hospital at Fort Bliss, Tex., is in continuation of work on any project that is now in existence, a continuing project. As the Chair understands, it is not for the repair of an existing building but a new project, and therefore the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

AIR CORPS

AIR CORPS, ARMY

For creating, maintaining, and operating at established flying schools and balloon schools courses of instruction for officers, students, and enlisted men, including cost of equipment and supplies necessary for instruction, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments and materials for theoretical and practical instruction; for maintenance, repair, storage, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, materials, gas plants, hangars and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith and the establishment of landing and take-off runways; for purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs in connection with aerial photography; improvement, equipment, maintenance, and operation of plants for testing and experimental work, and procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, gas and sewerage, including maintenance, operation, and repair of such utilities at such plants; for the procurement of helium gas; salaries and wages of civilian employees as may be necessary, and payment of their traveling and other necessary expenses as authorized by existing law; transportation of materials in connection with consolidation of Air Corps activities; experimental investigation and purchase and development of new types of aircraft, accessories thereto, and aviation engines, including plans, drawings, and specifications thereof, and the purchase of letters patent, applications for letters patents, licenses under letters patent and applications for letters patent for the purchase, manufacture, and construction of balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith; for the marking of military airways where the purchase of land is not involved; for the purchase, manufacture, and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purchases; for all necessary expenses connected with the sale or disposal of surplus or obsolete aeronautical equipment, and the rental of buildings, and other facilities for the handling or storage of such equipment; for the services of not more than four consulting engineers at expermiental stations of the Air Corps as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 a day for not exceeding 50 days each and necessary traveling expenses; purchase of special apparatus and appliances, repairs and replacements of same used in connection with special scientific medical research in the Air Corps; for maintenance and operation of such Air Corps printing plants outside of the District of Columbia as may be authorized in accordance with law; for publications, station libraries, special furniture, supplies, and equipment for offices, shops, and laboratories; for special services, including the salvaging of wrecked aircraft, $33,359,409: Provided, That not to exceed $3,026,199 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees other than those employed in experimental and research work; not exceeding $50,000 may be expended for the procurement of helium, of which sum such amounts as may be required may be transferred in advance to the Bureau of Mines; not exceeding $2,255,930 may be expended for experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment, including the pay of necessary civilian employees; no part thereof may be expended for the production of lighter-than-air equipment; not exceeding $3,267,000 may be expended for improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants for the Regular Army and for such other markings and fuel supply stations and temporary shelter as may be necessary; not less than $17,439,280 shall be expended for the production or purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories, of which not to exceed $2,250,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization for these purposes carried in the War Department appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929; and not more than $6,000 may be expended for settlement of claims (not exceeding $250 each) for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post and approved by the Chief of Air Corps and the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the sum of $25,000 of the appropriation for Air Service, Army, fiscal year 1927, shall remain available until June 30, 1930, for the payment of obligations incurred under contracts executed prior to July 1, 1927: Provided further, That section 3648, Revised Statutes (U. S. C. p. 1009, sec. 529), shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under this title shall be used for the purpose of giving exhibition flights to the public other than those under the control and direction of the War Department, and if such flights are given by Army personnel upon other than Government fields a bond of indemnity, in such sum as the Secretary of War may require for damages to person or property, shall be furnished the Government by the parties desiring the exhibition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 36, line 3, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That none of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, repair, or upkeep of any airplane after July 1, 1929, which is equipped or propelled by a Liberty motor or by any motor or airplane engine purchased or constructed prior to July 1, 1920."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to prevent the use of obsolete motors in new airplanes. We had after the war a large supply of Liberty motors. We have been using those motors ever since. Some of them have been remodeled and rebuilt, it is true, but they are not satisfactory compared with motors available to-day. Now you will hear from the committee telling us that they have had some understanding with the War Department that they would not put these old motors on new airplanes. I have just been informed accurately from authoritative sources down at Dayton that they do intend to put some of these old motors in new training planes. This is the year 1929—not 1919. There might have been justification for using the Liberty motors in 1917–18, but there is no justification in putting those motors in a plane in 1929 and 1930. We are appropriating $17,000,000 for new planes, and, Mr. Chairman, it is not economy for us to buy new planes and put old motors in them. One forced landing and crash may cost the price of the plane. Surely that is not economy; and besides, if we are to make progress in aviation we must develop motor construction as well as plane construction. We have developed some very satisfactory types of motors in this country and should use them. The records which we have acquired in the last two or three years speak for themselves as to the progress made in motor development, so I want to urge the very serious consideration of my amendment. It so happens that the gentleman sitting on my left at this moment, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], in flying from Langley Field last year in one of the up-to-date bombing planes equipped with three Liberty motors, had to make a forced landing, and it happens every day.

I know a great many of the flyers, some old in the service with me, with whom I have kept in contact; and I have not heard of one flyer in the Army Air Service who recommends the continued use of the Liberty motor in these new planes. And, gentlemen, it is not economy; quite the contrary. My amendment will be conducive not only to the development of motors but also conducive to the morale of the force. I know of no new planes and can not think of a solitary new plane sold to-day that uses the old Liberty motor. I hope my amendment will be approved.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the representatives of the Air Corps who appeared before the subcommittee at the hearings stated positively that they did not intend to use any of the money carried in this bill to build airplanes equipped with Liberty motors. It was stated to be the intention of the Air Corps not hereafter to equip any new airplane with Liberty motors, but simply to retain the Liberty motors they now have on hand for the replacement and repair of Liberty-motored planes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment would not prevent that.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the intention of the Air Corps. The only question that arises is the advisability of putting that language in the bill when the Air Corps does not intend to use Liberty motors in new construction anyway. I have no particular objection to the amendment down to the word "motor," and I would like to ask the gentleman from New York as to the effect of the following words, "on hand in airplane experiments since July 1, 1920"? Might not that prevent the use of a motor more recent and more highly developed than a Liberty motor in replacing motors already in planes?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it is since 1920, there is no such animal as the gentleman describes. There is no question about it.

Mr. BARBOUR. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the officials of the Air Corps stated positively that they did not intend to use the Liberty motors after July 1, 1929, and therefore there would be no reason for having this amendment in the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. TABER. This committee in its hearings and in its conduct right along has repeatedly urged the War Department not to use the Liberty motors. We have their promise now, and their estimate is based on their leaving out the Liberty motors. It is all buttoned up. Why disturb it?

Mr. BARBOUR. Secretary Davison gave his opinion in regard to the use of Liberty motors when the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] asked him the question—

There is nothing provided in the estimates before us at this time for planes equipped with Liberty motors?

Mr. DAVISON. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. That is, for the construction of such new planes?

Mr. DAVISON. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Take the planes that are equipped with Liberty motors, and the planes that will be reequipped with Liberty motors. Would you say those planes will be unsafe to use?

Mr. DAVISON. It is awfully hard to answer that question. I am perfectly willing to fly in them, and I do it a good deal, and so does General Fechet. But it is much safer to fly in machines with the modern motors. I do not see how you can get away from that relative proposition, or that relative question.

It was positively stated there and in other places in the hearings that they did not intend to use any more Liberty motors in new construction after July 1, 1929.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. How recently have they used these old motors in these planes?

Mr. BARBOUR. In the current year, in training planes.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the gentleman think there would be any harm in adopting that amendment offered by the gentleman from New York in view of what has happened recently?

Mr. BARBOUR. There would not be any use in putting it in, because they are not going to use them anyway.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. There are some 3,000 of these Liberty motors in the warehouse. We do not know what the attitude of a possibly different personnel in charge of aviation may be. I think it would be well to provide by law that there shall be no new planes equipped with Liberty motors. I see no objection to putting the amendment in the bill, because the temptation to use these 3,000 Liberty motors might be too great to be overcome.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think there is any danger or any intention or any possibility of their using Liberty motors in newly manufactured planes after July 1, 1929.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that at the present time we have approximately 3,000 war-time Liberty motors in our warehouses, packed in grease. In order to make each motor available for use it costs the Government practically $2,500. These Liberty motors were wonderful motors in their day, but progress has been made since their development, and we now find that age has weakened the cylinders and they rust very easily.

Now, then, in what position do we find the Government? It is using an obsolete, reconditioned motor for training purposes, and that does two things. It retards the development of motors, and it places the Air Corps in a position of supplying its fliers not with the best motor but with a motor that was good in its day, but which has outlived its purpose.

I think that Congress ought to establish its own policy with reference to these motors, and that policy should recognize that the Liberty has served its purpose. The testimony in 1926 was that these motors could well be sold at a dollar apiece and thereby save money to the Government in the long run.

I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will prevail and that this Congress will take this forward step in aviation.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Would these motors be apt to be sold by the department to others who are building planes?

Mr. FURLOW. I do not think they should be.

Mr. HUDSON. But under present regulations they could do it, could they not?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes; they could be sold.

Mr. HUDSON. Then unless this amendment is made of a broader scope you will imperil lives just the same as if you used these motors in Army planes?

Mr. FURLOW. I say junk them.

Mr. HUDSON. I think if they are not fit for use in Army planes they ought not to be used in commercial planes or anywhere else.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say to the gentleman that there is no market for them.

Mr. MAAS. These motors lend themselves splendidly to conversion as marine motors and I do not think we should preclude the Government from selling them for some purpose, because they can easily be converted into good marine motors.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment would not preclude that.

Mr. FURLOW. I think that can be taken care of, but I do not think they should be put out into the commercial field.

Mr. HUDSON. I think the language should be so safeguarded that they could not be used in any air service.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I would simply state that in view of the fact that the War Department has already gone on record as saying they practically favor this proposition the committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are justified in saying what has been said about the Liberty motor. The report of Mr. Davison, Assistant Secretary of War, which has recently been issued, makes this statement:

The record made last year is worthy of recognition. The Air Corps flew 182,193 hours, or over 18,000,000 miles, with but 27 fatalities. This means 677,400 miles to each fatality, whereas the year before it was 327,600 miles per fatality.

And in 1926 it was less than that.

Then a question was asked as to the extent of the use of Liberty motors in 1928 as compared to their use in 1927, and he said that the number of Liberty motors used in 1928 was 1,000 as compared to 690 used in 1927.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, indeed.

Mr. HUGHES. Does not the gentleman think that was 1,000 too many for them to use?

Mr. COLLINS. If the number of fatalities was reduced, it seems to me it is an argument as to the usefulness still of the Liberty motor.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Who was the witness?

Mr. COLLINS. That was Mr. Davison, the Assistant Secretary of War in charge of aviation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I should like to ask what percentage of the total number of motors in use during both periods were Liberty motors?

Mr. COLLINS. I can answer the gentleman only generally. The testimony only shows that a larger number of Liberty motors were used in 1928 than were used in 1927. Let us go on further. The Assistant Secretary was asked as to the number of fatalities in 1928 that were attributable to motor trouble, and he testified that only four fatalities were attributable to motor trouble. The fatalities were reduced in spite of the larger number of Liberty motors that were used in 1928 over 1927.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Did the Assistant Secretary of War state whether or not these four fatalities, which were due to motor trouble, resulted where Liberty motors were used?

Mr. COLLINS. No. He did not.

We have approximately 4,000 Liberty motors now on hand. This bill provides for the renovation of approximately 2,000 of them, and these Liberty motors are going into planes where the motors have worn out. They are not to be placed in any new planes and they are not to be used in any new planes. When a plane is bought we buy the motor that is in it and one additional motor, too. I do not find from the record any good reason why this Congress should put its stamp of disapproval upon a motor that is still useful and when the fatalities are growing less year after year with their use.

The Government has approximately 4,000 of these motors on hand now; they are good motors and they should be used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. As I said, they are good motors and they are usable motors. General Fechet and Mr. Davison, on their trip to Panama, used one of them, and they testified they are constantly using them now. They do not recommend the installation of them in new planes, but they do recommend the renovation of about half of those that are on hand.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If we adopt this amendment it will prevent, as I understand it, the Government from using those motors and make it necessary for the Government to go out and buy new motors from concerns at a large price.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. COLLINS. No; only those planes that are built after 1929.

Mr. MAAS. It does not prevent the replacement of present planes with Liberty motors at all.

Mr. COLLINS. It would prevent the replacement——

Mr. MAAS. Oh, no.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman does not know what I am going to say. It would prevent the replacement of the motor in a plane, built in 1929, with a Liberty motor four years hence.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, I do not understand it in that way. I understand that any plane that is built during the fiscal year 1929 and delivered can be reconditioned by the installation of a new Liberty motor.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not construe the proposed amendment as the gentleman does.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment merely provides that new planes purchased by the Air Corps after July 1, 1929, shall not be equipped with Liberty motors. That is all my amendment provides.

Mr. COLLINS. That is what I have said.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman stresses the fact that there are several planes being reconditioned by replacing Liberty motors in existing planes; my amendment does not disturb that plan or condition at all.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand; but if a plane were equipped with another motor and that plane were built in 1929, then the motor in that plane could not be replaced with a Liberty motor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TABER. That plane is not constructed so that it could be so replaced.

Mr. COLLINS. The author of the amendment says that my construction of the amendment is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 24, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: On page 34, line 13, strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$81,820."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do this in order to make it certain that they will be able to have the funds necessary to purchase the helium that the hearings show they desire.

In the hearings General Fechet said they would need $132,000, but that was based on helium at a price of $46 per thousand.

At the new plant at Amarillo, provided they can run reasonably near capacity, they hope finally to be able to make the helium at $20 per thousand, and I take it this is the basis on which the committee made the amount $50,000.

As shown by the hearings not only on the Department of Commerce bill but on the present bill—and I have confirmed this by consultation with the Bureau of Mines—this is based on their being able to run at something near capacity. On page 369 of the hearings on the Department of Commerce appropriation they give an estimate of $20, based upon a purchase of 8,100,000 cubic feet by the Army and Navy combined, and they state that it would require an additional amount if less than this amount were purchased.

In this letter from Mr. Turner, who is the Director of the Bureau of Mines, having this work in charge, it is stated:

Costs as low as those indicated by the above table should not be expected during the first few months of operation as a new plant.

The plant has just about been completed and will be ready to go into operation some time during this month, probably between the 15th and February 1. For the first few months, even if they ran at full capacity, they will not be able to furnish the helium at this price. The cheapest helium that has ever been purchased by the Government is $35 per thousand.

By my amendment I have not increased the appropriation to $132,000, which was based on the old rate they had to pay at the Fort Worth plant because of the scarcity of gas and their inability to run full time, but I have placed it at $35 per thousand, and I have put it "not to exceed $81,820," which is figured on the amount of helium they require at $35 per thousand. I think when we have spent 700,000 to build and equip a new plant and have the facilities already for operation, it would be parsimonious, it would be false economy, not to give them a chance to get into proper operation; not to give them a little leeway, because even the director, who is in charge, says they will not be able the first few months to make the helium at $20 per thousand, even operating at practically full capacity.

My amendment does not provide the full amount requested—$132,000—but only $81,000, which is an increase of $31,000. I think the committee should give them this opportunity. This is a matter of tremendous importance.

Why, in this same bill we are appropriating $150,000 for the breeding of Cavalry horses. This may be important, and I suspect it is. They need Cavalry horses at times, but in war times dray horses are used much more than Cavalry horses. If it is important to appropriate for some of these items here, it seems to me we could appropriate $31,000 more to an item as important as helium, which is for a great wing of the Army, lighter-than-air craft, which, to say the least, has some indication of being of service. It is a branch of the service that is cheaper to operate than the heavier-than-air craft. They have been able to make much longer flights than the heavier-than-air craft. Way back in 1919 the old British R–34 crossed the ocean both ways. We have recently gone to Panama in about one-fifth the time it would take ships to go there. They also used captive balloons in war times even though filled with hydrogen. Lighter-than-air ships have gone great distances filled with hydrogen. They are much safer when filled with helium.

I think when we have gone to this expense in the equipment of a plant it would be the height of folly to cut this appropriation down and require the plant, which cost $700,000, to stand in idleness and rust when by adding a few thousand dollars to the original appropriation we can have it operating right along.

I think the committee should agree to this increase. I think it is reasonable.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few observations with reference to this amendment and this provision of the bill in order that the members of the subcommittee may reply to the inquiries of my colleague [Mr. JONES] and myself at the same time.

The estimate of $50,000 for the purchase of helium, as stated in this bill, is predicated upon the purchase by the Government at the rate of $20 per thousand cubic feet. It is interesting to note in passing, as indicative of our progress, that 15 years ago a cubic foot of helium had never been extracted for less than $1,500. Now we hope to get it down to 2 cents a cubic foot. Whether or not the sum of $50,000 will be sufficient will depend on certain things. The authorities of the Bureau of Mines estimate that they can supply helium gas at $20 per thousand cubic feet, provided their output is permitted to be 8,100,000 cubic feet, of which the Army is supposed to take 2,500,000 cubic feet and the Navy 5,600,000 cubic feet.

Now, if the demand for the output is sufficient to keep the plant running at such capacity as to enable them to produce 8,100,000 cubic feet, and the Army will use the amount indicated, and the Navy do likewise, then the appropriation of $50,000 will be sufficient. But, in order to know that it will be sufficient, we shall have to have the assurance that the Army will use 2,500,000 cubic feet, and that the Navy will use 5,600,000 cubic feet; and the further assurance that neither branch of the service will use any helium manufactured by other parties unless it is in excess of the 8,100,000 cubic feet. I understand that some helium is produced by a private corporation. There is a private concern extracting helium in rather considerable quantities and the Navy has purchased, as I have been informed, some of its supplies from this concern. They have been extracting helium and selling it to the Government at about $35 per thousand cubic feet. If the Navy is going to get a part of its supplies from that source, and is not going to use the 5,600,000 cubic feet from the Government plant, and the Army is not going to use the 2,500,000 cubic feet, then this plant could not produce helium at $20 per thousand cubic feet, and the appropriation of $50,000 would not be adequate. Therefore, whether or not the amendment should carry, or whether the amount of $50,000 should be increased, must necessarily be dependent upon information given us as to whether or not the Army and the Navy, respectively, are going to use the amounts I have indicated. I should like to have the members of the subcommittee, if they can, give us an assurance as to whether there is going to be a demand for 8,100,000 cubic feet for the respective needs of the two services.

If so, I think the sum of $50,000 in this bill would be sufficient. If not, it is going to cost more than $20 per thousand cubic feet to produce the helium because the overhead remains practically constant, regardless of what the output may be. The smaller the output the greater the expense per thousand cubic feet. So it is highly important that the House should have accurate information as to whether or not the prescribed quantities are going to be used.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the committee went into this situation carefully. The average number of cubic feet of airship capacity which the Army will probably operate in the fiscal year 1930 will be approximately 1,400,000. The Air Corps authorities state that it will require for one year approximately one and one-half times the capacity to operate the ships. Having that in mind the amount of helium consumed during the year 1930 would be 2,100,000 cubic feet. At $20 a thousand cubic feet that would amount to $42,000. But the committee, in order to be a little more than fair with this activity, and having that in mind provided enough money to purchase two and one-half million cubic feet, which is the amount that the Bureau of Commerce stated would be required by its plan from the Army to keep running on an 8,000,000 basis a year. That plant is going to start February 1, and by July 1, or the beginning of the fiscal year 1930, the plant ought to be in full operation, according to the statement which the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Mines, made in their hearings; and we ought to get the helium then for $20 per thousand cubic feet.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I call the gentleman's attention to the items shown on page 508 of the hearings. They include $10,000 for transportation. In estimating the cost of helium, of course, figuring the helium at $46 plus per thousand cubic feet, $10,000 is added for transportation, which makes up the $132,000 that they are asking for. The transportation would probably be the same. I think the gentleman has his figures too low, because $42,000 plus the $10,000 of transportation would be $52,000 even if helium were produced at $20 per thousand cubic feet. I have simply put in $35 and say not exceeding $35 per thousand, including the $10,000 for transportation, which they would have to pay in any event.

Mr. TABER. They might have to pay $10,000 for transportation and they might not.

Mr. JONES. They have no hangar at that plant and they have no mooring post, and they would necessarily be compelled to transport it.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman means that they have no hangar at the Amarilla plant?

Mr. JONES. Yes; and no mooring mast.

Mr. TABER. Of course, they have to transport it, but $8,000 will cover that.

Mr. LANHAM. What about the Navy requirements?

Mr. TABER. I can not give them offhand, but they have the Los Angeles, which is approximately 2,200,000 cubic feet. That, with its method of operation, would probably consume three and a half million to four million cubic feet, and the Navy Department is trying to purchase helium in advance of the requirement of the Los Angeles, with the idea of storing it for the new airships when they come along, because they have a cubic foot capacity of approximately six and a half million, and we could not expect to run into the immediate production of helium sufficient to keep those ships in operation, if we did not accumulate a storage, so that the Navy will have a storage proposition. The Navy estimate on that, which has not yet been considered by the subcommittee on Navy appropriations, is $300,000, which would provide, at $20 per thousand, for the purchase of twelve or thirteen million cubic feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Of course, what the production of this helium will cost will necessarily depend upon the volume of the output, because the overhead expense remains practically the same. In other words, with the plant getting out something like its full capacity the helium will cost us less per thousand cubic feet than if a smaller volume is being produced, and if it is reasonably assured that the Government in the Army and Navy services will take from the helium plant for the next fiscal year an output of 8,100,000 cubic feet, then this figure would be about adequate; but if there is no assurance of this kind, the helium would cost more, and consequently the figure would have to be increased.

Mr. TABER. I think we can fairly say to the gentleman that the cost of the helium is a factor which will have to be taken into consideration by the Naval Committee in framing the naval appropriaiton bill, and if that bill does not provide sufficient to pay for at least 6,000,000 cubic feet at $20 per thousand, there would be a legitimate criticism of their appropriation. In the meantime inasmuch as 2,100,000 cubic feet would be sufficient, according to the statements of the Army air officials, to take care of what their operation will actually cover, I think that this appropriation is undoubtedly sufficient.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes. I will say that the gentleman who has charge of helium in that division of the Bureau of Mines gave me the information that if the total output for the Army and Navy would equal 8,100,000 cubic feet, he thought it could be produced at $20 per thousand cubic feet.

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman is correct. That is the same information that we acted upon.

Mr. JONES. I had that information, but the testimony shows that if the Army and Navy do not take the full amount the cost would be very much increased.

Mr. LANHAM. Naturally, it would.

Mr. TABER. That is an item that should be taken up on the naval bill, if they do not carry enough to purchase 6,000,000 feet. If they do—and I personally feel that they will—this is ample to take care of the situation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in view of the assurance given by the committee in reference to that, while I think they ought to take care of the extra freight cost, it is so near that that I desire to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of discussing this matter just a little further. I was somewhat surprised and disappointed at the statement which one of the members of the committee made that the Army is planning to abandon the lighter-than-air type of service. I can not credit this. I think it would be very unfortunate should they finally decide to do so. In one sense it is a somewhat new activity, and a somewhat old one in another sense. But at the same time an impression seems to have grown up in the minds of some people to the effect that lighter-than-air craft are not suitable for military service. Yet as shown by the records the lighter-than-air craft, even with the dirigibles filled with hydrogen and the receptacles filled with hydrogen, did a very great service during the war.

I know, from what a number of people have told me, from official records, and from personal observation, that one of the nightmares of the soldier in the last war was to have shells bursting around him, not knowing where they came from, and thus being handicapped in his efforts to fight back.

In the old days fighters were sometimes placed in a ring blindfolded for the purpose of fighting with gloves. One can readily realize their helpless feeling.

To avoid the condition that sometimes prevailed when the shells were bursting around them which they could not locate the soldiers ran up what were called captive balloons from a stable position back behind the lines. In this way they would try to get information as to what was going on behind the enemy lines, as to his movements, the location of his batteries, and where the firing was coming from. These balloons were filled with hydrogen gas, so that a single touch of an incendiary or a tracer bullet would make them come down in a mass of flames.

This helium we are talking about is noncombustible and if a bullet should strike a captive balloon filled with helium it would not burst into flames. If it had more than one compartment it might not even be forced down. They may find something to take the place of a captive balloon if there is another war, but there is no assurance of that. The information obtained by these balloons was invaluable in the last war. Of course, they took pictures and made observations from heavier-than-air aircraft—that is, from the airplanes which went across the lines—yet these pictures did not always furnish all of the information needed. They had to be moving all the time and could not get all of the advantages that could be obtained from a stationary position. They had to get some sort of a stable craft behind the line in order to get fuller or supplemental information.

During that war some of the worst terrorism was caused by dirigibles which crossed the channel to London. In this way the Germans dropped bombs and even exploded arsenals, causing tremendous damage, going over the city under the cover of night or fog or clouds. These lighter-than-air aircraft may not be as important as some other branches of the service, but they are at least important. My right hand may be better than my left hand, but there is no reason for cutting off my left hand. The heavier-than-air aircraft may be more valuable in war time than the lighter-than-air aircraft, but, as shown by experience in the last war, the lighter-than-air aircraft is of tremendous military service, and therefore if the Army is to remain strictly up to date, as it should be if it is going to be our means of national defense, we ought to have all the available methods, strictly modern methods, of carrying out its activities. For this reason I think this committee and the Committee on Military Affairs and the Congress would make a great mistake if they required the Army to abandon this form of activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is true, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that for some reason the heavier-than-air aircraft have been much more talked about than the lighter-than-air aircraft. Much ado was made last year when for the first time three men—we all remember the occasion a few months ago when three men made a western trip across the Atlantic in an airplane. The papers had headlines filled with it all over the country. That was the first time anyone had ever crossed the Atlantic in an airplane in a nonstop flight in a westerly direction. Yet four years before—more than that; in fact, in 1919—the R–34 made a flight both across and back, and four years ago the Los Angeles, purchased by this country, flew 5,000 miles from Germany and landed over here, and neither caused much more than a ripple of comment.

The Los Angeles had made more than a hundred successful flights. One of the dirigibles in this country made a flight of 9,000 miles. Recently I think the Los Angeles went to Panama in about one-fifth the time it takes a steamer to go there.

All that is important not only from the commercial standpoint but from the standpoint of the military service. From the military standpoint, it is recognized as so important that Germany and other countries are building these craft. They are spending much more than we have talked about here to-day trying to develop a substitute for helium, and they have been trying to locate helium also. Other countries have spent large sums in trying to find some source of supply of a commodity of which America has practically a monopoly. They recognize its importance, and I think the Congress ought to recognize its importance. I think it will in the course of time.

An effort is being made to develop helium by private concerns. I hope it will be successful. But in conservation matters private concerns can not always be depended upon. The conservation of our natural resources is one of our principal needs, and particularly the supply of helium, because, as we know, at present it is somewhat limited, and very much limited so far as locality is concerned. In the matter of reforestation it is possible that private interests might reforest this country as cheaply or even more cheaply than the Government, but it is generally recognized that reforestation must be handled by the Government. That is true of the development of helium. I am informed that a private concern is now making helium from a gas that can not be used for any other purpose. That gas ought to be kept in the ground, and the helium ought to be extracted from gas that we use for other purposes. In various localities, one in Oklahoma—I do not know to what extent—and in certain sections of Texas, and in one or two other sections there is a gas that contains helium that comes into use for fuel; but the helium is taken out of the ground, and if it is not extracted it is wasted. I understand that one institution is extracting helium from a gas that is used for no other purpose than the extraction of helium.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, where is helium found?

Mr. JONES. The helium is found in various localities—some in the Texas fields, some in Oklahoma. There is a great quantity in what is known as the Panhandle field in Texas. There is some also in Kansas, and some in Utah, as well as one or two other States; and in small quantities helium has been found in two or three other countries, but not in quantities justifying its extraction from the natural gas. So that helium, for all practical purposes, so far as I know at this time, is confined to this country; and we have a monopoly on a commodity upon which other countries are spending more than we are inclined to expend in their effort to find helium.

Mr. MERRITT. Does the gentleman say that some of the helium is now wasted?

Mr. JONES. Yes. When the gas is owned by private parties they are going ahead and using the gas which contains helium and selling it as gas, and private concerns, of course, can not be blamed for it. One of the chief reasons for building the Amarillo plant is not only to establish the manufacture upon a firm basis but to conserve the greatest supply of helium-bearing gas that is now known. There, I understand, they do not expect to use the gas except when the helium is extracted. In other words, they expect to develop the field only as our helium needs may require. I have understood that they hope to arrange a contract to protect the entire structure of that field. There is another field, a larger field, not far away, but it does not contain a particularly large amount of helium. This particular field that the Government has sought control of for the purpose of conservation covers such an extent of territory that it would probably supply the helium that we need for an indefinite period of time, provided we do not permit it to get into the control of private hands, who, in order to sell the gas, might release the helium from the ground.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the cost?

Mr. JONES. Before the plant was built at Fort Worth it cost $1,500 per cubic foot. Of course, it was then a chemical curiosity. Naturally, experience enabled them to produce it cheaper. In the experimental plant at Fort Worth, before the main plant was built, they produced it at about 5 or 6 cents per cubic foot, or $50 to $60 per thousand. They gradually reduced the cost in the main plant until I think it was estimated at about 3 cents or 3½ cents per cubic foot. Of course, recently, due to fact that the plant has only operated part time, the cost has increased to some extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. The Fort Worth plant was built in war time, naturally at greater expense than would be incurred now. Besides it was the first of its kind in the world. They have developed some very great improvements in the process. Naturally, the cost range has been higher, due to the newness of the industry and the lack of knowledge at the time the Government work began.

When all these things are considered I think those in charge of production by the Government have done remarkably well in the showing they have made.

Taking a commodity about which little was known, and concerning the practical extractions of which less was known, operating in an almost uncharted field, I think those who have made sacrifices in its development deserve the thanks of the Congress and the country.

Having the benefit of their experience and their knowledge, there is every assurance that future production can be maintained at a much lower cost than the older plant was able to maintain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

PRAGUE SINGING SOCIETY

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk reads further, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for three minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, there are in the gallery of the House right now some 53 public-school teachers from Czechoslovakia. They have just called upon the Chief Executive at the White House. They are paying what might almost be termed an official visit to the United States. Ten years ago President Masaryk was in Washington. A resolution was pending which had for its purpose his addressing the House and Senate in joint session, but he accomplished his mission without coming before the Congress and then left the country. These gentlemen are here now on what might be termed the tenth anniversary of that event.

Besides being school-teachers they represent an organization called the Prague Teachers' Singing Society. They are singing their way around the United States as guests of the Bohemians of the United States. Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Cincinnati, Detroit, and various other places where there are groups of Bohemians have invited these men over here, and if they will stand up I would like to present them to the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I hear a number of requests that they sing for us, and I would very much like to have them sing either our national anthem or their national anthem, or both. It will take only a minute.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that the gentleman move a recess.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to move that the committee rise and the Speaker will have to resume the chair before a recess can be taken.

Mr. BRITTEN. There seems to be a general desire among the Members that a recess be taken. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, while we are waiting for the Speaker, I may say that this delegation has just sung their national anthem and our national anthem at the White House in the presence of the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request and we will proceed with the Army bill for 10 minutes until a motion may properly be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his request, and the Clerk will read.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT

For the manufacture and purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants, for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships and transports, for laundry work for enlisted men and Army nurses while patients in a hospital, and supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about military posts in the Canal Zone; for the purchase of veterinary supplies and hire of veterinary surgeons; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Army Nurse Corps, and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignments, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the enlisted force of the Medical Department; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $1,246,571: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for payment of any expense connected with the publication of the Medical and Surgical History of the War with Germany: Provided further, That civilian employees of the Army shall be required to pay not less than cost prices for Army medical supplies purchased by them pursuant to the provisions of the act approved April 23, 1904 (U. S. C. p. 215, sec. 1236).

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from California the reason for the proviso on page 37, line 21 to line 24.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is with regard to the civilian employees?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; with regard to the history.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand from the testimony given to our committee that the work on the medical and surgical history of the war with Germany is practically completed and that the funds already appropriated will fully complete that work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Every other branch has printed its history. I think the Medical Corps did remarkably well and I believe its history will be very useful.

Mr. BARBOUR. We have provided a specific appropriation for that and we did not want this money used for that purpose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the history will eventually be published?

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, yes. They are carrying on the work and it is practically all done.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is all right as long as the work will not be stopped.

Mr. BARBOUR. In fact, the composition work on the history is completed; most of the volumes have been printed and the remaining volumes are either in the hands of the printer or about to be sent to the printer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is satisfactory.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEER DEPOTS

For incidental expenses for the depots, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, pay of civilian clerks, mechanics, laborers, and other employees; for lumber and materials and for labor for packing and crating engineer supplies; repairs of, and for materials to repair, public buildings, machinery, and instruments, and for unforeseen expenses, $93,060.

UNITED STATES ARMY AIR SERVICE REFUELING MISSION

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there has been anything said in the House regarding the Army fliers who made such a wonderful record on the recent endurance flight on the Question Mark. I hold in my hand a letter written January 4, 1929, the fourth day of the flight, written by Chief Pilot Eaker, which I will read to the House:

ON BOARD THE "QUESTION MARK," OVER SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
January 4, 1929, fourth day of flight.

DEAR MR. CLAGUE: Here's wishing for you and Mrs. Clague the best of everything for 1929. Hope you are both well and happy.

Our endurance flight is still enduring at the present time. Have just passed 80 hours. We are learning some very valuable things for aviation, both military and commercial. Hope to see you both on my return.

Sincerely, IRA C. EAKER, Captain, Air Corps.

[Applause.]

The personnel of the flight was Maj. Carl Spatz, in command, Capt. Ira C. Eaker, chief pilot, Lieut. H. A. Halverson, Lieut. Elwood Quesada, and Sergt. Roy W. Hooe.

The men who conducted this flight were continuously in the air for about 151 hours and traveled nearly 12,000 miles. They have demonstrated to the country what can be done in the new, up-to-date airplanes. It is the greatest endurance record ever made in the air in this or any other country, and the people of the United States have reason to be proud of the men who made this great flight.

This flight has shown the country that the engines used in this plane are the most wonderful engines that have perhaps ever been constructed.

I think these men are not only entitled to a vote of confidence by this body, but they have shown not only to the United States but to the entire world that we have in the United States as good if not the best airplanes that have ever been manufactured. I recommend that these men who performed this great record be given hero medals. [Applause.]

PRAGUE SINGING SOCIETY

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I have just talked personally with the Speaker of the House concerning the request of a number of Members of the House to have the Prague teachers sing their national anthem or ours in the Hall of the House.

The Speaker thinks it would be establishing a precedent which might work against the House at some future time, and after talking with him I am inclined to believe he is entirely right. So I am going to ask the minister of Czechoslovakia and his friends to step out to the east front of the Capitol and sing there for us. [Applause.]

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Clerk read as follows:

CHIEF OF COAST ARTILLERY

COAST ARTILLERY SCHOOL, FORT MONROE, VA.

For purchase of engines, generators, motors, machines, measuring and nautical instruments, special apparatus, and materials, and for experimental purposes for the engineering and artillery and military art departments and enlisted specialists division; for purchase and binding of professional books treating of military and scientific subjects for library, for use of school, and for temporary use in coast defenses; for incidental expenses of the school, including chemicals, stationery, printing and binding; hardware; materials; cost of special instruction of officers detailed as instructors; employment of temporary, technical, or special services; for office furniture and fixtures, machinery, and motor trucks; and unforeseen expenses; in all, $29,205: Provided, That section 3648, Revised Statutes (U. S. C. p. 1009, sec.

529), shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation: Provided further, That purchase and exchange of typewriting machines, to be paid for from this appropriation, may be made at the special price allowed to schools teaching stenography and typewriting without obligating typewriter companies to supply these machines to all departments of the Government at the same price.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

How is it that the Coast Artillery School is able to obtain these typewriter machines at reduced prices made to schools and asks that this proviso be written into the appropriation bill? This seems strange to me.

Mr. BARBOUR. It seems to be a special provision in the case of the Coast Artillery and it requires just this much less money.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand it requires less money in this instance, but then we have the Infantry School, we have the War College, we have West Point, we have Annapolis, and several other schools in the Government, and to write a proviso of this kind in one particular instance strikes me as being so unusual that some explanation or justification should be made.

Mr. BARBOUR. This has been carried in the bill for a good many years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If a typewriter company sells the Coast Artillery School a typewriter at a special school price, I do not see how it would be obligated to sell to anyone else at the same price, and yet we are writing this proviso into the law.

Mr. BARBOUR. It may be that these other schools are getting the benefit of it also. The situation is that this bill grew out of about five or six different appropriation bills, and we have been trying to improve the form of the bill and get it in better shape. Maybe these other schools are getting this special price, but this provision has been carried in connection with the Coast Artillery School for some time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman understands the object of some of us in seeking to bring about some uniformity in respect of all these bills?

Mr. BARBOUR. We are all working to the same end.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Without seeking to disturb the form of the bill at this time I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to this proviso so that the gentleman may look into the matter. It seems to me it ought to apply to all of them.

Mr. BARBOUR. It may apply to all of them, but I know this language has been carried for some time at this particular place.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

For construction of new cadet barracks, including razing old cadet mess hall, preparing plans and specifications, excavating, and preparing site, as authorized by acts approved February 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 129), and March 10, 1928 (45 Stat. 300), $600,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For an additional amount for completing the construction of the new cadet mess hall, cadet store, dormitories, and drawing academy at the United States Military Academy, as authorized by the act entitled 'An act to authorize an appropriation for building a new cadet mess hall, United States Military Academy, approved January 9, 1929,' $297,540, to be immediately available."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. BARBOUR. The erection of the building has been authorized by law.

Mr. DOWELL. This is an annual appropriation bill, and this provision to make it immediately available is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California cite the Chair to the law?

Mr. BARBOUR. The construction of this project at West Point has been authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair asks the gentleman from California to produce the law.

Mr. BARBOUR. The act was reported by the Military Affairs Committee, passed, and signed by the President, and this is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. MORIN. It has been appropriated for since 1924.

Mr. DOWELL. Unless the words "immediately available" are stricken from the proposed amendment, this is legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that the gentleman's point of order is made to the words "immediately available," but not to the appropriation itself?

Mr. DOWELL. The question I have raised here is as to making it immediately available. I say that is legislation on ths bill. The only way the gentleman can present that is in another form and in another bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. The appropriation is authorized under the act of January 9, 1929, which is to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman to cite the Chair to the act so that he might examine it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the bill that was passed last Monday.

Mr. BARBOUR. We have here a letter from the President addressed to the Speaker of the House estimating for the appropriation carried in this amendment. We also have a letter from the Director of the Budget addressed to the President in which he submits this appropriation to the President, and it is approved by the President in the letter to the Speaker. He cites the act of January 9, 1929, evidently signed to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact seems to be that the bill in question passed both Houses, was signed by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses, and sent to the President. So far as the Chair has official information, that is as far as it has gone. If the point of order is raised challenging the provision of the law, of course the Chair can do nothing but call for the law. Probably the gentleman from California will not be able to produce the law until to-morrow when it is messaged from the White House.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to raise the question on the appropriation; my purpose is only to make the point of order to the words "immediately available" under this bill. This bill is for appropriations beginning on the 1st of July of this year. This amendment providing for an appropriation for this fiscal year is legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, I submit that that question has been ruled upon on numerous occasions heretofore, and the point of order has been overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair recalls from memory, this particular point has been ruled upon a number of times since the adoption of our present system of appropriating by departments and in each case, so far as the Chair recalls, a point of order made on account of the words "immediately available" has been overruled. Has the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], who is on his feet, any remembrance that conflicts with the recollection of the Chair?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not refer to the citation, but I know that that precise point has been raised, and it has been ruled that to make it immediately available, or to make it available until expended, is in order on one of these appropriation bills, since the whole matter is in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the recollection of the Chair. The parliamentarian has just found one precedent that would seem to be in point. It is section 8223 of the Precedents of the House of Representatives, and is summed up in this statement:

Such items were formerly ruled out on account of jurisdiction, but since the Committee on Appropriations now has exclusive jurisdiction of all general appropriation bills, the point of order is no longer valid.

The Chair recalls a number of instances, though he is not able to turn to them immediately, that have been ruled in this way. The Chair, therefore, overrules that point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to raise any further question about the other matter, about the law not being here.

Mr. BARBOUR. All we have is the letter from the President referring to the act signed to-day. A printed copy of the act is not at this time available, but it is the law.

The CHAIRMAN. If the other point of order was pressed, the Chair would sustain it, because clearly the law can not be produced, and until it can be the Chair would be compelled to rule the other way.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not desire to press that question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, for the sake of precedent, the Chair does not intimate that a physical presentation of the law is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. It is necessary that the public act be cited in one way or another.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Cited, yes; I did not want the intimation to go out that a physical production of the law is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 49, line 12, after the word "barracks," insert "on the site of the old mess hall, its street face on the barracks to be in prolongation of the street face of the West Academy Building."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it is apparent that the bill itself provides for a new cadet barracks on the site of the old mess hall, and all my amendment does is to amplify the site. I am absolutely indifferent whether the committee adopts this or not, except that next year, if the committee does not adopt this amendment and it comes in with a deficiency appropriation, I shall be able to say, "I told you so." This is the situation. The barracks is to be placed on the same site now occupied by the mess hall. I understand, and I am reliably informed, that the present superintendent there has decided to change somewhat the plans that are now complete by placing a porch in the front of this building. If that is so it will be necessary to throw the building back, and owing to the peculiar topography of the land you will need more excavation, and the amount that you now appropriate will not be enough. I can only bring the facts to the committee. If you want to raise the point of order of course you may do so, but it is simply describing the site, and if it is not accepted, and the plan should be changed, you will be confronted with a deficit.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes. He is preparing to excavate rock 35 feet through.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what my amendment seeks to avoid.

Mr. COLLINS. For the purpose of making this minor alteration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what my amendment seeks to avoid.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California make the point of order?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph under consideration in the bill provides an appropriation for the construction of new cadet barracks as authorized by the acts approved February 28, 1928, and March 10, 1928. The amendment of the gentleman from New York evidently seeks to amplify the authority given, although the Chair has not examined the acts authorizing this construction, but assumes that if the amendment of the gentleman from New York has any effect whatsoever it will be to amplify or otherwise alter that authority, and therefore will be legislation. As the paragraph in the bill now stands, it simply provides that the construction for which the appropriation is made shall be done in accordance with certain acts. Now the gentleman wishes to supplement the provisions of these acts. As a matter of fact, the gentleman is almost a year late. If he had been here when the acts were passed, his amendment would have been in order to change them in any way germane to the then pending bills; but at the present time this appropriation bill carries no legislation on the subject but simply provides an appropriation to be expended in accordance with the acts passed nearly a year ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have not the act before me, but it is my understanding that the act provides for tearing down the old building and putting a new building in its place.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman's amendment change the act?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; but it permits the building to be shoved back.

The CHAIRMAN. What the gentleman states is clearly legislation and defeats his own amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is to carry out the intention of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is clearly an attempt to enlarge, amplify, clarify, or otherwise alter previous legislation, and is therefore legislation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps it is better to enlarge the legislation than the appropriation, as we will have to do in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. That, however, is a matter to be taken up in a legislative bill and not an appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 3648, Revised Statutes (U. S. C. p. 1009, sec. 529), shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign, professional, and other newspapers and periodicals to be paid from any of the foregoing appropriations for the Military Academy.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. That appears to be suspending a statute and has the appearance clearly of legislation, and I was wondering why a statute has to be suspended and what necessity do they have for offering to repeal the practice for this purpose?

Mr. BARBOUR. We are not going to change the practice. We simply propose to make an exception, because many of the foreign newspapers require the payment of subscriptions in advance and frequently they can get them at lower rates if paid in advance. This is simply for convenience and possibly to save a little money.

Mr. DOWELL. It seems to me there is a regular way in which to do this instead of suspending statutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There are 10 different paragraphs with the same proviso in them, and the only time I permit them to go through is in reference to subscriptions to foreign papers.

Mr. DOWELL. If there is any great necessity for this, I am not so vigorous in the matter and I should withdraw it; but it seems to me there ought to be a specific appropriation for what they desire or what is necessary instead of trying to suspend a statute.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It only permits the payment of subscriptions in advance.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is only to pay in advance.

Mr. DOWELL. Make the appropriation. Just a moment ago the chairman held you have an exclusive right if you want it, and I will say for this time I am going to withdraw the reservation of the point of order, but hereafter I shall try to hold the committee to a strict accountability.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to turn over to the United States Military Academy without expense all such surplus material as may be available and necessary for the construction of buildings; also surplus tools and material required for use in the instruction of cadets at the academy: Provided, That the constructing quartermaster, United States Military Academy, is hereby exempted from all laws and regulations relative to employment and to granting leaves of absence to employees with pay while employed on construction work at the Military Academy: Provided further, That the funds appropriated herein for the United States Military Academy may be expended without advertising when in the opinion of the responsible constructing officer and the superintendent it is more economical and advantageous to the Government to dispense with advertising.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COHEN] wants to occupy 10 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that he be given 10 minutes at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am having a map brought in, largely to show you a picture of Governors Island, which is within four minutes of the Battery and within about six minutes of the financial district of the city of New York. I would like in connection with this map to describe the barracks that are being built and which are expected to be built with the appropriation that was passed at the last session.

I have consulted with the Secretary of War, calling his attention to the fact that on Governors Island the proposed barracks are to be built within about 150 to 250 feet of the quarters now occupied by the officers and showing that the location of the quarters of these officers is practically such that there is no real privacy for the officers and their families and the men stationed on Governors Island. I called on The Adjutant General, and he informed me that they were going to do a piece of legerdemain. They were going to remove the porches from the front of the officers' quarters and rebuild them on the back of the officers' quarters, thereby making the fronts the backs and the backs the fronts. Of course he said nothing about changing the interior plans of these houses and of this particular house which he calls cottage building No. 64.

This floor plan [indicating on map] shows that with the porches placed on what is now the rear of the houses it will be necessary to either go through the kitchen or the butler's pantry to reach the living room or reception room, as they call it, and that even with a change of the fronts, which only means a change of the porches, there is absolutely no privacy for the officers or their families. Just think what it would mean to have about 500 pairs of eyes looking from a 3-story building, a height 78 feet 6 inches at the highest point above grade, into the rooms of these officers' quarters, making it impossible for the families of these men to have that privacy to which they are entitled.

When I first called the question of an airport on Governors Island to the attention of the House I endeavored to convince the War Department that they were a bit selfish, to say the least, in holding an island of 172 acres where only about 74 acres were at present in use and 102 acres used for nothing but polo fields, golf courses, baseball field, and running track; and I am afraid with the present location of the barracks they are going to spoil the running track.

When I first introduced the bill the War Department gave no reasons for it not being suitable as a landing field or express station; but with the pressure of public opinion and the backing of the many organizations, they found it was necessary to do something more than just to stand mute, and they then raised the question of fog, wind conditions, the smallness of the field, the danger of flying; in fact, everything that could possibly be thought of. They ignored the recommendations of a congressional committee of the Sixty-eighth Congress, of which Representative PRALL was a Member; they refuted the statements of such flyers as Commander Byrd, Col. Clarence Chamberlain, and Casey Jones; and, in fact, I am told there are over 18 men around New York who have flown to and from Governors Island. They have stated that Governors Island is not suitable, but tell me what airport is 100 per cent perfect all of the time? Not one of them but at times has trouble with fogs, high winds, and other bad landing conditions.

Remember, gentlemen, you are within six minutes of Manhattan Island. You are within eight minutes of the customhouse and post office of the city of New York, and mail can be landed from the field and the Battery by boat within that time, leaving out the questions of pneumatic-tube service from the customhouse to the landing field. The mail comes from all over the country to New York City, and the delay in its transmission costs your constituents millions of dollars, even with the new port that is being built at Barren Island and the other airport in Jersey at Port Newark.

Irrespective of the statements made by Secretary Mellon to Mayor Walker to the effect that an airport should be as near the business section as possible, when I interviewed Secretary Mellon he said, "Yes; he did make that statement, but Governors Island was in another department." Postmaster General New, after making speeches and public statements that airports should be as close to the center of business as possible, and after recommending putting sheds on the Pennsylvania yards in Long Island City, when I called his attention to Governors Island all he stated was that fog made it unsuitable, even though our meteorological figures show that fog is not as bad at Governors Island as at Barren Island. Also an interview with President-elect Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, only brought out the statement that it was in another department. I hope, now that as he will be the head of the Government shortly, that with his business knowledge and experience the War Department may listen to him if he will only speak. Practically every organization in New York City save one has advocated at one time or another the use of Governors Island as an express landing field.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As to selecting Governors Island as a port, it was testified before the Senate committee that Governors Island was not properly adapted for military purposes, and they proposed to appraise the island and sell it.

Mr. COHEN. It was given by the State of New York to the Government of the United States with the express stipulation that it was to be used for military purposes only.

I called the attention of the Secretary of War to the fact that Major General Ely, now in command of the Department of the East, had made a recommendation to the War Department that the barracks, instead of crossing the island, should be placed along Buttermilk Channel, which would leave the island open and free. This recommendation, I believe, would be found in the official record, as the statements, I believe, were made to Representative JAMES, as well as myself; but the War Department saw fit to ignore these recommendations, and when I visited Secretary Davis he refused to make any change in the plans, saying it was for the esthetic and architectural beauty of the island; but more of that later.

I want to call your attention to one thing: The only place around New York adapted for landing in the event of an airplane having difficulty with its engine and being compelled to land is Governors Island. With these improvements on the island it will be almost impossible for an airplane to land, and unless the wind is just right it will be impossible for an airplane to take off. They have talked of wind, of fog, of the necessity for military occupation. They have talked practically about everything imaginable, but when you come to the last analysis, the absolute reason they want to keep Governors Island under the War Department is due to the fact that it is the last stepping-off place for major generals of the Army who are going to be retired from the service, and every general in the Army hopes he will spend his last days on a beautiful island in New York Harbor, surrounded by all the athletic activities of a country estate or club and within 15 minutes of Broadway and Forty-second Street.

I realized only this fall, when I tried to get this island from the War Department, why it was they had a donkey as the emblem of the West Point Athletic Association. I can now understand why that is. I believe the Army should have what is known as "bulldog tenacity," but to have and just show the plain stubbornness of a mule or donkey is hardly compatible with one of the chief branches of the United States and a department that covered itself with everlasting glory a few short years ago. In this particular case they have acted as stubborn as the proverbial mule; no real reason but just the pure cussedness of a mule. You may call it a mule or a donkey or a jackass, but far be it from me to say that of the Army or the War Department; but if the War Department is spending its millions of dollars—yes, its hundreds of million dollars—is spending our money, the people's money, in the same way as they are spending it on Governors Island I think the country at large should have it called to its attention, and the voice of the people, which in the last analysis is the voice that must be listened to, should call, through its proper representatives, the Members of the House and Senate, for a thorough investigation of the conduct of the War Department.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COHEN. Certainly.

Mr. McFADDEN. What is the probable value of the land on Governors Island?

Mr. COHEN. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] can inform the gentleman, because I do not know whether they have ever had it appraised.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think they have had it appraised at several million dollars, which, of course, is a ridiculously low figure, because the gentleman can imagine what that land, practically in the heart of a great city, would be worth.

Mr. McFADDEN. I asked that question because I have been informed by those who have a competent judgment of values in New York that that island is worth from a billion to a billion and a half dollars. If that island is worth that amount of money, it occurs to me it is a rather extravagant thing for the War Department to use it as a retirement home for the officers of the Army.

Mr. COHEN. I hardly think the value of the property enters into the matter at all. It is not the value of Governors Island as Governors Island, but the value of Governors Island to the country at large. I can take the train from Washington and reach my office within 30 minutes of the time you can get from here by airplane. The same thing applies to Boston and to other places within a radius of 300, 400, or 500 miles, and that is on account of the distance of this airport from New York. Let me add the statement of General Conner before the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, Sixty-ninth Congress, on page 17, which reads as follows:

General CONNER. Yes. That has been opposed by the Second Corps Area. There has been no decision on it. In fact, the matter has not been presented to the Secretary of War, but there has been some talk—perhaps I have done most of it myself—about selling Governors Island. If we could get the money, if we could put Governors Island on the market and sell it, and one other place, we could see our way very clear toward financing this housing program.

Senator BINGHAM. What is the appraised value of Governors Island?

General CONNER. I think Governors Island was considered at one time to be worth $25,000,000.

Major BRANT. We had an estimate of $18,000,000, and we thought that was an underestimate.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not for training purposes, a good place for infantry, is it?

General CONNER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You just have a parade ground on it practically; is that all?

General CONNER. A parade ground is all. Of course, it serves to house the Second Corps Area headquarters.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is a fine post.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will remember that when the authorization of an appropriation for the erection of the buildings now under discussion was before the House some of us protested and pointed out that eventually, notwithstanding the stubbornness of the War Department, Governors Island would be used as a terminal airport. The gentleman from Michigan then assured us that the buildings would not be placed in such a position as to hamper the use of Governors

Island for that purpose. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] has kept his word. When the War Department announced it was going to build in this way I telegraphed the gentleman from Michigan as follows, as we were not in session at the time, and he got busy:

JULY 16, 1928.

Hon. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

You will recall appropriation for barracks Governors Island and opposition thereto and agreement that no permanent building would be placed anywhere on island which would interfere with eventual use of island as aviation field. Am now informed it is contemplated to construct barracks for one regiment southwest of present brick barracks. This would entail unnecessary waste public funds because progress can not be stopped and island will be used eventually as airport; besides it is not keeping gentlemen's agreement at time appropriation authorized. What do you advise to prevent this spiteful action and wanton waste of public funds? Kindly wire me 220 Broadway, New York City.

F. LAGUARDIA.

The following is an extract from a letter from Representative JAMES to myself:

I find your wire upon my return from a trip. I am to-day writing to Washington, stating I hope that no barracks will be erected that will prevent Army or other planes from landing on Governors Island.

You will agree that there is no doubt about the fact that they are doing this building purposely in order to prevent the use of Governors Island as an airport, because they can then come in and say, "You can not use it as an airport because we have these buildings here."

Mr. COHEN. May I say to the gentleman from New York—and I say it without fear of contradiction—that word came from the Architect's Office that they were to erect a building across this island. Originally they claimed they wanted to beautify the island, but see what they intend to do. They put the front of the barracks so as to face the officers' quarters, but when I called their attention to the fact that the rear of the barracks facing the open bay would hardly be "a thing of beauty and a joy forever"; that the rear of a building is never one that beautifies scenery, they for the first time changed their views and had the architect change their plans so as to make that part that was originally to be the rear facing down the bay front, and now the front faces down the bay and the rear faces the officers' quarters. They have made the back the front and the front the back.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But leave it in the middle of the field.

Mr. COHEN. That is true, and that is done against the recommendation of Major General Ely, who is thoroughly familiar with the island. He has landed on the island in an airplane and has taken off from the island.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. If this island were bought for war purposes and it is now devoted to other purposes, will it not go back to the State or city of New York?

Mr. COHEN. No; because the bill adds, for military, naval, postal, and other governmental uses. And I am quite sure that the State of New York would be more than willing to amend its deed of gift for what would be of such great benefit to the people of the city, State, and Nation.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

Mr. ACKERMAN. The gentleman is aware that the Newark Airport is about to open, is he not?

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

Mr. ACKERMAN. And will not that cut down the time now taken in transporting mail from Hadley Field to New York City?

Mr. COHEN. It will cut it down about 30 minutes, and it will take about 45 minutes. It now takes from one hour to two hours from Hadley Field, while now it will take about 45 minutes from Newark Airport, and I am giving you the very best of breaks through traffic. I went to Newark the other day in my automobile and it took me an hour and ten minutes, in my own machine.

Mr. ACKERMAN. That was because of the interference with traffic on account of the bridge being down, was it not?

Mr. COHEN. No; the bridge was not down. They were making some repairs, but the gentleman knows that is a very heavy artery of traffic.

I do not know what action this House will take, but I say to you gentlemen if this were a business corporation, and we were the directors responsible to our stockholders, and we had a piece of property within a few minutes of the business heart of a city, we would not think of going from 30 to 40 minutes, or even an hour, away to build on another piece of property when we had an island such as Governors Island at our door to build on. Were there a real necessity for the War Department's selfish desire to withhold Governors Island from the lanes of progress, or a real reason to-day, 1929, as in 1800 to retain troops on Governors Island, or if the War Department could give a real reason except the selfish desire to retain Governors Island for its own use because it had it in the past, I would be the first one to say that I am mistaken and withdraw any endeavors to convince this House that Governors Island is a small cog, though a necessary one, in the prosperity of the community along modern lines, but while I do not know what action this House will take, while I know that the matter has passed beyond the Appropriations Committee, still I hope that this House will take suitable action and force the War Department to bow to the will of the people. I shall not be here next session, except possibly as a visitor, so my desire for Governors Island as an express station is not due to any other than a public-spirited motive. I trust that the House and Senate will pass a joint resolution withholding or recalling their approval of the appropriation for a barracks on Governors Island. This should be passed at this session because they are just now digging the foundations and the cost of changing same to the side of the island facing Buttermilk Channel would practically be nil, and if something is not done before the regular session of the Seventy-first Congress convenes it will be almost like the words of the marriage ceremony:

Speak now or forever after hold your peace.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, AND THE DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SHREVE, TINKHAM, ACKERMAN, OLIVER of Alabama, and GRIFFIN.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS AND SUITS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3581) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia, with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this agreeable to the minority?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have consulted the ranking minority member in the city, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ZIHLMAN, UNDERHILL, and GILBERT.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KINDRED, indefinitely, on account of illness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7729) entitled "An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases."

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 2330. An act authorizing reconstruction and improvement of a public road in Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyo.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3590. An act to amend section 110 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 4217. An act to authorize the removal of the Acqueduct Bridge crossing the Potomac River from Georgetown, D. C., to Rosslyn, Va.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4640. An act to provide for the retirement of enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4721. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near the Great Falls, and to authorize the use of certain Government land; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4778. An act authorizing the Moundsville Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Moundsville, W. Va.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4848. An act for the relief of T. L. Young and C. T. Cole; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4861. An act authorizing the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4976. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Lawrence and Randolph, State of Arkansas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Spring River at or near the town of Black Rock, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4977. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Lawrence and Randolph, State of Arkansas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Spring River at or near Imboden, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5038. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5039. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at Mount Carmel, Ill.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. J. Res. 9. Joint resolution to establish a joint commission on insular reorganization; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 4616. An act to legalize the existing railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 14813. An act to authorize an appropriation for completing the new cadet mess hall, United States Military Academy.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 10, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Thursday, January 10, 1929, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(10.30 a. m.)

Navy Department appropriation bill.
Independent offices appropriation bill.
District of Columbia appropriation bill.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

Requesting the President to propose the calling of an international conference for the simplification of the calendar, or to accept on behalf of the United States an invitation to participate in such a conference (H. J. Res. 334).

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

To consider general legislation.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m. and 2 p. m.)

Tariff hearings as follows:

SCHEDULES

Earths, earthenware, and glassware, January 10, 11.
Metals and manufactures of, January 14, 15, 16.
Wood and manufactures of, January 17, 18.
Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of, January 21, 22.
Tobacco and manufactures of, January 23.
Agricultural products and provisions, January 24, 25, 28.
Spirits, wines, and other beverages, January 29.
Cotton manufactures, January 30, 31, February 1.
Flax, hemp, jute, and manufactures of, February 4, 5.
Wool and manufactures of, February 6, 7, 8.
Silk and silk goods, February 11, 12.
Papers and books, February 13, 14.
Sundries, February 15, 18, 19.
Free list, February 20, 21, 22.
Administrative and miscellaneous, February 25.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

(10.30 a. m.)

Continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927 (H. R. 15430).

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

(10 a. m.)

A bill to provide for a joint reunion of the surviving veterans of both sides of the war 1861–1865 in the city of Washington in the year 1929, to authorize the appropriation of sufficient money from the United States Treasury to pay the expenses of such joint reunion, and to provide for a commission to carry into effect the provisions of this act (H. R. 14461).

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

(10 a. m.)

For improvement of navigation and the control of floods of Caloosahatchie River and Lake Okeechobee and its drainage area, Florida (H. R. 14939).

For the improvement of the Caloosahatchie River, Fla., for purposes of navigation and flood control (H. R. 15095).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

733. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1930, for the War Department, for Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, $5,500 (H. Doc. No. 503); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

734. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, for the War Department, for completing the construction of the new cadet mess hall, cadet store, dormitories, and drawing academy at the United States Military Academy, $297,540 (H. Doc. No. 504); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

735. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, to remain available until expended, for the purchase of capital stock of the Inland Waterways Corporation created by the act of Congress approved June 3, 1924, as amended by the act approved May 29, 1928, $10,000,000 (H. Doc. No. 505); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOOPER: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 13899. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title; with amendment (Rept. No.

2047). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 12404. A bill authorizing erection of a memorial to Maj. Gen. Henry A. Greene at Fort Lewis, Wash.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2049). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 14466. A bill to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2050). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. S. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the city of New York to enter upon certain United States property for the purpose of constructing a rapid transit railway; without amendment (Rept. No. 2051). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LAMPERT: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8746. A bill to regulate the height and exterior design and construction of public and private buildings in the National Capital fronting on or located within 200 feet of a public building or public park; with amendment (Rept. No. 2052). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 13957. A bill to repeal certain provisions of law relating to the Federal building at Des Moines, Iowa; without amendment (Rept. No. 2053). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOFFMAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 14493. A bill for the relief of George Press; without amendment (Rept. No. 2048). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1071. A bill for the relief of Clyde Calvin Rhodenbaugh; without amendment (Rept. No. 2054). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOYLAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 8575. A bill for the relief of Thomas Gaffney; without amendment (Rept. No. 2055). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14576) granting a pension to Elizabeth Segall, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 16078) authorizing appropriations for the construction and maintenance of improvements necessary for protection of the national forests from fire, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GREEN: A bill (H. R. 16079) to provide for the establishment of a branch home of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOFFMAN: A bill (H. R. 16080) to authorize a uniform and equipment allowance for officers of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 16081) to provide additional hospital facilities for World War veterans at American Lake, Wash.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. LEAVITT: A bill (H. R. 16082) to authorize the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16083) to authorize the payment of interest on certain funds held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: A bill (H. R. 16084) authorizing appropriation of $30,000 to reimburse Navarro County, Tex., for destruction of two bridges belonging to said county by Federal authorities; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KURTZ: A bill (H. R. 16085) to transfer Blair County, Pa., from the western judicial district to the middle judicial district of the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REID of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 16086) to amend the act approved May 15, 1928, entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 16087) to provide for the allowance of stationery and supplies to Members of Congress, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Accounts.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16088) to increase the salary of the Clerk of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LEAVITT: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 374) to create a commission to investigate Indian affairs; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) interpreting sections 3 and 4 of Mississippi flood control act of 1928; to the Committee on Flood Control.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ABERNETHY: A bill (H. R. 16089) for the relief of Elizabeth Quinerly Cummings; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16090) for the relief of Hugh Dortch; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ALDRICH: A bill (H. R. 16091) granting a pension to Ellen E. Phillips; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARBOUR: A bill (H. R. 16092) for the relief of Bertell Q. Ford; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRAND of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 16093) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Stubbs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUSHONG: A bill (H. R. 16094) granting a pension to Alice M. Clouser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLAGUE: A bill (H. R. 16095) granting a pension to Lizzie Olson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 16096) authorizing the President to appoint Edgar A. Gilbert to the position and rank of first lieutenant in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CULLEN: A bill (H. R. 16097) granting a pension to Elsie Bell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ENGLAND: A bill (H. R. 16098) granting a pension to Ephriam (Malcom) Malcolm; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16099) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Kincaid; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GAMBRILL: A bill (H. R. 16100) granting an increase of pension to Matilda S. Brewer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 16101) granting a pension to Hester A. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 16102) to correct the naval record of James M. Hudson; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HALL of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 16103) granting a pension to George A. Sence; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 16104) granting a pension to Mary Mills Burns; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16105) granting an increase of pension to Nancy M. Oglesby; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 16106) for the relief of Paul C. Christian; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16107) granting permission to First Lieut. Joseph M. Glasgow, Cavalry, United States Army, to accept the decoration and diploma of Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor, which decoration was conferred on him by decree of the President of the French Republic, dated September 4, 1928; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 16108) granting an increase of pension to Margret McMillen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 16109) granting a pension to William J. Reisman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KADING: A bill (H. R. 16110) granting a pension to John M. Chambers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 16111) granting a pension to Jennie Hitchcock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MENGES: A bill (H. R. 16112) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Toomey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 16113) for the relief of Jennie Williams; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MORROW: A bill (H. R. 16114) granting an increase of pension to William Felter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PARKER: A bill (H. R. 16115) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Hilton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHAFER: A bill (H. R. 16116) granting a pension to Annie Duggan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 16117) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the owners of the British steamship Kyleakin for damages sustained as a result of a collision between that vessel and the U. S. S. William O'Brien; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TABER: A bill (H. R. 16118) granting a pension to Elida Irene Hodder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VESTAL: A bill (H. R. 16119) granting an increase of pension to Almira Justice; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VINCENT of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 16120) for the relief of Mildred L. Williams; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VINCENT of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 16121) granting a pension to Margaret S. Colf; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WAINWRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 16122) for the relief of E. Schaaf-Regelman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WASON: A bill (H. R. 16123) granting an increase of pension to Delta J. Dressler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 16124) granting a pension to Beverly A. Foster; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16125) granting a pension to Zereldia A. Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 373) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Bey Mario Arosemena, a citizen of Panama; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD: Resolution (H. Res. 285) to pay to Norman E. Ives $1,200 for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8194. By Mr. CHALMERS: Petition signed by citizens of Toledo, Ohio, protesting against discriminations practiced against certain nations and nationals of the Caucasian race and desiring and demanding the abatement thereof; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

8195. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Dixie Post, No. 64, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, National Sanatorium, Tenn., favoring the passage of the Rathbone bill (H. R. 9138); to the Committee on Pensions.

8196. By Mr. PEAVEY: Petition from the Superior Trades and Labor Assembly at Superior, Wis., demanding that the same consideration be extended to radio station WCFL as is extended the other broadcasting stations, and that it also be granted the desired unrestricted wave length; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8197. Also, petition from the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local Union No. 755, Superior, Wis., demanding that the Federal Radio Commission place WCFL, radio station of Farmer-Labor, to its former position, frequency, unlimited power, and time of operation without interference from other stations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8198. By Mr. ROMJUE: Petition of Dixie Post, No. 64, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, favoring the passage of House bill 9138; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE

THURSDAY, January 10, 1929

(Legislative day of Monday, January 7, 1929)

The Senate met in open executive session at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in legislative session, announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had been signed previously by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta on the western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 4616. An act to legalize the existing railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio.

REPORT OF GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR & RAILWAY CO.

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from Hamilton & Hamilton, attorneys, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1928, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

OFFICERS DELINQUENT IN RENDERING ACCOUNTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, submitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the officers of the Government who were delinquent in rendering or transmitting their accounts to the proper offices in Washington during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1928, the cause therefor, and whether the delinquency was waived, together with a list of such officers who upon final settlement of their accounts were found to be indebted to the Government and had failed to pay the same into the Treasury of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Treasury Department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania and Mr. SIMMONS as members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States, December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, December 19, 1928.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McLean	Sheppard
Barkley	Fletcher	McMaster	Simmons
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Steiwer
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Stephens
Black	Gerry	Metcalf	Swanson
Blaine	Glass	Moses	Thomas, Idaho
Blease	Glenn	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Greene	Norbeck	Trammell
Brookhart	Harris	Nye	Tydings
Broussard	Harrison	Oddie	Tyson
Bruce	Hawes	Overman	Vandenberg
Burton	Hayden	Phipps	Wagner
Capper	Heflin	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Johnson	Ransdell	Warren
Copeland	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Waterman
Couzens	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Curtis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Deneen	King	Robinson, Ind.
Dill	La Follette	Sackett
Edge	McKellar	Schall

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are absent on official business.

Mr. DILL. I desire to announce that Senators FRAZIER, PINE, LA FOLLETTE, WHEELER, and THOMAS of Oklahoma, members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, are in attendance upon a hearing of the subcommittee.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily detained from the Senate by reason of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am going to ask to have a formal reading of the treaty. It has not as yet been read, and we may, I think, have that done now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the treaty.

The legislative clerk read the treaty, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT OF THE GERMAN REICH, THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF THE BELGIANS, THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC, HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF GREAT BRITAIN, IRELAND AND THE BRITISH DOMINIONS BEYOND THE SEAS, EMPEROR OF INDIA, HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY, HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF JAPAN, THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF POLAND, THE PRESIDENT OF THE CZECHOSLOVAK REPUBLIC,

Deeply sensible of their solemn duty to promote the welfare of mankind;

Persuaded that the time has come when a frank renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy should be made to the end that the peaceful and friendly relations now existing between their peoples may be perpetuated;

Convinced that all changes in their relations with one another should be sought only by pacific means and be the result of a peaceful and orderly process, and that any signatory Power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interests by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this Treaty;

Hopeful that, encouraged by their example, all the other nations of the world will join in this humane endeavor and by adhering to the present Treaty as soon as it comes into force bring their peoples within the scope of its beneficent provisions, thus uniting the civilized nations of the world in a common renunciation of war as an instrument of their national policy;

Have decided to conclude a Treaty and for that purpose have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries

THE PRESIDENT OF THE GERMAN REICH:
Dr. Gustav Stresemann, Minister for Foreign Affairs;

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:
The Honorable Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State;

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF THE BELGIANS:
Mr. Paul Hymans, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Minister of State;

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC:
Mr. Aristide Briand, Minister for Foreign Affairs;

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF GREAT BRITAIN, IRELAND, AND THE BRITISH DOMINIONS BEYOND THE SEAS, EMPEROR OF INDIA:

For GREAT BRITAIN and NORTHERN IRELAND and all parts of the British Empire which are not separate Members of the League of Nations:
The Right Honourable Lord Cushendun, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Acting Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

For the DOMINION OF CANADA:
The Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs;

For the COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA:
The Honourable Alexander John McLachlan, Member of the Executive Federal Council;

For the DOMINION OF NEW ZEALAND:
The Honourable Sir Christopher James Parr, High Commissioner for New Zealand in Great Britain;

For the UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA:
The Honourable Jacobus Stephanus Smit, High Commissioner for the Union of South Africa in Great Britain;

For the IRISH FREE STATE:
Mr. William Thomas Cosgrave, President of the Executive Council;

For INDIA:
The Right Honourable Lord Cushendun, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Acting Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY:
Count Gaetano Manzoni, his Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Paris.

HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF JAPAN:
Count Uchida, Privy Councillor;

THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF POLAND:
Mr. A. Zaleski, Minister for Foreign Affairs;

THE PRESIDENT OF THE CZECHOSLOVAK REPUBLIC:
Dr. Eduard Benès, Minister for Foreign Affairs; who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

ARTICLE II

The High Contracting Parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

ARTICLE III

The present Treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties named in the Preamble in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, and shall take effect as between them as soon as all their several instruments of ratification shall have been deposited at Washington.

This Treaty shall, when it has come into effect as prescribed in the preceding paragraph, remain open as long as may be necessary for adherence by all the other Powers of the world. Every instrument evidencing the adherence of a Power shall be deposited at Washington and the Treaty shall immediately upon such deposit become effective as between the Power thus adhering and the other Powers parties hereto.

It shall be the duty of the Government of the United States to furnish each Government named in the Preamble and every Government subsequently adhering to this Treaty with a certified copy of the Treaty and of every instrument of ratification or adherence. It shall also be the duty of the Government of the United States telegraphically to notify such Governments immediately upon the deposit with it of each instrument of ratification or adherence.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Treaty in the French and English languages both texts having equal force, and hereunto affix their seals.

DONE at Paris, the twenty-seventh day of August in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight.

[SEAL]	GUSTAV STRESEMANN
[SEAL]	FRANK B. KELLOGG
[SEAL]	PAUL HYMANS
[SEAL]	ARI BRIAND
[SEAL]	CUSHENDUN
[SEAL]	W. L. MACKENZIE KING
[SEAL]	A. J. McLACHLAN
[SEAL]	C. J. PARR
[SEAL]	J. S. SMIT
[SEAL]	LIAM T. MACCOSGAIR
[SEAL]	CUSHENDUN
[SEAL]	G. MANZONI
[SEAL]	UCHIDA
[SEAL]	AUGUST ZALESKI
[SEAL]	DR. EDUARD BENÈS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and there being no committee amendments, article 1 is open to amendment. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield for a question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It has been often stated that the effect of this treaty would be to preserve the status quo for the benefit of those nations which have satisfactory boundaries and protect them from any aggressive or warlike act which would rectify or change those boundaries. The question has been asked whether the treaty might in any way prevent attempts by pacific means to settle boundary disputes or to secure rectification of boundaries. I should like to ask the Senator's opinion whether the treaty has any such effect?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my understanding is—and it is very clear to me—that the treaty would in no wise embarrass any nation in an effort to seek relief so far as boundaries are concerned or as to other settlements with which it might be dissatisfied, provided it should seek it through pacific means. The treaty would preclude the going to war upon the part of a nation signatory to the treaty to bring about a change of its boundaries or to bring about a change in a situation otherwise, but in no way would it affect the effort of a nation, dissatisfied with its boundaries or dissatisfied with its situation in any other respect, seeking to readjust conditions through pacific methods, through the organization of public opinion, the mobilization of moral feeling in regard to it or to an appeal to public opinion, or by any other method which would be regarded as pacific. All those things would be open under this treaty. Let me say in this connection that all the small nations of Europe have hastened to adhere to the treaty. I think it is their great hope.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator is aware, of course, that all over the world there are unsettled boundaries, there are controversies over boundaries, or there are nations which think that, for one reason or another, their boundaries should be changed. There are many cases where boundaries were established by treaties, and in many of the notes or agreements of acceptance of this treaty mention is made of one treaty or another which might have had to do with boundaries. I should like to ask the Senator, then, whether he thinks that by that process there has arisen any estoppel or implied agreement that any party to this treaty is not wholly free, by pacific means, to endeavor to change a boundary or a treaty establishing a boundary? Of course, I recognize, as the Senator has just stated, that this treaty would prevent any warlike action to that end.

Mr. BORAH. In my opinion there is nothing in the treaty and nothing in the correspondence which would preclude a nation signatory to the treaty from pursuing any peaceful method to readjust its boundaries or to readjust its rights.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think that there has been any suggestion here or elsewhere that the contrary would be true. I have never heard that anybody has construed this treaty as preventing the readjustment of boundaries by mutual consent or through diplomatic negotiation or through any other peaceful means, such as arbitration.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have heard the suggestion made in Europe that some of the acquiescences to the treaty referred to former treaties establishing boundaries in such language as to imply that those were sacrosanct and could not be changed even by peaceful means. It seems to me to be an absurd suggestion, but, so as to remove all possible doubt, I wanted to have the question and answer in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With the permission of the Senator having the floor, I think it may be said that, of course, all arrangements for peace, in a sense, tend to the preservation of the status quo, in that they contemplate the elimination or prevention of war to change existing conditions.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, we are all agreed as to that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, some time before the debate closes, I may make some suggestion as to the benefit which I believe this treaty to be to small nations. I shall not do so now.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Alabama wish to occupy the floor?

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to inquire, Mr. President, what is the order of business? Are reservations to be voted on first?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 1, article 1, of the treaty is open to amendment, the treaty now being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORAH. I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] if he is ready to proceed?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was not quite ready, Mr. President; but if other Senators are not ready I suppose I can go on now as well as at any other time.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the pending measure has spoken of his purpose to make some remarks before the close of the debate. May I ask him whether it is possible to come to any understanding as to when the vote will be had on the measure, and in what order we shall vote with reference to the reservations and resolutions which have been submitted?

Mr. BORAH. I should be very glad to have an understanding as to a time to vote. I had not taken up the matter of closing debate yet for the reason that I thought there were certain Senators who were not ready, on account of the fact that they had not spoken, to come to an agreement to vote; but I am quite ready to do so.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to enter upon negotiations with the Senator from Idaho to that end.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not intrude myself upon the Senate at this time for the purpose or with the hope of influencing the vote of any Member of this body with reference to this treaty; but I do so in order that I may record, for my own benefit and for any other benefit that may accrue, some reactions which have occurred to me over the treaty and as a result of the discussion of it during the past few days.

There is a group of people in this country and in the world which looks upon this treaty as the ushering in of the millennium. There is another group which takes a wholly cynical view of it—that it is utterly worthless and ineffective, and that it is an evidence of weak-mindedness on the part of responsible statesmen in the world to entertain the hope that this treaty or any other treaty that may be entered into among the nations can abolish what history and politics must recognize as having been an instrument of national policy from the beginning of the world until this hour.

I do not belong to either of these groups. I hope that my attitude and my view of the treaty is not wholly visionary. I am quite certain it is not cynical.

I recognize that in any legal document, whether it is entered into between individuals or between nations, there will necessarily be controversy as to interpretations. If it were not for the controversies arising over the interpretation of legal documents and legal rights, the legal profession would have vanished from the earth long ago. But the fact that there are controversies, perfectly honest and perfectly logical, that arise over the interpretation of private agreements, is no reason why men should refuse to enter into those agreements, because, fortunately, there is in this country and in every other civilized nation a tribunal which can officially interpret the documents, and grant to the parties signatory thereto the rights to which they are entitled. Fortunately or unfortunately, there is now no world tribunal to which the United States is obligated, either by this treaty or any other treaty, to submit its controversies with other nations; and to that extent this treaty and our attitude toward any world organization now in existence offers an exception to the rule which may be applied to contracts entered into between private citizens of any nation.

In order to understand the background and the atmosphere which gave rise to this treaty it would be necessary to recount somewhat at length the long, distressful, and bloody history of mankind in its efforts to emphasize nationality, in its efforts to establish by might and by power the existence of a right which any individual nation has claimed or may claim under this or any other treaty.

I do not desire to go into any such review of the history of the world, because it would take too long, and it would serve no good purpose; but it is, I think, helpful to those who are constantly seeking some different method by which to settle the differences that arise between nations to reflect upon the fact that this treaty, that the treaty of Locarno, that the treaty of Versailles, with whatever of injustice it may contain, with whatever harsh terms there may have been inserted in it by the victorious powers, that the treaties of arbitration entered into during Mr. Bryan's incumbency as Secretary of State—that all these efforts on the part of all the nations or any group of nations to provide some method by which controversies may be settled amicably, grow out of the distressing and brutal conflicts of history, which have always brought suffering and misery to the great masses of the people, who in many cases had no voice in determining the policy which brought them into the catastrophe in which they were sufferers. I say it is extremely helpful to remember the fact that it is out of this history, out of this misery, of this bloodshed, of this humiliation, of this national and international bitterness and hatred, there have come these modern efforts to find some way by which the nations of the world may settle their controversies without resort to war. It has been very truthfully said that even the victor in any war is ultimately the loser, although it may have accomplished the purpose for which it went to war.

The treaty which we are considering at this time offers one of those plans, one of those hopes, one of those honest efforts, in my judgment, to find a peaceful way to settle the disputes that arise among nations; and the question which we are called on to determine for ourselves as we vote either for or against this treaty is whether it offers any hope of the peaceful solution of this age-old question that involves not only nations as nations, but involves millions and hundreds of millions, and even billions of men, women, and children throughout the nations of the earth.

I do not desire to enter into a discussion of the effect that this treaty may have upon the League of Nations or upon the World Court so far as our own country is concerned. We are not adherents to the treaty of Versailles, which created the League of Nations, although it may be said that that conception emanated very largely from the United States of America. We are not parties to the protocol which creates the World Court, either as an offshoot or an agency of the League of Nations. Therefore, so far as any binding effect that the existence of the League of Nations or the World Court may have upon us as a nation with relation to this particular treaty is concerned, it does not seem to me that we need give ourselves any great concern with reference to it.

There are some Members of this body and citizens of this Nation as citizens who hope that our ratification of this treaty and its existence among nearly all the nations of the earth may gradually lead us into the League of Nations and the World Court. There are other distinguished Members of this body and other citizens of the United States who are enthusiastically for this treaty in spite of their opposition to the League of Nations and in spite of their opposition to the World Court, and probably in the hope that the existence of this treaty and the obligations that may be assumed under it may in the long run prevent the entrance of the United States into the league or into the World Court.

I do not desire to enter into that controversy. Let any Senator or any citizen obtain whatever comfort or consolation he may out of either of the horns of this dilemma. The question which confronts me, as I see my duty here, is: What effect will the ratification of this treaty have upon our country, upon the peace of the world, upon the realization of the highest ideals which in all generations have actuated peaceful men and women in drawing near to the goal which they all seek?

It may be unfortunate, and sometimes during this debate I have felt that it was unfortunate, in this era of "open covenants openly arrived at," and in view of the frank statements made by the nations which have signed this treaty preliminary to its signature, that in the very circumstances of the case it probably was impossible for our own Nation to be quite as frank with reference to one or two matters involved in this treaty as the other nations which felt it their duty to make some explanation or condition upon which they agreed to sign it.

I can realize that in any responsible position like that of Secretary of State or President of the United States in our own country, and in similar positions in other countries, where a treaty has been sponsored, where it has originated in some sense in a department of our Government or with the head of our Government, there is more or less embarrassment later if they are compelled to admit that they did not survey the whole situation originally; that they did not take into consideration all of the ramifications that might be affected by the promulgation of such a treaty. I can also understand some of the delicacy that must have surrounded our own State Department, after having sponsored and suggested and promoted this treaty, in having to take the position that it had to be explained by any formal communications or reservations. Yet I am compelled to pay tribute to the statesmen of other countries who, not only for themselves, not only in the interest of their own countries, but in the interest of a broader and more complete understanding in the years to come, when somebody must interpret this treaty, placed on record their understanding of its effect upon them, not only as to the assertion of their rights but as to the assertion of the rights of other nations that might be similarly situated, either at the time of the ratification or in the changes that may occur in the relations of nations hereafter in the world's history.

I am for the treaty, Mr. President. I wish that a little more had been said by our Secretary of State. I wish circumstances had justified him in going a little further in his correspondence and in his public addresses upon the subject with reference to those matters which other nations felt it incumbent upon them to point out.

I think if it had been possible or had been wise, under the circumstances, for our State Department to have elaborated more fully in its reply to the note of Sir Austen Chamberlain, and the notes of other nations, it might have saved a good deal of this debate and a good deal of the time of the Senate, and, at the same time, it might have reassured not only Members of this body, but it might have reassured the country more completely as to the exact status of our country in the assertion of the rights that may arise hereafter under this treaty or any other treaty.

I desire now to address myself very briefly to some of the objections which have been raised by the technical hair-splitters—and, of course, we are bound to have technicians in a great body like this, and it is well that we should go into minute detail in undertaking to understand the effects of a legal document like this.

It is my understanding, not only as to treaties but as to contracts, even so limited as between individuals, that in the interpretation of a contract, the correspondence and conversations leading up to the consummation of the agreement are competent evidence in determining what the contract means, if there should arise a controversy over its interpretation.

What does this treaty obligate the United States to do? No more than it obligates any other nation to do, because, as developed a few days ago in a colloquy between the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and myself, this treaty can not mean one thing for one nation and another thing for another nation. If it is a multilateral treaty, that means, in my judgment, that it is alike to all nations, is the same to all of them. There is no nation that signs it or that adheres to it that can adhere to the benefits that accrue under the treaty, and, at the same time, deny or renounce whatever obligations may accrue under it. In interpreting this treaty in that light, even assuming that the interpretation of this treaty given by the distinguished Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain in the explanatory note which he saw fit to send to our country as the agent of Great Britain, as it reflects Great Britain's attitude, is the correct interpretation—and I think it is a correct interpretation—it can not mean that for Great Britain and something else for the United States, or France, or Italy, or any other country in the world.

If there are certain regions in the world that Great Britain now regards as of special interest to her, either as a matter of self-defense, or under any conception of moral obligation to less fortunate peoples throughout the world, then that same interpretation and that same obligation and that same right would exist with respect to any other nation which in the course of the years that lie out in the future might find itself similarly situated with Great Britain. In other words, if Great Britain can reserve the right, as she undertakes to do in this letter of Sir Austen Chamberlain, to construe this treaty as to her right of self-defense with respect to any part of the world where she has a special interest similar to that which now exists; and if, as is conceded here, the United States may do the same with reference to the Monroe doctrine, or any other regions of the world where our interests are comparable or similar, then it must logically follow that any other nation signatory to this treaty, although not now similarly situated either with Great Britain or with the United States, but which in the years to come might be similarly situated as a result of historic events which may occur in the future, would have the same right under this treaty to exercise the same right of self-defense wherever that right existed as a matter of necessity which either Great Britain or the United States now enjoys under the terms of this treaty on account of the situation in which they find themselves.

The question has been raised here as to the binding obligation of this treaty in the event no peaceful method of settlement can be arrived at between nations, because of the provision of the treaty that they obligate themselves to resort to no method of settlement except peaceful methods. I do not understand that provision of the treaty to mean that a nation must be compelled to sit supinely by and have its rights attacked or infringed upon by some other nation which may have an aggressive design against it, or some selfish purpose to accomplish by aggressive action toward our country or any other country. In other words, this obligation to resort to no other method except a peaceful method to settle a controversy presupposes that the peaceful methods have been or will be resorted to, or that these peaceful efforts have been made, prior to a conflict; but if any other nation, in the exercise of some unlawful or unholy design against our Nation or any other nation, makes an unfriendly gesture or takes an unfriendly, aggressive course, by any sort of force, the treaty does not obligate our Nation or any other nation to sit by peacefully and supinely and have its rights infringed upon without resorting to the same method of defense that has always been recognized as a part of national policy. It does not deny to any nation the right of self-defense.

While the language itself might imply it, I can not conceive of any nation, any administration, or any responsible statesman in any country committing his country to a proposition that would renounce war as an instrument of national policy and carry that renunciation to the extent of permitting an infringement of its rights, either at home or upon the high seas, or permitting an invasion of its territory, or an invasion of its institutions, or a combined effort on the part of other nations or of any single nation to undermine the foundations of its civilization or of its national existence. Therefore, in interpreting the meaning of the language "renunciation," we must interpret it in the light of experience and in the light of well-recognized national rights as well as human rights.

Every man and every woman who belongs to or joins civilized society has given up something that may be denominated a natural right—and by natural right we mean such right as men may enjoy in a state of nature; and in a state of nature the only right that is recognized is the right of force, the right of superior power, the right to accomplish some design of an individual without regard to any assumed natural or inherent rights of any other individual where force and power and might are the only law recognized.

Nobody would be willing to revert to a state of nature. Nobody would be willing to abandon all the bulwarks of civilization, all the structures of government, all the regulations which society has found it necessary to set up in order that civilization may be advanced, and return to a status where every man would be a law unto himself or where no right would be recognized except that of superior force.

Because I, as an individual, am a member of civilized society or am a citizen of the United States of America, or because I am a citizen of my own State under certain obligations that have been prescribed by our Constitution and by the laws of of our State, I do not thereby abandon my right to defend myself or my castle or my rights if they are invaded by any man or any group of men who might undertake to deprive me of the rights which I enjoy as a member of civilized society.

By analogy I think we may place the same interpretation upon this treaty. Our ratification of the treaty does not take from us the right to exercise the first law of nature—the right of self-preservation.

Complaint has been made here that by the ratification of this treaty we obligate ourselves to stand by the status quo throughout the world, and yesterday the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] took the position that by the ratification of this treaty we denied the right of every submerged race in the world to aspire to independence, that we hereby bind ourselves, while no other nation is bound, to recognize the claims of Great Britain as to her jurisdiction throughout the world, and that as to Egypt, India, Australia, or any other group or colony or section of the world over which Great Britain now exercises suzerainty or authority by entering into this treaty we close the door of hope to those submerged nations which may aspire to independence, and that if this treaty had been in effect in 1776 the thirteen original Colonies would not have had a right to revolt against the mother country and to establish their independence.

Mr. President, I am unable to read into this treaty or into any of the correspondence preliminary to it, or into any possible interpretation of the treaty, any obligation on the part of the United States or any other nation that is signatory to this treaty to interfere in the internal affairs of any other nation in the world. If all the colonies of Great Britain should on the day following the universal ratification of this treaty rise in revolt and seek to establish their own independence as independent nations of the world, there is not only nothing in this treaty which obligates the United States to interfere with those colonies or nations in their efforts, but, on the contrary, I think the plain implication of the treaty is that we would not have any right to interfere in any such conditions or circumstances.

If the treaty had existed in 1776 under the same terms and in the same language that it carries to-day there would have been nothing in it that would have obligated any other country to have interfered on behalf of the American Colonies or in antagonism to them. It is conceivable that if the treaty had existed in 1776 to 1783 France might not have had a right under the treaty to have interfered in our behalf, but at the same time she would have had no right to have undertaken to interfere on the side of Great Britain to prevent the accomplishment of our efforts to establish an independent nation.

Therefore I am not frightened away from this treaty by what I think is a fantastic interpretation, by what I think is an effort to read into it not only language but implications that are not justified either in the language or in the negotiations that led up to it. I do not think that by ratifying the treaty we are thereby obligating ourselves to close the door of hope to any submerged nation or race that may in the years to come aspire to national independence.

Let us see what it really was that Sir Austen Chamberlain said. That seems to be the "fly in the ointment" here. That seems to be the stumblingblock. Mr. Chamberlain had either the foresight or the frankness, or perhaps both, to call attention to certain circumstances which he regarded as essential to the defense and preservation of the British Empire. We are told that in doing this he was making a shrewd attempt to commit the United States to acquiescence in the existence or creation of a sort of British Monroe doctrine, while under the surface and under the cover and behind the scenes there was a tacit understanding between our State Department and the British State Department that no mention would be made of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, did the Senator from Wisconsin say that?

Mr. BARKLEY. He did not say that actually occurred, but he drew that picture of what he thought probably occurred.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I did not so interpret it. However, I did not hear all he said.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will find that reference in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin as printed in the RECORD this morning. The writing of a letter on the part of Mr. Chamberlain did not create any new situation. It did not add anything to a condition which all of us recognize surrounds the British Empire and the British Government.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. In connection with my comment on the failure of our Secretary of State to discuss the American Monroe doctrine, is it not a fact, as I stated, that in the British note containing paragraph 10, that paragraph 10 was numerically subsequent to paragraph 4 of the British note with reference to self-defense, and is it not a fact that our Secretary of State remained silent not only upon the question of the American Monroe doctrine but also remained silent with respect to his interpretation of paragraph 10 of the British note?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I had already stated, in the absence of the Senator, that I regretted that the circumstances did not seem to impel the Secretary of State to give some recognition to that suggestion in the British note.

Mr. BLAINE. I not only regret it but I condemn it as a betrayal of his own country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not able to follow the Senator in that strong position on that subject. I think it is unfortunate that the Secretary of State did not go into a discussion of it and did not mention it. I so stated the other day in an interrogatory which I propounded to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. But at the same time, taking into consideration the Secretary's attitude upon the treaty and his explanation of its scope and meaning to the effect that it in no way rescinded or infringed upon or denied or in any way placed any condition upon the right of self-defense, and that he interpreted self-defense as exactly what the Senator has in mind, I can well understand why under the circumstances he did not deem it necessary to go into a detailed discussion of it or to recognize it specifically in his reply to the British note.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to argue the question. I want to get the Senator's view, and that is all. I will speak in my own time. But does the Senator attach no significance to the fact that while Great Britain carefully reserved or set up for the first time specifically a British Monroe doctrine, our Secretary of State never once mentioned our Monroe doctrine? Does he not attach any significance to that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I attach some significance to it. I do not attach any significance to it, though, in so far as it affects our rights under this treaty or any other treaty, because the American Monroe doctrine is a doctrine that has been in existence for 105 years. It has been recognized by other nations of the world even in the formality of treaties. It was recognized in the treaty of Versailles. It has been recognized, I think, in one or two other treaties, possibly more than that. But it is a doctrine that is well established as a part of the fabric of international law. It is recognized by other nations as such. That can not quite be said of the so-called British Monroe doctrine. At least, I am not so sure that it can.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will have to take exception to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky that our Monroe doctrine is recognized as a part of the fabric of international law. It has never been recognized as international law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did not the treaty of Versailles make an exception? Of course, we are not a party to that treaty. But that treaty recognized the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The treaty did not make an exception, and we did not become parties to that treaty.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; but it is binding upon all the nations that are parties to that treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; not at all. It was made for our benefit, with the expectation that we would sign, and when we do not sign a treaty we can not claim its benefits. However, let me ask the Senator whether it would make any difference in his construction if he knew that the Secretary of State had purposely avoided any reference to the Monroe doctrine because he feared that the South American countries would then refuse to sign?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it would have no effect upon my interpretation of the treaty itself because the Monroe doctrine was made in its original form as a doctrine to apply as between the United States and European nations in dealing with South America. It was not a doctrine entered into between the United States and any South American country, and has never been so regarded, although I agree with the Senator from Idaho and other Senators that we have wandered far from the original conception of the Monroe doctrine. I doubt very seriously whether President Monroe ever had it in his mind when he announced that doctrine that it could be made to apply to a friendly settlement of legitimate disputes that might arise between some country in Europe and some country in South America, such a controversy as might arise between any nations anywhere in the world and not peculiar to South America. We have developed and interpreted the doctrine until it is now generally understood that our Government applies it to the settlement of disputes between European nations and South American nations, even in a friendly way, that by some conception might infringe upon the future right or power of defense or safety of the United States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator recognizes the fact that at least a number of South American countries have been constantly protesting against the continued application of the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I am aware of that, but of course that protest has arisen largely out of our attitude toward the South American countries in matters involving our country, wholly independent from any European nation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That may be. However, that is aside from what I am trying to develop. The Senator concedes that South American countries, or some of them at least, regard the Monroe doctrine as an infringement upon their rights. He now asks those countries to sign a general pact of peace. We know that their feeling is such touching the Monroe doctrine that they would not sign the treaty if we mentioned the Monroe doctrine, and with that knowledge we do not mention it, and we thereby secure their signatures. Does not the Senator think that in morals, if not in law, we have waived the Monroe doctrine, or does he think that we have the right to perpetrate that sort of—I do not like to say "fraud" but it is the only name I know that fits the case—upon the South American countries?

Mr. McLEAN. A secret reservation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; a secret reservation.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I said earlier in my remarks, I regard it as unfortunate in this day of complete publicity with reference to international relations existing between different countries, that some mention was not made of that interpretation of the treaty; but at the same time I doubt whether the Senator or any Senator can say that if Secretary Kellogg had gone into a detailed discussion of the Monroe doctrine in his correspondence with the British Secretary of State, South American nations would not have signed the treaty. I can make no such assumption. There is no way by which we can judge what would have happened if something else had happened that did not happen.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator then thinks it would not be obnoxious to South American countries at all if we did now mention the Monroe doctrine, and if that is the case why do we not now mention it in some form or other here in the Senate so that the world may know that America still stands upon her doctrine?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be well for some mention to be made of it. It has been discussed here in the Senate by different Senators. I think the committee in its report upon the treaty might well have made perfectly plain the interpretation that we place upon the treaty and our entrance into it. If controversies should ever arise hereafter as to what we mean, we ought, as a matter of evidence, to make perfectly clear that by ratifying this treaty and by undertaking to carry out its obligations, we do not surrender this time-honored doctrine which has been purely American in the assertion of our rights on the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I expected just that sort of frank and fair answer from the Senator. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the rule that what may be said by individual members of a legislative body in discussing a proposed law or treaty is not accorded much, if any, weight by any court or tribunal called upon to construe the instrument; but that a report of a committee is taken as carrying with it considerable authoritative construction. Of course, if the committee has failed, or should fail to report, the same thing may be accomplished even more positively by a simple resolution of the Senate stating that in ratifying this document we do not waive in any way our Monroe doctrine. In view of that, I ask the Senator why he can not concur with some of us who insist that that sort of precautionary measure should be adopted?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is a difference between having in the record something that is capable of being used as an interpretation of our conception of the obligation of the treaty on the one side and a formal resolution that might be in the nature of a reservation or a condition or an exception of some kind attached to the treaty itself.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not speaking of a reservation, because it has been said that if there were a reservation attached the treaty would have to go back to all other nations for future consideration. To my mind, that is exactly what we ought to do as a matter of fair and square dealing; but, in view of that objection, many of us have said that a simple resolution of the Senate, showing that we maintain our Monroe doctrine unimpaired, would be acceptable. I think, in view of the Senator's argument, he ought to be in a frame of mind to acquiesce in it. None of us want to destroy this treaty since it has reached its present stage, I take it, but we do want it to be clear that we are not waiving any rights. I myself would never have offered this treaty; I go so far as to say that it is a foolish thing, in my judgment; other people have a different view of it, and they have the right to their different view; but if we ratify the treaty, if there ought to be some expression by a committee, and if the committee does not express itself, why should not the Senate say authoritatively, while we have ratified this treaty as it stands, in doing so we have not waived the Monroe doctrine; we have not by implication agreed ever to make war upon any nation in an effort to enforce this treaty, and we have not by accepting the treaty accepted any particular constructions that anybody has put upon it?

Since the Senator's patience with me does not seem to be exhausted, I will say this further: When sensible men who are not trying to destroy the treaty entertain fears that certain constructions may be placed upon the treaty, is it not fair to assume that antagonistic European interests, finding it to their particular interest to give those constructions, are very likely to insist upon them, and that, as a matter of prudence, we should in advance clarify the entire situation so that in the future no honest nation can honestly give the constructions which we fear the treaty will bear?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should hesitate to take here any action that would place an embarrassment around the United States in the future application of this treaty that would not be placed around the other nations that are signatory to it. Of course, in a treaty or in any sort of legal document that is drawn up in as general terms as is this treaty, in the very nature of things, it is capable of all sorts of constructions. Efforts will no doubt in the future be made to place constructions upon the treaty that will be in the interest of different nations that may have something in mind in the application of the treaty or in undertaking to shun some obligation that may be assumed under it. Taking human nature as it is and not as we would like to have it, we are bound to anticipate, just as individuals now and then seek to relieve themselves from the solemn obligation of a contract entered into between them and others, that groups of individuals which we call nations may assume, now and then, to try the same thing. So I would hesitate, by our action here, to do anything that might embarrass our country to a greater extent than any other country would be embarrassed in the future in the interpretation and application of the treaty; but I would not be willing to go to the extent of hazarding the accomplishment of this treaty. Taking our chances upon the interpretation already placed upon it by the Secretary of State and by almost every Senator here, I say I would not go so far as to hazard the accomplishment of this treaty, in order to surround it by technical explanations so that no controversy might ever arise in the future as to its interpretation; and I do not believe that that is what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Of course, when the Senator says that we have a treaty here that is so loosely drawn that almost any construction may be placed upon it——

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not use the words "loosely drawn." I said the treaty was general in its terms.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well, then—"general in its terms."

Mr. BARKLEY. The expression "loosely drawn" carries a sort of stigma; and I do not care to use it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to stigmatize anything; but, taking the Senator's language, the treaty is "generally drawn." Of course, that is a sufficient reason why we ought never to sign it. The Senator from Kentucky would not permit a client of his, nor would I permit a client of mine, to sign a contract so general in its terms that anybody could place upon it any kind of a construction that he wanted to place.

Mr. BARKLEY. If in the days of dueling a contract had been entered into between two men that in the settlement of their disputes thereafter they renounced dueling as an instrument of their private policy and agreed not to attempt to settle their disputes except by some pacific means, would the Senator have undertaken in that sort of a contract to have gone into all the possible interpretations and applications of such an understanding between the two men in order that in the future no misunderstanding might arise?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, no; I would have just prohibited dueling and meant it. I would not have prohibited dueling except when somebody wanted to construe the prohibition to mean that what he was doing was in self-defense, that he was defending himself, and was defending his honor, and therefore he had the right to draw his sword when anybody infringed his honor. That is the condition in which we find ourselves in connection with this treaty.

Mr. BARKLEY. The analogy is a little different, because the state in that case had the power to prevent dueling, and did so, and had the power to punish those who participated in dueling. The difference is that there is no tribunal in the world that has the power now to prevent war, enforce its prevention, and to punish the nation that violates the prohibition against war. Our Nation has been unwilling to enter into any such understanding.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Therefore, in drawing any contract, there being no court to construe it, we ought to make the contract all the plainer. However, we are going a little aside from the thought that I had in mind. The Senator says that the treaty is so generally drawn and that many constructions can be placed upon it. It would seem, therefore, that the argument in favor of removing a difficulty of construction that we can remove ought to be adopted before any controversy arises, because it is a poor time to construe an instrument after a controversy has arisen.

The Senator from Kentucky has said he does not want to impair the chance of the acceptance of the treaty. If Great Britain can attach important conditions of construction, if France can attach important conditions, if Germany can attach important conditions, if Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia can attach important conditions, if Russia and Persia and Egypt can attach important conditions which they deem necessary to do in order that there shall be no mistake as to the conditions upon which they sign the treaty, why can not the United States attach the very conditions that every advocate of this treaty has insisted are our rights and have gone to the extent of insisting that we do not even need to state them; that they are in the treaty?

Why should any nation refuse to accept this treaty because we insist upon stating in plain words that which so many Senators say is embraced in the treaty anyway?

Mr. BARKLEY. My answer to that would be, of course, that I do not think any nation ought to refuse to adhere to it on that ground. Whether there is such a nation, of course, I am not in a position to say.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator will pardon me further, if there is a nation that will not sign this treaty, if we state plainly what it means, then is it not perfectly certain that that nation does not intend to keep the treaty with the construction which we put upon it? If that is the case, ought we not to know it now before we touch pen to paper and bind ourselves?

The Senator would say that to any client; I know he would, for he is a splendid lawyer. No one could get him to say to a client, "You believe this contract means a certain thing, but if you write it into the contract the other man will not sign it; therefore do not write it in the contract; let us hope," to use the slang phrase, "to put it over on the other fellow and get his signature." The Senator would not do that; an honest lawyer would not do that; an honest client would not do that; and an honest man would repudiate it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator will recognize the fact that the conditions carried in the correspondence with Germany and France largely deal with the obligations under the League of Nations and the Locarno treaty; and in the very nature of things probably it was proper to make it clear, although I do not know that it was necessary, because this treaty does not undertake to abrogate any obligation that is carried under the League of Nations or the treaty of Locarno.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If it was necessary to mention the Locarno pact—which is a pact for mutual defense and offense—if it was necessary for Great Britain to mention and set up really for the first time officially her Monroe doctrine, why is it not equally necessary for us to set up our rights? Why should we alone, of all the nations in the world, stand silent and reserve nothing, except that the desire to have this treaty ratified is so great that the rights of the United States are to be jeopardized?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the explanations on the part of Germany and France and Great Britain and all the nations that made any reference whatever to the League of Nations and its obligations, and the treaty of Locarno and the neutrality treaties, in my judgment, are not matters about which we, as a Government, may concern ourselves. We are under no obligations under the League of Nations, and whatever reservations were made by any European nations as to obligations under the League of Nations were reservations among themselves, not applicable to the United States; and the same is true of the treaty of Locarno. We are under no obligations under those treaties. We are not a party to either of them. So that it gets down, after all, to the interpretation of the treaty as it applies to the Monroe doctrine and the so-called British Monroe doctrine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then the same argument that the Senator has made would be true as to our Monroe doctrine. We would say it is none of their business; but I do not take that view.

Mr. BARKLEY. We might as well attach a reservation or condition that the ratification of this treaty in no way abrogates or affects the so-called Bryan treaties, entered into 15 years ago, or any other treaty between the United States and any South American nations which have recently been entered into for arbitration and friendly settlement of disputes that arise between the South and Central American nations and our Nation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. This treaty does not abrogate those treaties. It does not affect them, except possibly to strengthen them. It might be just as logical, however, to say that in order that that may be made clear we shall have a reservation or an attachment to this treaty saying that it does not affect our obligations under these arbitration treaties heretofore entered into by the United States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, let us see how far that answer goes. It would be perfectly proper for us to say it, and if we were as wise as foreign diplomats we would do exactly what they did do; we would say it. But, waiving that for the moment, I say that when we enter upon this treaty we are concerned with the obligations of other nations if those obligations are to continue.

Let us see if that is not true.

We make a treaty saying that no nation will go to war under any circumstances. Then, if there were treaties for war, we certainly would be concerned in that question, and we would want to know whether they were going to stand on their old treaties or obey this one. There were such treaties. Upon the face of the papers they were wiped out. Then came the European nations and said, several of them, "We want it understood that these obligations to make war under certain conditions are not wiped out, and you must consent to that or we will not sign." Are we concerned in it?

What are we making this treaty for? We are making it to preserve the peace of the world—not our peace alone, but the peace of the world—and if there be treaties and obligations which are excepted from this treaty, they thereby minimize the effect and scope of the treaty, and we are interested because it then becomes not a general treaty of peace but a treaty of peace with qualifications for war.

How can it be denied that that is true?

Mr. BARKLEY. We are, of course, interested as a nation in the peace of the world. We are not interested, as a party to the contract referred to by the Senator, in the treaties existing among the nations of Europe. The covenant of the League of Nations in article 10 stipulates that all the signatories to that treaty obligate themselves to respect and preserve the territorial and national integrity of the other nations that are signatory to it.

According to my interpretation, even if we were a member of the league and had ratified that treaty, that does not obligate us to go to war to preserve the territorial integrity of one nation if it should be attacked by another; but it specifically provides that the council of the league shall thereafter consider what means shall be adopted to carry out that treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And, having considered, what next?

Mr. BARKLEY. So that I do not regard that treaty as a treaty which compels entrance into war; neither do I regard the Locarno treaty as a treaty that provides for war. All of them are looking—it may be unwisely, in the estimation of the Senator—but all of them are looking toward the accomplishment of peace.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; all of them are treaties by which certain nations agree that in the event another nation does a certain thing they will apply to that nation what they call "sanctions," which means warlike measures, and may mean war. If such treaties exist, and if we recognize them, we thereby limit and qualify this treaty that we are entering into; and to that extent we are clearly interested—that is the point I am making—just as they would be interested, and no more than they would be interested if we were specifically to reserve the Monroe doctrine.

Now, let me illustrate that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not quite so, because to reserve the Monroe doctrine is a reservation, according to my interpretation of the original Monroe doctrine, against any action on the part of Europe.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Surely.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the reservations and obligations carried in the treaty of Locarno and the treaty of Versailles, to which we are not parties, can not be interpreted as reservations or conditions applied against the United States, because we are not parties to those treaties.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; they are not applied against the United States; but let us see if they do not apply here.

It is true, now, that they do not make us agree in the treaty of Locarno that we will go over there and do anything. They do agree that they are going to do a great deal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Just a second. There can be no war in Europe without its affecting—and that is the great argument for this treaty—the welfare, the economic conditions of this country and of every other country. Therefore if they get up a war in Europe, no matter who starts it, it has some effect upon us, and thus we are interested.

It may mean an embargo upon our commerce. It may mean seizure of our vessels on the high seas, as England seized them in the last war long before Germany began to do it. It may mean drawing us into another struggle, as we were drawn into this through interference with our trade and commerce and shipping. So we are interested; and it is idle, it seems to me—and I say it with all respect—to claim that here is a treaty that we ought to enter upon for the purpose of preserving the peace of the world and stopping all wars, and then to say that we are not to consider the question of whether there are certain obligations and treaties which are really treaties that draw nations into a conflict which is not, as to them, a conflict of self-defense.

Let me illustrate what I mean: Here are four of us. We have been enemies. We agree now that for the common benefit of all we will keep the peace; that we will not fight except in strict self-defense. Then it transpires that I and my friend here from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] have a side agreement that if either one of us is attacked, or either one of us has a controversy, we will join to put down one of the other men. Now, certainly when we all sign this pact that side agreement has its effect upon that pact of peace; and certainly it is not the same thing, when we accept this side agreement and except it from the terms of the agreement, as the agreement would have been if the side agreement had not been made. There can not be any question about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The side agreement, while it may disturb the peaceful atmosphere of the community of interest among the four of you, can have no binding effect upon the other two who have not been a party to it, even though it might draw in a fifth who was not a party to either of those agreements.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But it has the effect, the Senator must admit, of excepting from the terms of this agreement all of the conditions of the other agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might affect the terms of the agreement as between those nations or those parties affected, but it could not affect the terms of the agreement between us and those nations; that is my contention.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that the Senators are discussing the Locarno pact, I want to put into the RECORD article 2 of the Locarno pact:

> Germany and Belgium, and also Germany and France, mutually undertake that they will in no case attack or invade each other, or resort to war against each other.

The principle is identical with the principle here, limited only in territory. All the members of the Locarno pact are members or will be members or signers of this treaty. Therefore if they violate the Locarno pact they have violated this agreement, and we are released from it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is true; when any nation goes to fighting we are released under this agreement so far as that nation is concerned. The Locarno pact provides, however, that in the event certain things are done, certain other nations will go to war, not when they are attacked but when a treaty is violated.

Mr. BORAH. For instance, let us say that Germany, simply as an illustration, violates the Locarno pact. The minute she does so we in this country are released from obligations to Germany by reason of this agreement, and every other signer of this agreement is released as to Germany, and they deal with Germany with the same freedom as if the treaty never had been signed. The violation of the Locarno pact at the same time and through the same act annuls this treaty as to that nation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We are not released as to those that do not break the pact; and those others who do not break the pact are engaging in a war to put down a particular nation, not because they have been attacked but because one of them has been attacked or because the terms of a treaty have been violated.

Mr. BORAH. No; but suppose Germany violates the Locarno pact. Great Britain is released from this treaty as to Germany. The United States is released as to Germany.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; but that is not all. Great Britain is not only released as to Germany from her obligation to keep the peace but she has made a positive obligation to make war.

Mr. BORAH. She has a perfect right to do so, so far as this treaty is involved, because it has been broken, and Great Britain is free.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The minute the Locarno pact is broken Great Britain is free to proceed against Germany.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Surely.

Mr. BORAH. The minute the Locarno pact is broken this country or Great Britain would be free to proceed against Germany.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But is there no difference in the distinguished Senator's mind between being free to take an action or not to take it, and having assumed a positive obligation to take an action, that action to be an action of war?

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, any nation which is a party to both the treaty of Locarno and this treaty may violate both treaties in the same act.

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the violation of either one of them or both in the same act releases the other nation from the obligation that it may be under to grant to that offending nation the benefits of this treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it does not obligate the United States to do anything else; to go to war or to take any action against the offending nation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But it does obligate these other nations to make war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not against us.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; but against another nation and thus spread the war. Any man who says that that does not make any difference reasons in a way that I can not understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the Locarno treaty, as I understand it, any nation which may be described as an offending nation is a nation that has taken some aggressive action without justification against some other signatory to the treaty. The same conception is carried in this treaty. Of course, if some nation a party to the Locarno treaty takes an aggressive action against some other nation a party to that treaty, then the obligations, whatever they are, under the Locarno treaty, attach to all the nations that have signed it. Of course, they do not attach to us. But if, in the violation of the Locarno treaty by an aggressive act on the part of a nation party to it, this treaty is at the same time violated, then it automatically relieves our nation of any obligation to accord to the offending nation any benefit under this treaty. That does not obligate us to go to war or take sides in the controversy that is involved in the violation of the Locarno treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, let us stick to the question we are discussing. Everybody admits that we are not obligated to go to war unless there is an implied obligation on our part to sustain the treaty, and I am afraid there is; but I am not arguing that now. Let us take the other view. Here are certain nations of Europe. They have agreed to certain things upon the happening of which they will resort to war-like measures. We make a treaty with all of them to keep the peace. One of them breaks the peace. That breaks the treaty as to us and it breaks the treaty as to all the other nations. If that were all, we would all be on a parity; but we acknowledge the validity of a treaty that binds these other nations, then, to resort to certain measures, and those measures mean the spreading of the war, or may mean the spreading of the war, to a large number of countries.

Let us see what the Locarno pact says. It is not so simple as would appear:

> The high contracting parties collectively and severally guarantee, in the manner provided in the following articles, the maintenance of the territorial status quo resulting from the frontiers between Germany and Belgium and between Germany and France and the inviolability of the said frontiers as fixed by or in pursuance of the treaty of peace signed at Versailles on the 28th of June, 1919, and also the observance of the stipulations of articles 42 and 43 of the said treaty concerning the demilitarized zone.

The first thing there is a guaranty of a status quo. It is never to be changed.

I am not speaking for Germany, but I am speaking of the principle. No matter how onerous these conditions may become, no matter, though Germany might deem it a matter of life and death, not only of self-defense or defense of her interests but of her very life, to undertake to change them, these nations with which we are now signing have solemnly agreed to put her down. I continue the reading:

Germany and Belgium, and also Germany and France, mutually undertake that they will in no case attack or invade each other or resort to war against each other.

This stipulation shall not, however, apply in the case of—

1. The exercise of the right of legitimate defense; that is to say, resistance to a violation of the undertaking contained in the previous paragraph or to a flagrant breach of articles 42 or 43 of the said treaty of Versailles.

There is an agreement to go to war when nobody is defending, when nobody is attacked. They are to go to war for other conditions.

If such breach constitutes an unprovoked act of aggression and by reason of the assembly of armed forces in the demilitarized zone immediate action is necessary.

2. Action in pursuance of article 16 of the covenant of the League of Nations.

3. Action as the result of a decision taken by the assembly, or by the council of the League of Nations or in pursuance of article 15, paragraph 7, of the covenant of the League of Nations, provided that in this last event the action is directed against a State which was the first to attack.

Then we go on:

ART. 3. In view of the undertakings entered into in article 2 of the present treaty, Germany and Belgium and Germany and France undertake to settle by peaceful means and in the manner laid down herein all questions of every kind which may arise between them and which it may not be possible to settle by the normal methods of diplomacy:

Any question with regard to which the parties are in conflict as to their respective rights shall be submitted to judicial decision, and the parties undertake to comply with such decision.

All other questions shall be submitted to a conciliation commission. If the proposals of this commission are not accepted by the two parties, the question shall be brought before the Council of the League of Nations, which will deal with it in accordance with article 15 of the covenant of the league.

The detailed arrangements for effecting such peaceful settlement are the subject of special agreements signed this day.

Now, listen to this:

ART. 4. 1. If one of the high contracting parties alleges that a violation of article 2 of the present treaty or a breach of articles 42 or 43 of the treaty of Versailles has been or is being committed, it shall bring the question at once before the Council of the League of Nations.

2. As soon as the Council of the League of Nations is satisfied that such violation or breach has been committed, it will notify its finding without delay to the powers signatory of the present treaty, who severally agree that in such case they will each of them come immediately to the assistance of the power against whom the act complained of is directed.

In plain, simple language that means that the obligations imposed upon Germany at the end of the war are to stand, that German territory is to stand as it did stand, that no matter how much Germany may claim she is defending herself, no matter how vital is her action to her interests, the Council of the League of Nations decides that question; and if the Council of the League of Nations decides that question against Germany, every one of these nations has agreed to go to war. You say that does not qualify a general proposition that we will never go to war? Or that proposition is not qualified by the definition of self-defense, that we will never go to war except in self-defense? This is not a matter of self-defense at all; it is a matter of imposing conditions upon a nation.

I do not see how Senators can argue that the exception of these articles of the Locarno treaty from this pact makes no difference. If it makes no difference, then everything is excepted from it and there is no pact, and all we are doing is throwing a kiss to Europe and they are sending it back; and I hope that there will not be any germs connected with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be more effective and more valuable now and then to throw a kiss than to throw a bomb.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is true, and if we are going to throw a kiss, let us understand that it does not carry with it any obligation of matrimony.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose there is no possibility of misconception as to the Senator's attitude on the question of matrimony between nations. My understanding of the provisions of this Locarno treaty, in a nutshell, is this: That the nations obligate themselves, in that section where they guarantee to respect the territorial limitations of each country, not to undertake to acquire a part of the territory of any other nation a party to that treaty by force.

Germany has signed that treaty. It does not lie in our mouths in the United States to complain that Germany, by reason of the Locarno treaty, may be forced to accept permanently the boundary lines fixed in the treaty of Versailles. If Germany has with her eyes open signed that treaty, has been willing to obligate herself not to undertake to recover any of the property taken from her by the Versailles treaty by force, it does not lie in our mouths to complain of an action that Germany has freely and voluntarily entered into.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is not the question.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield, but I desire to conclude my remarks as soon as possible.

Mr. BLAINE. Can it be assumed that Germany voluntarily joined in the treaty of Versailles? Is it not a fact that Germany was the defeated nation, and that word was given to Germany that she should place her signature on that treaty or that the armed forces would be moved and occupy her territory?

Mr. BARKLEY. That may have been suggested in the preliminary negotiations about the armistice, but it brings us back to the old question of taking a horse to water and not being able to make him drink. It may be that Germany was not only taken to the creek but was forced to drink. But that would not be true as to the Locarno treaty. There was no big club held over Germany to compel her to sign the treaty of Locarno. That was a treaty signed by the belligerent nations of Europe that had been primarily involved in the World War, to try to make it impossible for any other situation ever to arise among them that would bring on another world conflict like that which was precipitated by the entrance of Germany, Russia, France, and England into that great war. It is to the credit of Germany and the other nations that they were willing to enter into an obligation that would prevent the creation or existence of such conditions as those which produced the World War.

I can not place any interpretation on the Locarno treaty that puts upon the United States either any legal or moral obligation to interfere in the application or in the enforcement of the Locarno treaty, even though we become a member of the family of nations that sign the treaty now under consideration. The signatories promise, of course, that they will not invade one another for aggressive purposes or interfere with the boundaries between the nations; but in the very nature of things they could not agree that if one nation violates the treaty and invades another nation to get some of its territory, that nation will be compelled to sit supinely by and permit itself to be ravished without retort or without defense.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will not the Senator let me bring him back to the question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Even if the treaty of Locarno obligates the other nations that are signatory to it to go to the defense of the invaded nation, even to the extent of war, that does not obligate the United States under this treaty to follow in the wake of that war, unless as a consequence of it, of course, the question of our own self-defense should arise, as it did in the war between Germany and the other nations of Europe.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is true that is not a treaty alone to prevent Germany from invading some other country, as the Senator put in his statement. Here are the mentioned articles 42 and 43:

ARTICLE 42

Germany is forbidden to maintain or construct any fortifications either on the left bank of the Rhine or on the right bank to the west of a line drawn 50 kilometers to the east of the Rhine.

ARTICLE 43

In the area defined above, the maintenance and the assembly of armed forces, either permanently or temporarily, and military maneuvers of any kind, as well as the upkeep of all permanent works for mobilization, are in the same way forbidden.

ARTICLE 44

In case Germany violates in any manner whatever the provisions of articles 42 and 43, she shall be regarded as committing a hostile act against the powers signatory of the present treaty and as calculated to disturb the peace of the world.

So, coming back to our original point of discussion, which was whether accepting and acknowledging these exceptions of the Locarno treaty and of the treaty of Versailles, in connection with this treaty, changed the treaty, it must be perfectly manifest now that they do change this treaty. They take out of it all of these other obligations. They place the other nations under an obligation to act and to make war, not in defense but in order to impose the conditions of certain treaties upon Germany. Therefore it must constitute a very important qualification to this treaty.

That being true, and the European nations having done all that to safeguard every treaty, and every agreement, and every pact that they have, why should not the United States, as a matter of common prudence, stipulate that we are not waiving the most important doctrine our country has ever maintained? Why should they object and how can they object if the Senate says we have not waived or impaired the doctrine announced by James Monroe?

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator very largely in his last suggestion. I do not agree with him in his interpretation of the obligations that may remotely be placed upon us by reason of those two treaties in Europe to which we are not parties.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to be misunderstood. The Senator has been very patient. I have not said they impose obligations upon us.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Senator said it changed the treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It changes the treaty because they are taken out of the treaty, but it does not impose an obligation upon us to fight. It places us in the position of recognizing their rights to make these wars without in any way consulting us, and they can not make that sort of war without it affect our interests. That is all I said.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is only putting upon the notes, in which reference is made to the Locarno treaty and the Versailles treaty, the extreme interpretation which the Senator from Missouri might be capable of placing upon them. In my judgment it only means that we recognize that there are such treaties that exist in the European nations, but by simply recognizing that they have entered into those obligations in no way affects our moral or legal obligation under this treaty or under those treaties. It might be just as logical to say that we ought to put in here some definition that would make it perfectly plain that while recognizing the Locarno treaty and the Versailles treaty to some extent, we make no exception of the reservations on the part of the nations that are parties to those treaties, but we want it understood that it in no way affects us or our rights.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Why not also say, "Since you gentlemen have reserved all of your treaties and your obligations, we likewise reserve ours and want you to understand that we regard it as a matter of vital interest to us"?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that will be necessary. I think if all the nations parties to those treaties should undertake to set out all the obligations that they are under to somebody else that may be remotely affected by this treaty, they would comprise a large volume and the world would lose sight of the treaty itself.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We would only be doing what Great Britain has done. We would simply be saying, and I am using common ordinary language to express it, "Understand, gentlemen, when we are signing this treaty we are not waiving our Monroe doctrine." Now, I come back to my question again, and then I am not going to interrupt the Senator further. If the Senator knew that the Monroe doctrine, or any mention of it, had been left out of the treaty lest it might arouse the antagonism of South American countries to the treaty, would not he think that as a matter of good faith the South American countries ought to be frankly told that we do intend to except the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. BARKLEY. If there were any necessity for serving notice upon the South American countries that that was our intention, the Senator's position might be well taken, but I think in view of the history of the Monroe doctrine, in view not only of the fact that we have never yielded or departed from it, but have enlarged it, it seems to me to serve notice upon not only South America but the entire world that the United States has no intention of waiving its rights under the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But is afraid to mention it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; we are not afraid to mention it. We are doing it every day. To sum up my attitude toward the various propositions that might be included in reservations or exceptions, I wish to say that so far as treaties that bind the various European nations among themselves to do or not to do a particular thing in a certain contingency, I may be entirely wrong about it; I may be too generous in my conception of their attitude toward one another, but I am not alarmed for the welfare of the United States as a party to this agreement by reason of the treaties that bind the various nations of Europe. If they violate the treaty of Locarno or the treaty of Versailles, they automatically violate the treaty we are now considering, and that violation automatically releases us from any further obligation to the offending nation.

There is a provision in this treaty or in the correspondence which says that if one nation violates the treaty it is to be denied the benefits of the treaty. I am not quite clear as to what that means, because that involves an interpretation of what are the benefits under the treaty, and my conception of the benefits that might accrue under the treaty grows out of the fact that it may provide a method to settle disputes without resort to war, which would be, of course, not only a benefit to the nations involved but a universal benefit.

As I said at the outset, while I think it is unfortunate the Secretary of State made no reference to the Monroe doctrine as a matter of precaution against any misunderstanding in the future, and while I think the Committee on Foreign Affairs ought to make, in its report, a specific reference to the Monroe doctrine and a declaration that we stand by that doctrine and do not waive it, yet I believe that such a declaration on the part of a responsible committee in its report on this treaty would be all that is necessary in order to serve notice on the world that in ratifying the treaty and becoming a party to it we recognize the obligation which we have for more than a century assumed under the Monroe doctrine. But in my present frame of mind I do not believe it is necessary to attach to the treaty itself a reservation stipulating that interpretation of the treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that I may be perfectly understood, I know of nobody that is insisting upon attaching a reservation. So far as I know—and I can only speak from such conversations as I have had—everybody would be content if the committee would make a clear-cut report saying that our interests are not affected as to the Monroe doctrine, that we are not obligated by the treaty, directly or indirectly, to make war in enforcement of it or bound by the terms of any other treaty. That would be satisfactory. It would be satisfactory to have a separate resolution passed by the Senate after the treaty is ratified saying that in having ratified the treaty the Senate did so with the full intent to maintain these rights and stipulations. I am not particular about the language. I am appealing to the Senator, who is just as earnestly desirous of protecting the welfare of his country as anyone could be, that as we are making a perpetual treaty with all the nations of the world, and as every other nation has seen fit to safeguard its particular interests, whether we ought not in some formal way to express the will of the Senate, either through its committee or by its resolution.

What the Senator said on the floor of the Senate is his construction. What I may say will be my construction. We will differ as to certain points, though not as to everything. Other Senators will differ, and therefore the individual statements of Senators do not go very far in the construction of a treaty; but an official resolution of the Senate or an official report of the committee is taken, if not as authoritative and binding, at least as highly persuasive.

So I hope the Senator will help us to insist upon these safeguards. Once they are added I do not care how soon the treaty is ratified.

Mr. BARKLEY. I sincerely hope that some understanding may be arrived at that will be satisfactory to all Senators, at the same time guarding against the impression that we have ratified the treaty with our fingers crossed. I think if we ratify the treaty we ought to do it ungrudgingly; we ought to do it in the hope that it will accomplish the purpose in the minds of those who are responsible for it.

That brings me to just a few concluding remarks upon the suggestion which has been made that this is a mere gesture. Of course, the field for discussion of gestures is almost as inexhaustible as the field for discussion of the treaty itself. It might be said that the mobilization of the Russian Army on the frontier in August, 1914, was a gesture.

The responsible officials of Russia contended then, and the record still shows they contended, that they were seeking peace, but they were making an unfriendly gesture by the mobilization of their armies on the frontier. Sending the Army of Germany down to the Belgian frontier in case it might be needed there for sudden emergencies was a gesture. Germany then contended that it was only in self-defense or only for the purpose of preserving peace. It might be said that the circumnavigation of the globe by the American Navy a few years ago was a mere gesture for the purpose of parading the power and the might of this Nation before the world.

I have just been reading a very interesting book, Meet General Grant, by William E. Woodward. In that book, in discussion of the Mexican War with which President Lincoln, then a Member of Congress, did not agree and against which he voted, with which General Grant himself never had any sympathy although he fought in it, the statement was made that the Army of the United States was moved down to the western Louisiana border and camped there for months as a mere gesture in case something did happen, or perhaps hoping that something would happen to it that would be a casus belli. That was a gesture, of course, but it was an unfriendly gesture.

If the world has been, century after century, making gestures of one sort and another that have led to war, that were bellicose in their nature and in the very nature of their circumstances productive and not preventive of war, it is not entirely out of place, after 10,000,000 of the world's best men have been sacrificed in an effort to settle disputes that might well have been settled by peaceful means instead of through five years of bitter warfare—after more money have been expended in the perpetration of warfare, both offensive and defensive, than is represented by the value of all the property in the United States—it seems to me not out of place that we should make a gesture in the direction of peace, one that may ultimately create a psychological condition in the minds of all the men and women of the world that may abolish war as an effective measure and as an instrument of national policy, instead of fostering it and encouraging it as it has been done throughout the history of the world.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I have heard it stated often that this can not be more than a mere gesture. I am wondering whether the denunciation of war by every nation of the earth and a solemn pledge not to resort to warlike methods to settle disputes by every nation of the world can be considered only a mere gesture.

Mr. BARKLEY. I, of course, do not agree with the suggestion that it is a mere gesture. I am attempting to reply to that suggestion by undertaking to measure this gesture, even if it is a gesture, against the thousands of gestures that have been made throughout the bloody history of mankind that have led to war, the destruction of property, and to the loss of human life. If we are to measure these things according to the character of the gesture, I am willing now and then to place up against the war gesture at least one peace gesture that might result in happiness to the human race. Many human lives have been lost as a consequence of a gesture made toward the hip pocket. It may have been a pure bluff. It may have been by design. It may have been based on the knowledge that in the hip pocket was something that would take life. But many a time a human life has been lost by an idle or foolish gesture to the hip pocket because the other party to the quarrel had a right to defend himself if he thought his life in danger.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have not seen it as often as the Senator from Kentucky, because I come from a peaceful State. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The State of Missouri is inhabited very largely by Kentuckians and I do not think their nature has been denatured by their transfer to Missouri. They have contributed to the civilization of that State.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The best people of Kentucky, the most peaceful, came to Missouri.

Mr. BARKLEY. The State of Kentucky, until a few years ago, gave Missouri every governor which she had from the time of her admission to the Union almost and nearly all of her United States Senators.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We got most of the cream.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are still milking and have a few cows and much cream left.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I know that, for we have the Senator as an example.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not making personal allusions.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. And, of course, my illustration was not based entirely upon my experience in Kentucky. I was speaking of a universal condition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator's illustration is very good. There are gestures and gestures, but frequently we are led aside by illustrations. Of course, when Russia mobilized her army it was not a gesture; it was a threat. It was the first step toward striking. When Germany mobilized her troops on the frontier of Belgium that was not a gesture; that was the first advance toward war. In those instances one could use the term "gesture," but not in the same sense in which we are using it here.

If we were going to make a real movement toward peace, if we were really going to do something, if we were really going to back up our professions by some substantial act, then we ought to be doing more than merely saying that we are going to keep the peace. We ought to be taking a substantial step toward it, and the first step would be to begin reducing the great armaments of war that are in constant preparation. I think the reason this is described as a "gesture"—and I do not like the term; we might use the term "hypocrisy" better—is that it is——

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that term would fit even as a substitute for "gesture," and I am not willing by silence on my part to seem to admit that this treaty is a matter of hypocrisy. I think it is a matter of genuine desire among the people of the world.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly; among the people; but if while we were taking this action we were agreeing to reduce armaments, then our acts would be consistent with our professions. When we are professing to abandon war as a national policy, and Japan is building 50 submarines—I understand the most powerful ever designed—and is also building many cruisers; when Great Britain is preparing to cover the seas with a swarm of cruisers; when Italy is enlarging all of her armaments; when we can absolutely hear their hammers beating and formulating instruments of death; and at the same time we say we will never fight and we are renouncing war as an instrument of national policy, hypocrisy may be a harsh term; but I wish the Senator could think of a gentler one.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be a situation in which even those nations hope for the best and prepare for the worst. I do not think that the United States of America can be truthfully accused of hypocrisy by a refusal to reduce her armaments. I doubt whether anybody can successfully contend that we have not in good faith carried out the obligation into which we have entered with reference to a reduction of armaments.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly. We have reduced our armament. We sunk $500,000,000 worth of the finest fighting ships ever conceived; the other nations sunk but a few. When we sent our ships to the bottom they proceeded to build a great number of ships, and we said to them, "Will you not, please, stop that? Our desire was to reduce armaments." They replied, "Well, you did not nominate it in the bond; we have a right to build them, and we are going to build them." When they got us to agree to abandon the island of Yap, which was to be the half-way house between the Philippines and the United States, they drew a crooked line through the seas so that they could go on and build great fortresses and command the waters of the eastern seas. The Senator might turn his statement of a while ago around, that we make a gesture of peace but prepare for eventualities, and he might say that we prepare for war and make a gesture of peace.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not desire at this time to enter into any discussion of the question of naval armament; we shall have that matter before us in a few days, and I think any discussion of that question might be more appropriate then than now; but assuming that the Senator is correct, that while we have kept the bond and while it may be that other nations have kept it in a technical sense but have circumvented it by increasing their armaments in some directions not covered by the disarmament treaty, I believe that it will be easier for those nations to find an excuse to use those armaments in the absence of this treaty than it will be for them to find an excuse to use them if the treaty shall exist.

Admitting that the obligation of this treaty is largely moral, it is impossible to eliminate moral obligations in the structure of society. There are certain moral obligations in civilized society that could not be enforced in any court of law, and yet they are well recognized in our standards of life. If we place upon this treaty the construction that it is only moral in its obligations, I am optimistic enough to believe that there will be more reason for acknowledging and accepting that moral obligation if this treaty shall be entered into unreservedly and whole-heartedly than if it is not. There would be infinitely less excuse for the very nations which are in the mind of the Senator from Missouri to use their increase of armament, being a party to this treaty, than would be possible if the treaty did not exist. Therefore I am going to vote for the treaty. I am going to vote for it in such form as may be accepted by the world as a whole-hearted acquiescence on the part of the United States in this effort to bring about universal peace. I am going to vote for it in the hope that its application will be the realization of the dream of countless millions of men and women who now look and have heretofore looked forward to the day when war may be abolished as an instrument of policy among the nations of the earth, just as humanity and society in every civilized nation have abolished the duel as an instrument of policy in the settlement of private disputes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frazier	McMaster	Sheppard
Barkley	George	McNary	Shipstead
Bayard	Gerry	Mayfield	Simmons
Bingham	Gillett	Metcalf	Steck
Black	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Blaine	Glenn	Neely	Stephens
Blease	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson
Borah	Greene	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Harris	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Harrison	Oddie	Trammell
Bruce	Hastings	Overman	Tydings
Capper	Hawes	Phipps	Tyson
Caraway	Hayden	Pine	Vandenberg
Couzens	Heflin	Pittman	Wagner
Curtis	Johnson	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Deneen	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Dill	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.	Watson
Edwards	King	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Fess	La Follette	Sackett
Fletcher	McKellar	Schall

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senate, as in legislative session, will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3581) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ZIHLMAN, Mr. UNDERHILL, and Mr. GILBERT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SHREVE, Mr. TINKHAM, Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, and Mr. GRIFFIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, accede to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. JONES, Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. BORAH, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the credentials of TOM CONNALLY, chosen a Senator from the State of Texas for the term commencing March 4, 1929, which were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION

STATE OF TEXAS.

This is to certify that at a general election held in the State of Texas on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, A. D. 1928, being the 6th day of said month, TOM CONNALLY having received the highest number of votes cast for any person at said election for the office hereinafter named, was duly elected as United States Senator for the State of Texas.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of State to be affixed at the city of Austin on this the 19th day of December, A. D. 1928. DAN MOODY, Governor.

By the governor:

[SEAL.] JANE Y. MCCALLUM,
Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

As in legislative session,

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Crawford County (Kans.) Retailers' Association, protesting against the passage of legislation eliminating the Pullman surcharge in transportation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GREENE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wolcott, Coventry, Orleans, Newport, Irasburg, North Bennington, Derby, Swanton, Rupert, West Rupert, and Barre, all in the State of Vermont, praying for the ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES presented petitions, numerously signed, by citizens of Tacoma, Creston, Olympia, Puyallup, Bellingham, Spokane, and Bremerton, and of sundry other citizens and organizations, all in the State of Washington, praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

NAVAL CRUISER PROGRAM

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present a communication, with accompanying resolutions, from the New York Commandery, Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States, in relation to the proposed naval cruiser program, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication, with the accompanying resolutions, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILITARY ORDER OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
NEW YORK COMMANDERY,
New York, January 8, 1929.

Hon. ROBERT I. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States, New York Commandery, has, at a formal meeting thereof, unanimously adopted the inclosed resolution. We can not speak for our numerous commanderies in Canada, China, France, and throughout the United States, but we do speak, and most emphatically, in favor of the so-called 15 cruiser naval bill, as reported out of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

As we know war at first hand and the suffering, during practically all of our wars, from lack of preparedness, so we, American officers of foreign wars in which the United States has participated, expect of those who represent us a reasonable and strong defense. We do not desire in days to come to be forced to rely for defense, for a period of one year, upon the strength of other nations; but, on the other hand, this country should stand reluctant but able to fight when and if the occasion arises. There are none who desire peace more than those 4,335,000 men who participated in the late war, and it is only in fairness to them and to the younger generation who will take our places that you, the men whom we have chosen to represent us in Washington, stand for adequate national defense and vote in favor of the 15 cruiser bill.

The President of the United States in his Armistice Day message to Congress declared that "it is obvious that, eliminating all competition, world standards of defense require us to have more cruisers."

We are confident that you will support this measure in the performance of the great trust you assumed when you took your office.

Very sincerely yours,

NOEL BLEECKER FOX,
Colonel, Field Artillery Reserve, Secretary.

NEW YORK, N. Y., December 14, 1928.

Whereas it is the decided opinion of the President of the United States of America that the proposed naval cruiser program be adopted by the Congress of the United States and be enacted to support the national defense provision of our Federal statutes under the national defense act of 1920 and the additions thereto; and

Whereas the President of the United States of America has recommended to the Congress the enactment of a bill to provide for such a program in conformity with the so-called Washington conference, held during the year 1922 at Washington, D. C., which limited only the building of capital ships and not auxiliaries; and

Whereas the enactment of such a law would tend to place this Nation on a parity with all of the other signatories to that agreement in the proper ratios therein designated and that such passage and adoption is absolutely essential to the maintenance of our Navy, the relation which we bear as a nation to the other nations, signatories to the above-mentioned agreement and others, as well as to the national welfare and to the defense of the United States of America; and

Whereas the resolution hereinafter referred to has been unanimously adopted by the Council of the New York Commandery: Now, therefore, be it

We, members of the New York Commandery of the Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States at the annual meeting hereby recommend: That the said naval cruiser program, as passed by the House of Representatives, March 17, 1928, be enacted; and it is further

Resolved, That a copy hereof shall be sent to the Hon. Calvin Coolidge, to the chairman and the members of the Naval Committee of the United States Senate, and the two United States Senators from the State of New York.

DIVERSION OF COMMERCE FROM AMERICAN PORTS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, during the past session of the present Congress there was much discussion in the Senate with reference to the serious extent to which American ports were losing export business because of the difference in the methods of inspecting grain for export here and in Canada, the difference in rail and ocean freight rates, and because of the preferential custom regulations being imposed by the Canadian Government.

I have a communication which very directly indicates the aggressive attitude of the Canadian Government in increasing business at its ports to the increasing injury of American port business by preferential customs or tariff regulations, and I ask that this letter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARITIME ASSOCIATION OF THE BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Boston, Mass., January 7, 1929.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: For your information, the Canadian Dominion Government has recently imposed a duty of 50 cents per bunch on bananas imported to Canada through United States ports. No such duty is imposed if the bananas are imported through Canadian ports.

This will cause the diversion to Canadian ports of a substantial volume of business that has previously been handled through the port of Boston by the United Fruit Co.

The port record for the year 1928 indicates that 100,000 bunches were handled through Boston destined to points in Canada.

This is another instance of preferential customs regulations imposed by Canada to force traffic through the ports of that country.

Yours very truly,

F. S. DAVIS, Manager.

PAY OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 5148) to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services," as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1416) thereon.

REPORT OF A NOMINATION

Mr. JONES. As in closed executive session, I ask leave to present a certain nomination from the Committee on Commerce for the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day, January 10, 1929, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta, on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 4616. An act to legalize the existing railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

As in legislative session,

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 5273) to extend the benefits of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, to John Melville; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 5274) granting a pension to Charles N. Raybourn; and

A bill (S. 5275) granting a pension to Mary Elizabeth Sherlock; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 5276) granting compensation to Dempsey Stoney Edenfield; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5277) for the relief of William Goodwin (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 5278) for the relief of William D. Grusch (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 5279) granting a pension to Henry E. Liepmann; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 5280) for the relief of Michael J. Moran; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 5281) granting a pension to Susan A. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5282) granting compensation to Lawrence F. Morris; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 5283) for the relief of Gustave C. Wetterlind; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5284) granting an increase of pension to Carrie M. Quinlen (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5285) granting an increase of pension to Helen L. Sarver (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS (for Mr. HOWELL):

A bill (S. 5286) granting a pension to Helen Bruner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 5287) for the relief of Adam Augustus Shafer;

A bill (S. 5288) for the relief of Patrick O'Brien; and

A bill (S. 5289) for the relief of James Jackson; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 5290) granting a pension to Richard C. Baalke;

A bill (S. 5291) granting a pension to Max Batoski; and

A bill (S. 5292) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Greenwood; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5293) for the relief of Edwin Black;

A bill (S. 5294) for the relief of William Kelley;

A bill (S. 5295) for the relief of William Rose; and

A bill (S. 5296) for the relief of Charles B. De Crevecoeur; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 5297) granting a pension to Margaret Dunn (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5298) granting a pension to Clyde Woodson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5299) for the relief of Paul C. Christian (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5300) to amend section 250 of the Code of the United States (Judicial Code, sec. 145) by adding a new section (sec. 4); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) appointing John J. Steadman a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BROOKHART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15386, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page —, after line —, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 2. The provisions of section 5 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1893, as amended, with respect to the granting of annual and extended leave to clerks and employees of the executive departments, shall apply to the clerks and employees of the Department of Agriculture who are assigned to duty outside of the city of Washington but within the limits of the continental United States, excluding Alaska."

AMENDMENTS TO FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McKELLAR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1929, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page —, line —, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no interest allowed by the Bureau of Internal Revenue shall be authorized to be paid out of this appropriation."

On page —, line —, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided further, That the Court of Claims now having jurisdiction over all claims for tax refunds, no part of the appropriation herein made shall be available for paying any tax refunds in excess of $5,000."

On page —, line —, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be available for paying any tax refund in excess of $10,000 until all the papers and proof in reference to the claim for refund have been submitted to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and approved by a majority of all the members of said committee."

On page —, line —, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the claim of any claimant employing a former agent of the Bureau of Internal Revenue who had, or might have had, anything to do with the assessment or reassessment complained of, or who had any jurisdiction over any assessment or reassessment of the original, or additional taxes assessed, concerning which there is a dispute while such attorney or agent representing such claimant was employed by the Internal Revenue Bureau."

On page —, line —, strike out, after the word "provided," all of the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"3. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations prescribed by the United States Board of Tax Appeals, shall certify on the 1st of January, April, July, and October of each year all claims for refunds of taxes where the amount claimed is more than $500 and where the commissioner recommends a refund or repayment. There shall also be ratified with such claims all the papers and proof in reference to such claims, with the recommendations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thereon, whether such claims arise from illegality of assessment, of collection, of penalties, or of unjust or excessive taxation. Where the amount of such claim is more than $500, should the commissioner not recommend the refund, the taxpayer shall have the right to appeal from the commissioner's refusal to recommend to the United States Board of Tax Appeals in like manner, and in such cases the commissioner will certify the claim, papers, and proof to said United States Board of Tax Appeals. The action of the United States Board of Tax Appeals, which is hereby given full and complete jurisdiction to hear and determine such claims on the merits, with the right of either Government or the taxpayer to submit additional proof, shall be final in all such cases certified by the commissioner or appealed by the taxpayer. All claims of refunds for less than $500 shall be refunded by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under regulations prescribed by the United States Board of Tax Appeals. In all cases where a judgment or a decree of a court is obtained against any collector or deputy collector for any internal-revenue tax collected by him or for the costs and expenses of the suit, or where damages are assessed against any assessor, deputy assessor, collector, deputy collector, or agent by reason of anything in the performance of his official duty, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is directed to certify such judgment to the Congress for payment as now prescribed by law."

VICTORIES OF INDEPENDENT TUBE MAKERS IN THE COURTS

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Mr. Oswald Schuette on the subject of "Victories of Independent Tube Makers in the Courts" in the finding of patents invalid.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

Although the independent radio manufacturers of the United States complain that they have had no help from the Department of Justice, or the Federal Trade Commission, or the Federal Radio Commission in their fight against the Radio Corporation of America, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the General Electric Co., the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., and the United Fruit Co.—whom they charge constitute the Radio Trust—these independent manufacturers have won three important victories in the Federal courts in the last three weeks.

The most recent of these was the refusal on Monday by the United States Supreme Court to grant a writ of certiorari to review the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit holding the products claims of the so-called Coolidge ductile tungsten patent to be invalid. This was an important decision to the independent radio tube makers. The lower court upheld the validity of the Coolidge patent so far as its process claims were concerned, but none of these tube makers, I am informed, were interested in this as they did not manufacture their own tungsten. The General Electric Co., as owner of the patent, had asked the courts to extend the patent over the use of the product and had charged the DeForest Radio Co. with infringing the Coolidge patent because it used ductile tungsten in its tubes. The lower court held that nature had put the ductility in tungsten, and that all that Coolidge had done had been to invent a process for purifying tungsten ores and that therefore he could not have a patent on anything more than the process itself.

A week ago the Supreme Court made an even more important decision when it refused to grant a rehearing on a previous refusal of a writ of certiorari in what has become one of the most famous of recent cases under the Clayton law—the so-called Tube Clause case. The members of the alleged Radio Trust had made a patent license agreement with 25 manufacturers of radio sets, covering the manufacture of something like 75 per cent of all the radio sets made in the United States, and requiring them to purchase from the Radio Corporation of America all of the tubes needed "initially to operate" their sets. The independent tube makers obtained a preliminary injunction from Judge Morris, of the United States District Court of Wilmington, Del., forbidding the enforcement of this clause as a violation of the Clayton Act. Judge Morris held that the Radio Corporation of America by means of this clause had undertaken to create a monopoly in the manufacture of radio tubes. This decision had been upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, and it was this decision which the Supreme Court had refused to review.

Although this preliminary injunction was in the nature of an emergency injunction, granted a year ago under the express provisions of the Clayton Act, to prevent a powerful combination from destroying a smaller competitor while the courts might pass upon the legality of such a clause, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals held the case on appeal for almost eight months without a decision, during which time the injunction was inoperative. Such a delay in an appeal on an emergency injunction almost defeated the purpose for which the injunction was granted, for it left the illegal clause in full operation during a critical time in the radio business. However, the independent tube makers, through their organization, the Radio Protective Association, took the question to the court of public opinion and had succeeded in calling so much public attention to the iniquity of the contract by which the so-called Radio Trust had undertaken to destroy the independent radio tube industry that the Radio Corporation of America was forced to suspend this tying clause.

Three months before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals validated the injunction, the Radio Corporation notified all of these manufacturers who had signed the contract that it would not enforce the tube clause until the case had been finally adjudicated. This was just what Judge Morris had ordered them to do eight months before and what they had succeeded in avoiding by their appeal. As a result the independent tube industry immediately reopened its plants and is now sharing in the great prosperity of the radio business.

This fact is highly important, as the tube is the heart of modern radio. Had the corporations which make up this radio monopoly been able to destroy the independent tube makers, their control of the industry would have been complete.

The third decision won by the independent radio manufacturers in the last three weeks, was handed down by the United States District Court of New Jersey holding four patents of the General Electric Co., on tube-making machinery to be invalid because the devices they pretended to cover were too trivial to be called inventions. The General Electric Co. had sued the Eisler Engineering Co., of Newark, on 12 patents used in making tipless tubes. Four of these patents were held last summer to be either invalid or noninfringed. Four of the other suits were withdrawn. The last decision covered the remaining four patents. The court held that none of these rose to the dignity of an invention and quoted a previous decision which declared "the design of the patent law is to reward those who make substantial discovery or invention which adds to our knowledge or makes steps in advance in the useful art."

In declaring all four of these patents to be worthless the United States District Court in New Jersey concluded its decision by saying:

"There is nothing in any of the devices, machines, or methods referred to in the patents in suit that seem to rise to the realm of invention. The art is crowded, devices are many, novelty seems to characterize none. The bill will be dismissed with costs."

All these patents were part of the great patent pool made up by the companies which comprise this radio monopoly and it is by means of this patent pool they have tried to circumvent the antitrust laws and to destroy their independent competitors.

INTERVIEW WITH CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there was printed in the Washington Star of January 9 an interview with Chief Justice Taft, by Basil Manly, and, as it is an exceedingly interesting article, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHIEF JUSTICE DEPLORES MATERIALISTIC ATTITUDE—CALLS LUST FOR WEALTH AND ORGANIZED CRIME MENACE TO CIVILIZATION—BACKS CONSTABULARY—STEADY IMPROVEMENT SEEN IN RELATIONS BETWEEN EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE

"What progress has the United States made in the 10 years since the war?"

"What tendencies of the present day should concern us as good American citizens?"

"Is the current trend of civilization forward or backward?"

These three vital questions were put to former President Taft, now Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and are answered by him in the following interview he gave to Basil Manly. Mr. Manly served with Chief Justice Taft as joint chairman of the War Labor Board in 1918–19, and it is their long friendship which made it possible for Mr. Manly to get the interview.

By Basil Manly

Visiting the Chief Justice of the United States, I found him seated at his desk in the comfortable office of his Washington home. Before him lay the manuscript of his decision in one of the important cases now pending before the Supreme Court.

Seventy-one years old last fall, Chief Justice Taft to-day looks as hearty and almost as young as he did 16 years ago, when he left the White House.

What is the secret of his health and unflagging energy after half a century in the public service? The answer is easy—careful diet, moderate exercise, and a sense of humor which preserves the spirit of youth. The old, deep-throated chuckle and the wholesome laugh afford the relief which lightens the burden of presiding over the most august tribunal in the world.

The Chief Justice delights in this sense of humor. He pities and is amused by those who lack it.

"Have you read the diary of John Quincy Adams?" he asked. "It is charming. I am using it just now for my bedtime reading. I work until 9 and then read for an hour to put myself in the proper frame of mind for a good night's sleep. Adams was a great man, but he had no sense of humor. I get a good laugh out of almost every page of his self-revealing narrative."

After further pleasantries and reminiscences of war days and our experience on the War Labor Board I broached the principal subject of my visit.

"It is 10 years," I said, "since the end of the war. The world is still in a state of confusion, caused by that tremendous upheaval. Many of us whose function it is to view developments from day to day are perplexed to know in what direction it is moving. Are we going forward or are we, as some pessimistic commentators proclaim, losing our hold upon the fundamentals of civilization and falling constantly backward? What developments or tendencies do you see that should particularly concern us as good American citizens?

APPRAISAL IS GUESS

"By virtue of your experience and the detached position which you occupy, you have a perspective which most of us lack and which is necessary to any sound judgment."

"Any appraisal of the trend of our civilization," the Chief Justice replied, "can be nothing better than a guess. We are still too near the cataclysmic eruption that shook the whole world during the four years of the war for anyone to venture an assured opinion on the general trend of the great forces which sway the destiny of this and every other nation.

"As you know," Mr. Taft continued, "I am always an optimist, and I firmly believe that the American people will find a way to solve the perplexing problems which now beset them. Nevertheless, there are conditions confronting us to-day which merit the consideration of every citizen who has at heart the welfare of the Nation and the future of his children and his children's children."

"What do you consider the most disturbing element in our national life?" I asked.

"It is difficult to describe precisely," the Chief Justice replied, "but it may be understood when I characterize it as the materialistic philosophy which places wealth and worldly success ahead of every other consideration in life. What can it profit a man to have accumlated millions if he has not at the same time maintained a clear conscience and acquired the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens?"

MENACES CIVILIZATION

"What relation, if any," I asked, "do you see between this lust for wealth at any cost and the problem of organized crime that is to-day challenging the government of every large city in the country?"

"There is a problem," the Chief Justice replied, "which unquestionably menaces our civilization. Our entire machinery of justice must be geared up to cope with it. Our police forces, our prosecuting organizations, and our court system must all be improved until we are able to subdue these criminal organizations.

"The aftermath of war, which made the destruction of human life a commonplace, and the great profits to be gained by preying upon our postwar prosperity, have combined to create a system of organized crime which should arouse every responsible American citizen.

"The Nation does not yet appear to be fully awakened to the seriousness of this problem. As a people we seem incapable of effective action until we are approaching a crisis. Do you remember Kipling's caustic lines giving his view of the American spirit?

"'That bids him flout the law he makes,
That bids him make the law he flouts,
Till, dazed by many doubts, he wakes
The drumming guns that have no doubts.'

"Unfortunately, there is some truth in them. It is only too clearly manifested in the flippant views of those who advocate or complacently condone the nullification of prohibition and other laws. To preach disrespect and disregard of laws duly enacted, even though they may be unwise, can have no other result than to encourage criminals.

MUST CAPTURE CRIMINALS

"We shall come through this crisis as we have through others even more grave, but to do so we must have the effective cooperation of all the forces of law and justice.

"First of all, we must detect and capture the criminals. This means a larger and better organized police force in every State and city. It will cost some money, but in proportion to the menace that confronts us it will be cheap at almost any price.

"Every State should, in my opinion, have an efficient constabulary," Mr. Taft asserted with a resounding thump on the desk to emphasize his point. "It should be organized not only to patrol the rural districts and the State highways, which have become of such great importance with the development of the automobile, but also to reinforce the police forces of towns and cities whenever conditions may make it necessary."

"But is it not true," I asked, "that the problem of convicting a criminal, especially if he is rich and powerful, is at least as difficult as catching him?"

"Unfortunately, it is," the Chief Justice replied. "It is a disgrace to our country that so many criminals with large resources at their command have been able to avoid paying the penalty for their misdeeds. At the basis of this situation lies our jury system, which must be improved if we are to obtain effective justice. We must find a means of getting intelligent and conscientious jurors who will not be mislead by ingenious attorneys or swayed by maudlin appeals to sympathy.

CRITICIZES DELAYS

"The administration of justice is the very basis of orderly government, and should command the support and cooperation of every thoughtful citizen, regardless of any temporary sacrifice or inconvenience which service upon grand juries or trial juries may entail.

"If we can perfect our police systems and our court procedure, I have no doubt that within a reasonable time we can bring under control even the most aggressive gangs which are now preying upon our cities and States."

Turning aside for the moment from this question of crime and legal administration, which naturally is of peculiar interest to the Chief Justice, and reverting to the important part he played in maintaining the Nation's industrial stability during the war, I asked:

"Do you regard the apparently steady improvement in the relations between employers and employees as a hopeful sign for the future?"

"I do," the former joint chairman of the War Labor Board replied. "It seems to me that American employers and the men whom they employ are nearer to an understanding of their common interests than at any time within our history. We still have Bourbon business men and extremists among the labor leaders, but the number of both these types, fortunately, appears to be decreasing year by year.

"One of America's greatest contributions to human progress has been the demonstration in a number of our industries that good wages and reasonable hours of labor are compatible with low costs of production. Thus the way has been opened for a constant improvement in the standard of living and the ultimate elimination of that abject poverty which was the curse of earlier centuries.

SEES MEDIATION GAINING

"The constant extension of voluntary conferences between employers and employees and the growing use of mediation and arbitration as a means of settling industrial disputes seem to indicate that the day may soon come when the old wasteful methods of industrial warfare will be practically abandoned for more intelligent plans of adjustment."

"Do you feel that equally satisfactory progress has been made since the end of the war in the field of international relations?" I asked.

"No intelligent man can view that field with complete satisfaction or complacency," replied the Chief Justice, who during the 20 years before he was appointed to the Supreme Court was one of the leading advocates of international arbitration and world peace.

"Nevertheless, we must have the patience to realize that the habits and traditions of centuries can not be changed in a day. Our system of civil and criminal jurisprudence, which is still far from perfection, was not created overnight, but was the product of the earnest thought of many generations. How can we, therefore, expect immediately satisfactory results in the international field, where every forward step is dependent upon the voluntary action of many nations with widely divergent interests and foreign policies?

"What is most important is not how fast we are moving, but whether, on the whole, we are going in the right direction. I believe we are. We can see in the events of each year new evidences that the masses of the people throughout the world have an ever-increasing appreciation of the horror, waste, and futility of war and are determined to find peaceful means of settling their international disputes.

"The nations are moving to a sense of obligation that nothing should be done of a critical nature until their authorized representatives have had an opportunity to sit down around a conference table and attempt to reconcile their differences.

"That is the significance of the Locarno conference and the Kellogg pact for the outlawry of war. Both of these are important steps in the right direction. They have been taken because the governments of the leading nations have come to realize that the people want peace.

"We have no right to expect the millennium, but our present progress should lend encouragement to the thoughtful citizens of every nation to continue unabated their efforts to promote world peace and produce enduring international understandings." (Written exclusively for the Star and North American Newspaper Alliance. Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance. All rights strictly reserved.)

STONEWALL JACKSON

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate ordered printed as a public document a short sketch of the life of Stonewall Jackson, by his granddaughter, who is a young lady about 15 years of age. In the print of the document her name is given as Mrs. Preston. I know she would not like to have such a mistake made. I ask that a reprint of the document may be ordered with a correction of the name, and that the document now on file in the Printing Office may be recalled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MAINTENANCE OF SENATE OFFICE BUILDING (S. DOC. NO. 197)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1929, pertaining to the legislative establishment, for the Senate Office Building, amounting to $8,400, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MODELS FOR THE SUPREME COURT BUILDING (S. DOC. NO. 198)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1929, pertaining to the legislative establishment, under the Architect of the Capitol (models for the Supreme Court Building), amounting to $15,000, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OFFICE BUILDING (S. DOC. NO. 199)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1929, pertaining to the legislative establishment, under the Architect of the Capitol, for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a fireproof office building for the House of Representatives, etc., amounting to $8,400,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations December 19, 1928.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not intend to make a long address on a subject which has already been so fully discussed, but it seems to me that it is incumbent upon this body to know what the treaty means; and, as I see it, there are only three ways in which we can know and in which our friends and enemies, if there be any, can know.

One of those is by having something inserted in the treaty in the form of a reservation to it or an amendment to its articles, which would be unfortunate.

Another is in the nature of a resolution like that proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and sponsored by my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN].

A third method would be by having the Foreign Relations Committee present a report as to what they believe this treaty means which they have advocated and asked us to ratify.

I desire to ask the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee very earnestly whether he will not try to persuade his committee to make a report. It is customary, in the case of nearly all bills which we have on the calendar, for a printed report to accompany the bill. Very frequently when a bill on which there is no printed report comes up on the calendar some Senator will object that we ought not to consider the bill in the absence of a printed report from the committee. It is not necessary that the report be unanimous. Nevertheless it should certainly be a majority report.

I hope very earnestly that the members of the Foreign Relations Committee will agree to make a report, for otherwise we are left in a sea of doubt. We are surrounded by more or less envious peoples. We are like an ostrich in the desert, with our head in the sand, thinking that there is nothing in the wind against us. Let us recognize this fact and do something to interpret this treaty.

Never before in my short experience in this body have there been such violent differences of opinion with regard to two brief paragraphs as there are with regard to articles 1 and 2 of this treaty. They are not long.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think there is very much difference of view about the two articles. The differences of view arise out of inferences entirely outside of the articles and not justified by the articles.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what I intended to convey. The differences of view are as to what the treaty means. We have on the one hand people like those good citizens who have recently been holding sessions in Washington with the motto, "The cruiser bill shall not pass, and the treaty must pass without reservation." They believe that if the treaty is ratified there will be no necessity for any more Army or Navy. They are honest in the belief that this treaty binds us not to make war and not to use force.

I had a letter this morning from a well-known citizen of New York, one of our most distinguished publicists, Mr. Samuel Colcord, who is known to a great many of you as having given a large part of his life to promoting peace and international good will, in which he says:

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of the cruiser bill, the multilateral treaty, which stands by itself, deserves the hearty support of every Senator.

Then he goes on to say:

A treaty in which all the nations of the civilized world pledge their sacred honors never to resort to war, but to settle their disputes by no other than peaceful means, is more than a gesture.

There is a distinguished citizen—and, if my recollection serves me correctly, a lawyer by profession—who takes the position that if we ratify this treaty we pledge our sacred honor never to resort to war, but to settle our disputes by no other than peaceful means. There are a great many other citizens who are in the same position.

The Rev. Henry Sloan Coffin, D. D., one of the most distinguished clergymen in this country, the president of the Union Theological Seminary in New York, in a sermon preached before the Yale students at the end of the last term, or perhaps it was on Armistice Day, November 11, stated that if we ratified this treaty we could not vote for any more cruisers without being absolutely and ridiculously inconsistent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I notice that so distinguished a citizen of New York as Doctor Dewey, who has a reputation on three continents as a great philosopher, said that if I supported this treaty and supported the cruiser bill I ought to be assigned to the psychopathic ward.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator has added another item of testimony to the fact that there is the very widest divergence of opinion.

Mr BORAH. I did not say "opinion."

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, Mr. President, it seems to me there is no question about the fact that opinions on this treaty differ as widely as the poles. I have been told by one Senator on this floor—not for publication—that he would vote for the treaty because he believed that if we ratified the treaty we could not send our cruisers into the heart of China, and we could not send cruisers and marines to Nicaragua in the case of disturbance, and we could not do a lot of things that he objects to our having done in the last few years. On the other hand, I have been told by another Senator that he is going to vote for the treaty because he believes it means nothing, and is merely a gesture, and does not restrict our action in any sense at all.

I have been told by still another Senator that he believes that if this treaty meant exactly what it said there would not be a dozen Senators on the floor to vote for it.

In other words, there is the very greatest divergence of opinion, Mr. President, even among Senators. In the United States we find an equal divergence of opinion among thinking men. Therefore it seems to me that it is very important that something be done to put us definitely on record, without equivocation, as to what the treaty means. Otherwise, I believe that in the future we shall be accused of rank hypocrisy, of bad faith, and of deceiving the nations of the world by our action in ratifying the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator object to interruptions?

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know how a committee report would add anything to the clarity of the language which is employed in this treaty. The language of the first article says:

The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

That language is perfectly plain and simple. It can not in reason be misunderstood. It means that the nations hereafter propose to reject war among themselves for the settlement of international controversies. They do not propose to appeal to war. They reject it as a method of settling controversies. That is the meaning of the language. That is what it says. I do not see how there can be any misunderstanding about it.

The second proposition is:

The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

That is to say that a nation having a controversy with another nation will not seek settlement through war; it will not seek settlement through violence; it will seek settlement only through pacific means, through peaceful means. It may not reach a settlement, but it pledges itself not to employ war, but simply to seek it through peaceful means. What could a committee report add to that?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator knows that it is customary in the case of all bills for a printed report to accompany the bill when it comes before the Senate, even though the chairman of the committee explains the bill fully on the floor. The Senator knows, as he himself has called to the attention of the Senate, that in the Supreme Court it has been held, in the interpretation of a law, that the remarks of a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives when the bill was being considered are not to be used in the interpretation of that bill. But the Supreme Court has also held that the report of a committee, made when the bill was being considered and recommending its passage, is evidence of what is meant. Interpretations of what the treaty means have differed on the floor of the Senate; and some interpretations given orally, in reply to questions, have been more or less altered so as to give a somewhat different tone to the interpretation.

Obviously there is need of interpretation. Even the divergences in the interpretation accepted by lawyers differ as widely as the poles.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator think that divergence of opinion is due to a lack of clarity in the text of the treaty, or due to the interpretative notes that have been passed between various governments? Would the Senator think that if the treaty came before us in the complete original text without these interpretative notes there would still be such a great difference of opinion?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think there would, Mr. President, for this reason: A great many people reading the language, which is clear—I will say to the Senator there is no lack of clarity—particularly those whose minds run along the lines of internationalism, those who are members of the Non-Partisan Association for Adherence to the League of Nations, particularly those in favor of the League of Nations, read it in one way and say it means only what it says. Others, notably the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, read it another way, and state, quite correctly, it seems to me, that it means far more than it says; that there is implied in this treaty the full right of self-defense, which includes the Monroe doctrine. Now, as I am about to show to the Senators, the various authorities on international law in regard to the interpretation of treaties give certain methods of interpretation which would seem to justify the position taken by Mr. Colcord and his brethren. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What I wanted to clear up was whether the Senator thought that the treaty itself needed explanation, taken away from the interpretative notes. I must confess that the only difficulty I have in reconciling my judgment and conscience with the treaty has come entirely from the interpretative notes that have been passed between the various governments. I have studied the argument of the very able chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, whose opinions I always study and regard with the highest respect, and I have tried to come to an honest opinion in my own mind, to reconcile the text of this treaty with the interpretative notes. Up to this time I have been unable to do so. I say that with a great deal of regret.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, the Senator feels a good deal as does Professor Borchard, professor of international law in Yale University, who, in the address which he delivered at the Williamstown Institute of Politics last August, and which has been printed as a part of Senate Document No. 176, said:

We are now about to sign a treaty in which we expressly recognize the right of the other signatories to make war upon anybody, including ourselves, for the purpose of enforcing, even against us, their mutual obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations, not to mention individual undefined national interests in any part of the world. They alone will determine the occasion of such action, without our participation.

In justice to Europe it can not be said that they have left us in doubt as to their conception of our obligations. Indeed, these obligations are expressly or implicitly contained in the very reservations which the United States has accepted. Should we repudiate these commitments, we shall be denounced as a violator of our own treaty, and not without some justification.

It has not been a pleasant task to analyze this pact of Paris. The original American proposal was progressive, pure and simple, to use Mr. Kellogg's expression.

I assume the Senator agrees with that. Professor Borchard continued:

The European amendments transformed the proposal into something entirely different—into a universal sanction for war, into a recognition by us of Europe's right to wage war, even against the United States, whenever the individual interests of certain nations are deemed to require it and whenever the league, in its uncontrolled discretion, decides upon it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is a very able Senator, and has had experience in these matters. Does he find anywhere in this treaty that we sanction the right of a foreign nation to attack us?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not.

Mr. BORAH. That is what Professor Borchard says.

Mr. BINGHAM. He is an international lawyer, and I am not. Perhaps he is right.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says "perhaps." He does not think so?

Mr. BINGHAM. For what my opinion is worth, I do not think so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the Senator read the book of Mr. David Hunter Miller in respect of this treaty?

Mr. BINGHAM. I regret to say that I have not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Miller is a gentleman for whom I have very high respect. He is an ardent advocate of the treaty. Yet he reaches some conclusions in his book that are puzzling and perplexing to me. May I read a paragraph to the Senator, or would he prefer that I do not at this time?

Mr. BINGHAM. I should be glad to have the Senator proceed to read the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wanted to ask whether, with the intimate knowledge of international law the Senator has, he would agree with the conclusion Mr. Miller reaches in his very able work upon the peace pact of Paris. He says:

But suppose this happened; it seems to me rather remote, but perhaps it is not impossible. Some headstrong power, rejecting alike the advice of the league and the counsel of the United States, refuses arbitration or any other peaceful settlement of its controversy and goes on to war. The defiance of the covenant and the breach of the Briand-Kellogg treaty would be simultaneous.

I tried to put this question, but rather inaptly, to the Senator from Idaho the other day, before I had read these paragraphs, and he answered me with frankness and directness. Mr. Miller proceeds:

It is quite impossible to suppose that under such circumstances the United States would stand wholly aloof, issue the usual proclamation of neutrality, and treat the power that had rejected our advice and broken our treaty as being in all respects on the same footing as any other friendly nation.

Just what course the Government of the United States would take in such a case it is unnecessary to attempt to predict. The breaking of diplomatic relations with the violator, a policy of benevolent neutrality with the other side, and various other more or less drastic steps, all falling short of war, might be imagined; but an attitude of supine indifference to our own treaty is unimaginable.

Does the Senator agree with Mr. Miller's conclusion in that regard?

Mr. BINGHAM. It seems to me it is a very sound position, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON. That takes us back, does it not, to the discussion in which we used to indulge nearly 10 years ago concerning the League of Nations as to the difference between legal obligations and moral obligations; and it leaves us, if that be accurate—I by no means say that it is—in the situation of having a moral obligation to act in case of the simultaneous breach of the league covenant and this treaty.

As I understood the Senator from Idaho the other day, there is neither legal nor moral obligation on the part of this continent, and he nods assent to that view. That was my view when I was addressing the query to him. These statements have more or less puzzled me.

Permit me to read one more paragraph, and then no longer will I occupy the time of the Senator. I do it in his behalf because here is an authority on international law, one who is an enthusiastic advocate of this pact, and yet in reaching his conclusions as to what the pact means, he has asserted just what I have read to the Senator, and then he asserts this:

> The treaty links the United States to the League of Nations as a guardian of the peace; it makes the aim of that institution and the aims of our foreign policy in the largest sense identical. It is not too much to say that the treaty in fact, though not in form, is a treaty between the United States and the league.
>
> It has often been said that the treaty has no sanctions, no means of enforcement. Textually this is correct enough; but the linking up of the United States with the League of Nations, the conjunction of the Briand-Kellogg treaty with the covenant, means that the sanctions of article 16 of the covenant have behind them the moral acquiescence of the United States; so that, lurking in the background of those sanctions, is the possible, though unexpressed but still potential attitude of the United States toward a power that flouts its promise. This is a very true sanction.

Does the Senator from Connecticut agree with that statement?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not sure that I should agree with it, but I am very curious to know whether the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations agrees with it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was going to propound the query to him. May I ask the Senator from Idaho if he agrees with that conclusion of Mr. Miller?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the answer of the Senator from Idaho is another illustration of what I have been contending from the beginning of these remarks—that the friends of the treaty differ absolutely in its interpretation, and therefore there rests upon the Foreign Relations Committee the responsibility to present to us a report which shall put in clear language what they believe the treaty to mean. When we ratify it we can then point to their report and say, "That is what we meant when we ratified it." Otherwise, it seems to me we are sure to have the finger of scorn pointed at us in the future by those who disagree with our interpretation, and to be accused of hypocrisy and of bad faith.

Now, Mr. President, I think it is very significant that in the letters which I have received opposing the treaty there is not one from a military man or a naval man. No officer of the Army, no officer of the Navy, has ever spoken to me against this treaty. Officers who have talked to me have favored its passage.

Not a single manufacturer of my State or of any other State has approached me or written me opposing the treaty. Although the State of Connecticut during the war produced a very large amount of arms and ammunition used by the Allies and by the United States, and is known as the State where such great factories as the Remington, the Winchester, and the Colt single it out from other States as a place where arms are manufactured, not a single one of the officials of those companies, or any of their allied companies, or of any of their stockholders has objected to this treaty in any way, shape, or manner.

The objections have not come from militarists, military men, or those who manufacture arms; they have come from international lawyers and publicists. In other words, objections have come from men who desire peace with honor.

I have the highest regard for the gentleman who holds the chair of international law at Princeton, Professor Brown. I understand he is opposed to our ratifying the treaty without some kind of reservation or interpretation.

I also have a high regard for Professor Borchard. A day or two ago I received a letter from Professor Borchard, of Yale, a part of which I shall take the liberty of reading. He said:

> This is the first time in 10 years that I have ventured to differ from Senator BORAH in a matter involving our foreign policy. Just what has caused Senator Borah to espouse this treaty, the hollowness of which as a preventive of war he has openly admitted, I do not know. Perhaps it is the fascination exerted by the term "outlawry of war."
>
> At all events the original proposal of Secretary Kellogg has been so altered by the modification effected through the exceptions and qualifications contained in the exchange of notes, that the original proposal is not to be recognized in what has now been placed before the Senate. I can not believe that Senator BORAH seriously contends that the exceptions, qualifications, and interpretations embodied in the exchange of notes are not to be read in connection with the treaty; for in fact they record the scope of the obligations which the contracting parties undertake.
>
> Up to the present time it is the European countries that have defined the scope of their obligations and the exceptions to the words of the treaty which they propose to adopt. By our assent, we agree that the treaty limits their freedom of action no further than the limitations embodied in the exchange of notes.
>
> The United States, however, has not limited in any way the scope of the obligations subscribed, for the speech of Secretary Kellogg would, if interpreted by us later on, involve only recrimination against us.
>
> In order that we may do no more than what France and Great Britain have done, it seems to me almost essential that we should define the sense in which we understand the obligations incurred by the signature of the treaty. Nothing is stated in the treaty about the Monroe doctrine; nothing is stated in the treaty about the obligations of the League of Nations, except the French and British insistence that all the obligations of the League of Nations are binding upon them and are not to be construed as contrary to the peace pact.
>
> It is in this very respect that an interpretation or qualification or reservation on our part is essential. The French and British Governments, through their official newspapers, have made it all too clear that they regard this pact as binding us to support their commitments under the League of Nations and the Locarno treaties, if not other treaties. This aspect of the question does not seem to have troubled Senator BORAH, though to me it is the most significant part of the whole treaty. The treaty does in practical effect, and Europe has made that clear, tie us up irrevocably to the decisions of the League of Nations on any subject. Unless we now make it clear that we are not to be bound by decisions of the League of Nations we are certain to invite the most bitter recriminations in a future crisis, when they will ask us to support our treaty. The alleged violations of the League of Nations covenant will be certain to be charged as a violation of the peace pact.
>
> This whole enterprise, in my humble judgment, should not have been pursued after Mr. Briand undertook to outlaw only aggressive war. All that the peace pact now does is to leave Europe's hand entirely free to do anything it chooses, while at the same time committing us to the political enterprises of European statesmanship, reflected primarily, perhaps, in the decisions of the League of Nations. There are no advantages in the treaty for the United States, but only disadvantages; and the cause of peace, as I think Senator BORAH practically admitted, has made no material advance.
>
> While refusal to ratify would, perhaps, incur recriminations, we invite even greater recriminations if we do not now specifically state the interpretation that we place upon the obligations now subscribed. For that reason it is an act of patriotism, in my judgment, as well as of simple honesty, to adopt a resolution along the line of that submitted by Senator MOSES, in order that the world may understand what the United States undertakes by the signature of the peace pact.

That, Mr. President, is the opinion of one of our most distinguished authorities on international law, and I give it merely as an expression of his opinion and not as mine, for there are several things in it in regard to what the Senator from Idaho has stated about the treaty with which I should venture to disagree.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAINE in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Let us see what the difference between Professor Borchard and myself may be. As I understand this document which the Senator read, Professor Borchard thought that the original American proposal was progressive, pure and simple, to use Mr. Kellogg's expression. As I understand Professor Borchard, if the treaty had been left just as it was proposed by Mr. Kellogg in the first instance it would have been exceedingly acceptable to Professor Borchard. He would have regarded it as a progressive, effective, desirable treaty. The only possible difference between Professor Borchard and myself must be as to the effect of the letters from the foreign countries signing the treaty. If it had not been for those letters this would be a very desirable treaty, according to Professor Borchard.

The treaty was signed precisely as it was proposed by Secretary Kellogg. Through a year's negotiation he resisted all changes in the treaty. So the sole question before the Senate, so far as the difference between Professor Borchard and myself is concerned, is, What is the effect of those letters? Professor Borchard intimates that it would be dishonest and lacking in good faith if we should not take into consideration those letters.

Mr. BINGHAM. No. What Professor Borchard states is that we invite recrimination if we do not now specifically state the interpretation that we place upon the obligation. For that reason he states that as an act of patriotism as well as of simple honesty we should adopt a resolution in order that the world may understand what it is that the United States undertakes.

Mr. BORAH. But previous to that he said that we must take into consideration these letters, that it would be an act of bad faith to sign the treaty and not give due consideration to the letters. I have no objection at all, and I have never contended that we ought not to give consideration to those letters. But my contention is that, taking them into consideration, they do not change the treaty in any respect whatever, nor do they give the nations writing the letters any additional right, privilege, or advantage other than that which they would have under the treaty if they had never written them. So the only difference between the professor and myself is as to the effect of the letters. I do not hesitate to say again—and whatever my opinion is worth in regard to this treaty may turn upon that proposition—that these letters do not effectuate any change in the treaty whatever. Great Britain would have exactly the same right to say what constitutes self-defense as to any part of her world possessions that she had before she wrote the letter.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator mean right or power?

Mr. BORAH. Both right and power. In other words, Mr. Kellogg had stated in his communication that the right of self-defense was one for the nation to determine for itself. That being true, Great Britain had the right to determine the question of self-defense without any further communication whatever. The general assertion is constantly made that these letters change or modify the treaty or give to Great Britain a right which she otherwise would not have, but no one ever stops to point out what the change or modification may be or what right or advantage they give. I assert the letters are stating in advance what they would have an equal right to do after signing.

Mr. BINGHAM. In connection with what the Senator just said, may I call his attention to what has already been frequently spoken of on the floor, but which it seems to me might well be spoken of again. I think it was first spoken of by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE]. In a letter which the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Chamberlain, wrote to the American ambassador on May 19, 1928, in paragraph 4 it is stated that "His Majesty's Government do not think that its terms exclude action which a state may be forced to take in self-defense." If he had gone no further than that I could agree that the Senator's position might appeal to me as having force. But the fact is that some paragraphs later on, in paragraph 10, Sir Austen states:

> The language of article 1, as to the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, renders it desirable that I should remind your excellency that there are certain regions of the world the welfare and integrity of which constitute a special and vital interest for our peace and safety. His Majesty's Government have been at pains to make it clear in the past that interference with these regions can not be suffered.

And, in order to make it clear to all minds, he goes on to say that—

> The Government of the United States have comparable interests, any disregard of which by a foreign power they have declared that they would regard as an unfriendly act. His Majesty's Government believe, therefore, that in defining their position they are expressing the intention and meaning of the United States Government.

It seems to me, with all respect, that if the British Government had felt that there was nothing in the treaty which interfered with their right to make war for some of the regions, or in connection with some of the regions in which they have a particular interest, if they had felt that that was all covered under paragraph 4 and under article 1 of the treaty, as simply coming under the head of self-defense, it would not have been necessary for Mr. Chamberlain to have gone on and explained in paragraph 10 that there was something else besides mere self-defense, and that the very nature of the language of article 1 rendered it desirable that he call attention to the fact that there were parts of the world, not necessarily British territory, interference with which could not be suffered by His Majesty's Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Professor Borchard in his article seems to raise the question that emphasizes the difference between himself and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in this way: He says the treaty, as now qualified by the French and British reservations, constitutes no renunciation or outlawry of war; but, in fact and law, a solemn sanction for all wars mentioned in the exceptions and qualifications. That is the point that he makes with reference to the British and French notes. The Senator from Idaho, I understand, contends that there is no qualification affected by the British and French notes, that the unambiguous language of the treaty speaks for itself, and that those notes do not qualify its terms or qualifications.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have an old proverb in our language that "When the doctors disagree the patient suffers." The doctors of international law obviously disagree on what is meant by these two simple paragraphs, although to the average layman, in reading them, they can mean only one thing.

I will now venture to bring to the attention of Senators who are doing me the honor to listen to these remarks, the opinions of some of the most distinguished authorities on international law in the history of the world as to the interpretation of treaties, for after all if we are not to be accused of bad faith, if our honor is not to be called into question, if we are not to be guilty of rank hypocrisy, there ought to be a clear interpretation as to what it is we are doing when we ratify this treaty, if we do.

The oldest of well-known authorities is the distinguished jurist Grotius who, in his chapter 16, said:

> If we consider the promiser alone, he is naturally bound to fulfill his engagements. "Good faith," observes Cicero, "requires that a man should consider as well what he intends, as what he says." But as acts of the mind are not, of themselves visible, it is necessary to fix upon some determinate mark, to prevent men from breaking their engagements, by allowing them to affix their own interpretation to their words.

If it has been said once it has been said several times on the floor of the Senate that we are at liberty to interpret self-defense as we see fit, that we are at liberty to interpret the treaty so we may go to war whenever we feel so inclined.

Mr. BORAH. No; that is not a fair interpretation; not that we may go to war whenever we feel inclined but that we may go to war under such circumstances as we think constitute bona fide self-defense.

Mr. BINGHAM. What constitutes the necessity of going to war to defend ourselves? I do not think the United States has ever gone to war for any other reason than because of its belief that its territory or citizens were affected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And every nation signing the treaty that has said anything about it has said that it had always been their policy never to go to war except in their own defense. England says it is her century-old policy. France says it, Russia says it, and Germany says it. They all say it. They have all said, and they say right in this correspondence, that they never make war except in self-defense.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that may be true; it may be that for——

Mr. REED of Missouri. If it is true, and we accept it, then we have accepted all of the conditions that have made war in the past.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the nations of the future will, as they have in the past, determine under what conditions they will go to war in defense of their rights; there is no doubt about that at all; and there is no doubt about the effect of that principle upon the treaty. But there is no way in the world to get it out of the treaty; we can not make a treaty denying to the nations of the earth the right of self-defense. Neither the Senator from Connecticut nor the Senator from Missouri nor myself nor anyone else would agree that anybody else other than we should determine what is self-defense.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President. But here is a situation that it seems to me might conceivably arise. Supposing we should ratify this treaty and all the other nations, including Nicaragua and China, should ratify it; and supposing there should happen in China within two or three years what has happened within the past two or three years; that in that great country, with its 400,000,000 people, its magnificent distances, its warring factions, and its Provinces whose people do not understand one another's language, a situation should arise such as arose only a very few months ago, in which the lives and property of American citizens were endangered. Supposing a situation should arise such as that which arose in Nanking in April, 1926, when an army from South China poured in through the walls of Nanking, and, acting clearly under instructions from higher authority—just how high nobody knows—proceeded to wreck every missionary's house, to burn some, to assault some of the missionaries, to kill one or two, but to spare all Chinese houses and limit their attention entirely, as an army, to foreign property and particularly American property. We had several hundred missionaries at that time in Nanking and a large amount of property, paid for by philanthropists of this country, as we had a right to have under our treaties with China. Fortunately we had a gunboat and a destroyer in the river just outside of Nanking. When word came to the commander of our warship that the lives of our citizens were in great danger and that many of the citizens had escaped to Socony Hill, which was within the walls of Nanking—and it will be remembered that the walls of Nanking are more than 30 miles long—he laid down a barrage around Socony Hill in order that the lives of American citizens there being attacked by Chinese soldiers in uniform might be saved; and they were saved. As soon as that bombardment began, whistles blew, rioting ceased, the soldiers were recalled, no more foreigners were killed, and there was prevented what might have been a terrible holocaust.

We were able to bring off our citizens on board the gunboats and save their lives without taking the lives of more than a small handful of Chinese. I think that Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, the President of China, in his official statement said he was unable to find that more than five Chinese were killed. But at that time there were a great many Chinese who had been educated in this country and there were friends of China in this country who were howling that we should withdraw our warships from China; that we should send no marines to China; that it was an act of war that we were carrying on. The Chinese Governments, both north and south, maintained that we were doing something contrary to the sovereignty of China when we sent our cruiser 700 miles up the Yangtze to Hankow, that we were affecting their sovereignty and endangering their national life when we sent our destroyers up and down the Yangtze River, as we did all that summer; and there were a great many people in this country who felt that they were right. If we sign this treaty, the Chinese can say, "You have agreed in the words of the treaty that you will settle all disputes by peaceful means; that all the future conflicts of whatever nature or whatever origin they may be which may arise shall never be settled except by pacific means."

How, then, are we going to meet the public opinion of the world when it states—and China is a signatory to the treaty—"You are doing something that is against Chinese sovereignty; you have agreed not to use any but pacific means, but you are sending your warships up the Yangtze and you are laying down a bombardment on a Chinese city without ever having entered into any arbitration, without ever having sat down about a table and resorted to mediation about it."

What are we to do, Mr. President, when that situation arises, as has happened in the past and is likely to happen in the future? Is not the force of public opinion in this country and in the world going to operate to bear so forcefully on the American Government that we will scarcely dare to do what we did a year and a half ago?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If we should do what the Senator has said we did, and what we would do again under the same circumstances, under what rule would we be acting? We would be acting under the thoroughly well-established principle of international law relating to self-defense, and for the protection of our nationals which we have announced over and over again. It would not be an act of war against China to do that; it would be purely an act in defense of our own people and under well established and universally accepted principles of international law.

Secretary Cass, in an almost identical state of facts, made this announcement as Secretary of State:

> Our naval officers have the right—it is their duty indeed—to employ the forces under their command not only in self-defense but for the protection of the persons and property of our citizens when exposed to acts of lawless outrage, and this they have done both in China and elsewhere.

Now, suppose that conditions should arise, there is no rule of which I have knowledge in international law that is so thoroughly well established as that a nation has a right to protect its citizens in a foreign land against danger, against attack, against assault; in doing so it is acting in self-defense and under international law, and that in doing so it is not committing an act of war. It is not making war and it would not in so doing violate this treaty.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I only wish that all the lawyers in America agreed with the distinguished Senator from Idaho; I only wish that all the Senators on this floor agreed with him.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know of any lawyer who disputes that proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I read a letter from a distinguished lawyer, Mr. Colcord, in which he states that in this treaty the nations of the world pledge their sacred honor never to resort to war.

Mr. BORAH. I have just said that what was done in China was not an act of war.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Chinese thought it was.

Mr. BORAH. But the principle of international law is well established, and our Government has maintained it from its existence, and every other government of which I know has done so. If China should do the same thing, would she not claim that it was not an act of war? Suppose a Chinaman were attacked in a foreign country and the Chinese Government should undertake to protect him, does the Senator suppose that the Chinese Government would claim that it had not a right to do so, and to do so in self-defense, and that it was not carrying on war?

Mr. BINGHAM. But the point is this: What will happen if we should proceed to police the Yangtze River, as we have done for the last 50 years, to prevent mobs from assaulting and killing our missionaries and interfering with legitimate trade, and the Chinese Government should say in the future, as it has said in the past, "The presence of these gunboats in the interior of China is an offense to our sovereignty, and they must get out, and if they do not get out, as an act of self-defense we will fire on them"? They did fire on them. I have seen our ships out there with holes in them from shots fired from the shore. It is almost a miracle that more damage was not done to our warships from shots fired by Chinese soldiers. The only reason for the slight damage is that the Chinese did not have big enough cannon; chiefly they had rifles; but whenever a gunboat went up and down the river for months, whenever a destroyer appeared, there were any number of shots fired at it, and it was claimed by many distinguished Chinese that it was all done in self-defense.

When a government claims that some such act is in self-defense, are we not going to be put into a position where the opinion of the world will be against us and where public opinion in the United States will say, "If the words of this treaty mean anything, they mean that you can only use peaceful means, such as arbitration, and you have got to withdraw those warships if the Chinese Government says their presence offends its sovereignty?"

Mr. President, if I may proceed, I should like to quote a little further from Grotius:

> Where we have no other conjecture to guide us words are not to be strictly taken in their original or grammatical sense but in their common acceptation, for it is the arbitrary will of custom which directs the laws and rules of speech. It was a foolish act of perfidy therefore in the Locrians when they promised they would adhere to their engagements as long as they stood upon that soil and bore those heads upon their shoulders, in order to evade their promise to cast away the mold, which they had previously put within their shoes, and the heads of garlic, which they had laid upon their shoulders.

Mr. President, the day may be coming when the Chinese are going to say, "You accepted this treaty; words mean what they say; but apparently you had back of your mind something quite different; you had back of it the right virtually to make war, even if not technically doing so, in order to defend the lives and property of your citizens 700 miles up the Yangtze River." What are we going to say then?

Further, Grotius says:

> On the other hand, a passage may be interpreted in a more limited signification than the words themselves bear, if such interpretation be necessary, to avoid injustice or absurdity. If no such necessity exist, but equity or utility manifestly require a restriction to the literal meaning, it must be most rigidly adhered to, except where circumstances compel us to do otherwise.

Mr. President, unless the Foreign Relations Committee submit a report with this treaty stating what they believe it means, it seems to me that, to use as an illustration the same nation again, although I do not desire to be offensive, the Chinese might claim that there is nothing in the words of this treaty involving an injustice or absurdity, and that, therefore, the words ought to be adhered to in their literal meaning.

Therefore—

Goes on Grotius to say—

when anyone makes a grant or relinquishes his right—

And I take it, in view of what the Constitution of the United States says about the right of the Congress, that we have the right to declare war, and in view of the fact that it appears to some people that the first article of this treaty renounces the right to declare war—

when anyone makes a grant or relinquishes his right—

As we are apparently doing in the minds of some people here—

though he express himself in the most general terms, his words are unusually restricted to that meaning which it is probable he intended.

There, Mr. President, is another reason why it seems to me it is absolutely incumbent upon the Foreign Relations Committee to submit a report in order that the words may be restricted to that meaning which it is probable we intend. Otherwise, we are going to be accused of hypocrisy and the finger of scorn is going to be pointed against us by any nation in the world that dislikes our actions when we say we are acting in self-defense.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose the Foreign Relations Committee should submit a report upon the question of self-defense, what would the Senator suggest that the committee say upon that subject?

Mr. BINGHAM. That which the Senator has already prepared as a possible draft of such a report would be entirely satisfactory to me. If he will submit such a report at this moment I will stop my speech this instant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, suppose I should say in the report that under this treaty each nation reserves to itself the right of self-defense and to determine for itself what facts constitute justification for the employment of self-defense; would that put an end to the controversy which the Senator is expecting between this country and China in case we should go there and do something that China did not think constituted self-defense and she should contend that it did not constitute self-defense but was an act of aggression? A report of the committee would not change that situation, because it would be in the same language exactly that Mr. Kellogg put into the treaty when he wrote his letter to the foreign governments which the foreign governments accepted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, while it might not affect what China might say, I believe it would very seriously affect opinion in this country, because it is perfectly obvious that there are thousands and thousands of people in this country who believe that the treaty means far more than the Senator from Idaho thinks it means; and I am more interested in seeing that public opinion in the future in America is willing to stand behind this Government when it protects the lives and property of its citizens abroad than I am in what foreign opinion is going to say. Because, if public opinion in this country does not stand behind the administration in defending the lives and property of our citizens abroad then we can not do so, and our citizens might as well come home.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not think it would be utterly impossible to set out, in any treaty or any report or any note or any document whatever, all the instances of self-defense that might arise throughout the world? We might name some of them, but it would be impossible to forsee all the circumstances and conditions and instances that would be justified under self-defense.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is undoubtedly correct; but the draft of a report of the committee on the treaty to which I referred a few moments ago is, in my opinion, all that is necessary to be put in to protect us, in the judgment of a court of international law or a court of international arbitration or the court of public opinion of the world, against any claims of hypocrisy or of breach of faith.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. SACKETT. Does the Senator feel that if all the nations had signed this treaty without any of these interpretations or reservations he would be willing to ratify the treaty for the United States?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a hypothetical case, Mr. President.

Mr. SACKETT. It is hypothetical only because there may be a meaning to these interpretations.

Mr. BINGHAM. All the international lawyers with whom I am acquainted and with whom I have corresponded agree that the letters from these other powers which they thought it necessary to write are in the nature of reservations and interpretations. Certainly no one can ever accuse the British Government of hypocrisy or of breach of faith if they proceed to protect their colonies or their interests in Africa or India or anywhere else after they have signed and ratified the treaty, because they have specifically stated their interpretation in the letter of May 19.

Mr. SACKETT. What I wanted to get at was whether the Senator felt that we ought not to ratify this treaty because they have interpreted it and we have not; or whether, if they had not interpreted it in the way they have, the Senator would be willing to go ahead. We could not police the Yangtze, under the Senator's interpretation, if we ratified the treaty when there were no reservations.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the answer to the Senator is this: The majority of the nations of the world have been unwilling to sign the treaty without letters which are in the nature of reservations. They believed that if they signed it without any reservations or explanations it would interfere with their protecting the lives and property of their citizens abroad, and it would interfere with their protecting their interests abroad.

Mr. SACKETT. Yes; and the Senator feels that we ought not to ratify it under any conditions, then, unless we interpret it so that we can protect the lives and property of our people abroad, and that, whether they made any interpretation or not, we ought to make one?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the fact remains that they have made interpretations, and they can protect themselves against public opinion by pointing to those interpretations; and we have made no interpretations here in the Senate, except through the mouths of individual Senators; and, as has been pointed out, that is not evidence in a court of law.

Mr. SACKETT. Then the Senator feels that the interpretation on our part is a sine qua non to the ratification of the treaty?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the way I feel about it. I think the Senator was not present when I began, when I stated that in view of the very wide difference of opinion in this country as to the meaning of the treaty it seemed to me absolutely incumbent upon us and upon the members of the Foreign Relations Committee to do one of three things: Either to adopt a reservation, or a separate resolution, or to bring in an official report of the same nature as that which is put in on every bill reported out of every committee, so that we might have an official interpretation of the treaty on record.

Mr. SACKETT. I take it the Senator would not want to sign the treaty as an original proposition without the interpretations.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not any more than the nations of Europe did.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand the Senator to take the position that practically all, if not all, of the nations that have agreed to this treaty have made certain reservations.

Mr. BINGHAM. Or interpretations.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Or interpretations. Does the Senator attach any importance to the interpretation of this treaty as made by our Secretary of State?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President; and that is one of the difficulties. As was pointed out by my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] the other day, the Secretary of State in his letter appeared to restrict self-defense to the defense of our territory and in no way met the invitation of Sir Austen Chamberlain in his letter of May 19, in which he said:

The Government of the United States have comparable interests any disregard of which by a foreign power they have declared that they would regard as an unfriendly act. His Majesty's Government believe, therefore, that in defining their position they are expressing the intention and meaning of the United States Government.

We did not reply to that.

Furthermore, when this matter was discussed in the Committee on Foreign Relations, as we have it in their hearings, Part I, page 8, there occurred this colloquy:

Senator MOSES. What makes me ask that is that in clause 8 of paragraph 10 of the British note—

Which I have just read—

there is certain language used which you say was employed also by us, to say that we had certain interests the defense of which we would be necessitated to take on. Was that ever stated in a note on the part of this Government?

Secretary KELLOGG. No; my explanation of what was self-defense was stated in the note on page 36.

Senator SWANSON. In the notes of Austen Chamberlain both discussing it and in the final acceptance, he said they believed it was expressing the intention of our Government to defend the regions in which we had an interest, which I believe meant certain regions, and you acquiesced in it?

Secretary KELLOGG. Of course there are certain regions——

Senator REED of Missouri. Let me say, without answering, Secretary Kellogg said he did not answer the British note, but acquiesced in it.

Secretary KELLOGG. I did not acquiesce in it at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely. To what regions or to what doctrine or to what position of America does the Senator think Secretary Chamberlain referred when he made use of the language which the Senator has just read from his note?

Mr. BINGHAM. It appears to me that he referred to the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. And when the attention of Secretary Kellogg was called to the fact that reference had been made to that, and that the British Government had said they assumed that the United States Government would like to make similar reservations, Secretary Kellogg said, "I did not acquiesce in it at all."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the dangerous point.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Therefore we may look to other declarations of the Secretary, other declarations of this country, for our interpretation of this instrument, if we may look to these various letters and correspondence issuing from other countries. Also, this question—not to interrupt more, for this is the first time I have interrupted any Senator in connection with this treaty, and it really is not my habit to do so—for perhaps future comment: Does the Senator give to a declaration of our Secretary of State any force equal to or approaching that of Secretary Chamberlain?

In a word, what are their functions? What is their power? How far may they commit the one or the other government?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is too good a constitutional lawyer to expect me to instruct him on that question, for he knows as well as I do that a Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Great Britain holds his position only so long as he retains the confidence of the majority of the Parliament, theirs being a parliamentary form of government.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand that.

Mr. BINGHAM. And similarly with other European countries; when the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs speaks, he speaks not only for the executive but for the legislative branch. With us it is different. Under our Constitution, treaties are to be made by the Executive and ratified by the Senate. And therefore the opinion of the Senate, as shown in a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, as to the meaning of a treaty, is precisely as important as any letter from the Secretary of State; and without it the opinion of the Secretary of State has only half the importance which the expressed opinion of Sir Austen Chamberlain or of the French Foreign Minister might have.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If we are aware of the utterances, the official statements of our Secretary of State, and, it may be, of the President of the United States, and then concur in and approve a treaty negotiated and approved by the President, do we not carry into our ratification or approval a full approval of all that either or both of those officers, the President or the Secretary of State, have said?

Mr. BINGHAM. That might be so held very properly, I may say to the Senator; but, in view of the fact that it would appear from the correspondence that the Secretary of State specifically declined to make any implication that the Monroe doctrine was included in our mental reservations, we ought to be particularly careful to have an interpretation on record here. I do not say that it is necessary that we vote for reservations. I do not say that it is necessary that we pass the Moses resolution, or even the first paragraph of it. But if we do not do that, then we certainly ought to have here on file a report from the committee stating just what the committee thinks the treaty means and why the committee reported it favorably. The very fact that the committee is disinclined to do it leads me to feel that the treaty ought not to be ratified, because there is something there somewhere, some mental reservation, that must go without being said; there is somebody somewhere who thinks the treaty means what it does not mean; and, if I may quote again from Grotius—

From what has been said, an inference may be drawn in favor of sworn treaties or agreements that they ought to be taken in the most usual acceptation of the words, rejecting all implied limitations and exceptions and such as are not immediately necessary to the subject.

If we reject all implied limitations and exceptions to this treaty, then it is a very dangerous document; but, as I said before, there are a great many Senators who believe that it is a harmless document because it means very little.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I think it means a vast deal. I did not have the benefit of listening to all the Senator has said; I have just come into the Chamber; but may I ask him, if he has not already covered the subject, how far may we or any party signatory to this treaty depart from, go outside of, the four corners of the instrument?

If the Senator grasps the force of that question, I should be very glad to be advised as to his position.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that he was not here when I began; and the reason why I am appealing in this way to the Foreign Relations Committee to make a report is that the four corners of the instrument to which the Senator refers are, in the minds of some people in America, very narrow and restricted, and in the minds of others they are as far apart as the poles. It is because great international lawyers differ absolutely on the meaning of the treaty, with or without such a declaration as would occur in the report of the committee. It is because publicists differ. Some think it very dangerous for us to sign it; others think there is no danger at all in it. The friends of peace who were here in Washington within the last few days opposing the cruisers all believe that if the treaty is ratified they can then bring pressure to bear upon us that there shall be no more cruisers, because we have promised to use none except pacific means.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Well, of course, they are all wrong on that proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Utterly wrong.

Mr. BINGHAM. If they are wrong, then why is there any objection to the Senate saying so, either in a resolution or by a report of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. As for me—and I will undertake to make myself understood hereafter—this agreement is plain, simple, and unambiguous. I think the criticisms aimed at it are hypercritical, the defects are imaginary, the fears expressed are groundless. What we say is in our tongue, plain English, so that even a Senator should not err therein—that we renounce war as an instrument of national policy. I would attach some importance to those words, "as an instrument of national policy." We say that we condemn recourse to it as an instrument of national policy. We are not, may I say in anticipation, denouncing a righteous, revolutionary war.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator permit me to proceed?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Will the Senator indulge me for a moment? I am going to stand upon this treaty. I think it plain, notwithstanding the publicists, notwithstanding the versatile newspaper writers, notwithstanding, perhaps, and I say it with respect, hastily formed opinions.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator feels so sure that this treaty is, in plain words, entirely satisfactory, for I know he is an ardent advocate of the national defense and would do nothing which would interfere with our having as many cruisers as we needed for the national defense and for protecting American lives and property abroad. But I would call his attention to the fact that the plain words of the treaty say that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be that may arise shall never be sought except by pacific means.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. BINGHAM. And if that means what it says, without reservation or explanation, it is contrary to the Senator's own theory.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. We shall seek it by what? By pacific means, by arbitration, by conciliation, by going on our knees to avoid war; but if other nations will not meet us in the same spirit, then we may have recourse to power to redress a wrong or to defend ourselves.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose he were trying to draft a clause that would prevent us from using any but pacific means; how would he draft it in any other way than this?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would not undertake to do so, because I think this perfect.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Is the Senate to understand that the Senator's exception to the use of any but pacific means means that he thinks we would have to resort to warlike means—that is, that there are only two alternatives, either pacific or warlike means?

I am interested in the observations the Senator made on China. The Senator seemed to intimate that if this treaty had been in existence we would not have been free to do what we did at that time; that it might have been regarded as war. China claimed it was war. It is not the Senator's position that that was war, is it?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not hold that position. What I was going to point out was the fact that in the exercise of our right of self-defense in the past it was frequently necessary for us to do things which the nations to which we did them said were acts of war, but they were not strong enough to speak out in terms of cannons and gunboats.

Mr. FESS. On the 21st day of April last year the Senator, standing just where he is now standing, gave a recital of the many cases in which we protected our citizens, starting from the beginning and going up to that time, including our difficulties in Central America, in the West Indies, and in the Orient. I thought that was one of the best presentations and most valuable documents we had received here from the standpoint of the history of our relationships in that respect. In every case the Senator insisted that we were not going to such an extent that it could be justly claimed that we were committing an act of war; and I agreed with him. What has changed the Senator's opinion from that day to this?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, my opinion has not changed, and I am sorry if I give that impression. I do not think the Senator was present when I began my remarks to-day. I am not arguing against the treaty. I am not arguing for the treaty. I am beseeching, with all the force and power that I have, that the Foreign Relations Committee present to the Senate a report as to what they believe the treaty means. That is all I am asking for. Every time any committee reports an important measure to the Senate it presents a written report as to what the measure means. The Foreign Relations Committee have not done so in this case. There are thousands of good American citizens who do not agree with the Senator or with me that if we ratify this treaty we can then protect American lives and property as we have done in the past by using our gunboats and marines, without going to war, without using force, just as we did in the Boxer rebellion, when we sent our battalions and our warships to Tientsin, and then marched overland to Peking.

So far as the Chinese were concerned we were making war on China. Technically, from our point of view, we were not making war, even though we were carrying on a bloody military campaign.

The Senator will remember there were certain Senators last year, or year before last, in the discussion of the Nicaraguan episode on the floor of this Chamber, who continually referred to the fact that in their minds we were making war on Nicaragua. I think the Senator from Nebraska took that position and referred to the "war in Nicaragua." He is present, and I will ask him whether that is not the fact?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, like the Senator from Connecticut I have not changed my mind. I still think so.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly. That, Mr. President, is the reason why I want an interpretation here, because there are Senators as honest and distinguished and patriotic as the Senator from Nebraska, who believes that you can not do the things the Senator from Ohio and I think should be done without declaring war. Therefore if we shall ratify this treaty, when we do those things we will be told that we are going contrary to our pledged word.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, since the Senator has himself brought me into this discussion, I would like to ask him now what difference it makes whether we have a report from the committee or do not have a report, as far as anything we did in the past in regard to Nicaragua is concerned? And also, would the ratifying of this treaty——

Mr. BINGHAM. May I answer one question at a time?

Mr. NORRIS. I will wait until the Senator has answered that question.

Mr. BINGHAM. It would have no effect on anything we did in the past.

Mr. NORRIS. From the Senator's viewpoint, not mine, of what we did in Nicaragua, if this treaty had been in effect, would we have been restrained from doing anything we did do without the treaty?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am not trying to give to-day my opinion as to what the treaty means. I am trying to state that there are two widely different schools of interpretation of the treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. I appreciate that.

Mr. BINGHAM. And because the interpretations of it among honest men are so widely different, I believe we should have an official interpretation in our records in the shape of a report of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has not answered my question. I wish he would do so.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not care to give my opinion of the treaty at this time. I am pleading for something else. I am not arguing for the treaty or against it. I do not care to get involved in that dispute.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it, the ratification of the treaty, from my viewpoint of what happened in Nicaragua, would not change our right one particle. We would have the same right. If we were there of right, under the claim the Senator thinks was sufficient, we would still have it. The Senator is now only pleading for an opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations. He wants it filed here. Does not the Senator know that there would be just the same opportunity to disagree with the conclusions of the committee as there is to disagree with the treaty itself? Would there not be just as much dispute about what the committee meant as there is about what this treaty means? We can not do anything that will prevent men from disagreeing, and honestly so, as to what certain words mean, and if there is a disagreement as to what the treaty means now, there would be a disagreement as to what the Foreign Relations Committee meant if they undertook to rewrite the treaty. As I look at it, it would be only jumping out of the frying pan into the fire.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it is a little disconcerting to have Senators who have only heard a small part of the presentation ask questions and make implications. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that it was brought out several days ago—I do not think he was present at the time—and it has been since called to my attention personally by the Senator from Idaho that the Supreme Court has held that while the statement of a Senator or of a Representative on the floor of either House can not be used in interpreting a law in the courts and is not authoritative as to the meaning of the law, a report of a committee formally made and filed before the action of the Senate or the House on the law is evidence in the courts as to what the law means, if there is any doubt about it.

I should like to go on now.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will permit me to interrupt further, will he not, because he has not entirely stated my position?

I heard what the Senator from Idaho said, and I am not disagreeing with what he said; I have always held that opinion. But we still are up against the proposition that whatever we do is going to be construed by men in the future, and that is true of the Foreign Relations Committee, and it is true of the Supreme Court itself.

As I understand it, we would not simplify the treaty by the method the Senator has proposed; but that is only my judgment. To my mind, it needs no construction by the Foreign Relations Committee. If I am wrong about that, and a majority of the Senate thinks I am wrong, and a proper reservation is offered and voted on, we will get the sentiment of the majority of the Senate, and by that I will abide. We would not want to vote for the adoption of a construction of a treaty that we thought was already plain and give two opportunities for misconstruction and misinterpretation afterwards instead of one.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well. I am glad the Senator has made himself so very plain.

Mr. FESS. The Senator, then, has not changed his opinion from that expressed in his speech of April 21, 1928?

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. His only concern is that a certain portion of the public might think that we are wrong when we say it is not an act of war?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the Senator from Ohio was not present when I read the recent letter from Professor Borchard.

Mr. FESS. I heard most of it.

Mr. BINGHAM. In which he said that if we do not now specifically state the interpretation that we place upon the obligations subscribed to we will invite bitter recriminations, and that it is an act of—simple honesty to adopt a resolution along the line of that submitted by Senator MOSES, in order that the world may understand what the United States undertakes by the signature of the peace pact.

I understand, and I think it is an open secret, that the administration is extremely anxious that there should be no vote of the kind mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska. A large number of Senators who are loyal to the administration, and who hold a slightly different opinion of this from what I do, although possibly agreeing with me in regard to its general aspects, would vote against any such resolution, because the Secretary of State is so very strongly opposed to a vote in favor of a reservation, or a vote on a matter of explanation.

For that reason I am not pressing for the adoption of a resolution because I know that a great many Senators in favor of it would have to vote against it, because they have promised to vote against it, and they do not want to go against their promise, or because they feel that the administration is so anxious that they should vote against it. At the same time there is nothing to prevent the Foreign Relations Committee from making a report, a draft of which has already been drawn up by the chairman of the committee. That would obviate the danger of any official claim of any foreign country in the future that we were misinterpreting the treaty, that we were reading something into it that was not there, and that we were not acting in good faith.

Mr. FESS. The Senator does not think a resolution that might be adopted by the Foreign Relations Committee would have very much effect in alleviating that fear of those who claim that it is an act of war, does he?

Mr. BINGHAM. The report which has been prepared is of a nature which would do away with most of the important misunderstandings. It would do away with any claim on the part of certain nations that there was something implied in the treaty which they did not know was implied. The very fact that certain nations do not want us to make any reservations is to my mind a good reason why, in all honesty, we ought to make a reservation of whatever sort seems best to the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What was the date of the letter or statement of Professor Borchard from which he just read?

Mr. BINGHAM. January 7, 1929.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator think he had then heard the masterly defense and explanation of the treaty made by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee when he uttered that statement and made those puerile remarks?

Mr. BINGHAM. My impression is that he had read it, but I object to any such observations about any of my constituents. They do not make "puerile remarks."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I read what purported to be an article or an argument of this same learned Connecticut professor.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is better.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, if I understand the Senator's position, it would be rather hypocritical, if there is such ambiguity in the instrument, after supplementary interpretation for us to be content with a mere declaration of what the language means by the Committee on Foreign Relations. Notwithstanding my high regard for the Committee on Foreign Relations, their interpretation is no better than the interpretation of other Senators. I want to know for myself just exactly the interpretation which ought to be placed upon the language. If the Senator's position is correct that the treaty is subject to different interpretations and that our rights under the treaty are difficult to determine, are susceptible of different interpretations, I think it is our duty not to be content with a declaration of what the Committee on Foreign Relations says, because that would not bind the Senator from Connecticut; it would not bind me or anybody else; but there ought to be a formal reservation or amendment to the treaty.

Mr. BINGHAM. Although it might not bind anyone it would be evidence accepted in a court of law, in a doubtful case, as to the meaning of the treaty. Now, if I may be allowed to proceed for a little time with what I have prepared, I shall be very grateful to my friends.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I shall not interrupt the Senator without his consent, but I would like to ask a question on that very point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator knows——

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator. If he implies that I ought not to ask a question, I shall not ask it, of course.

Mr. BINGHAM. I asked the privilege of going on for a while, but as the Senator is on his feet I yield to him.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator this question: Assuming, of course, as I do, that he is perfectly sincere in trying to get the opinion of the Foreign Relations Committee as a sort of reservation or interpretation, and admitting all that he said about it for the sake of argument, would it not be a great deal better to have the judgment of the Senate itself than of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. BINGHAM. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is right—and I concede he has a perfect right to ask an interpretation—why not have it in the way of a reservation that will get the opinion of the Senate instead of one of its committees?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have tried to tell the Senator it is because I believe——

Mr. NORRIS. The only reason the Senator has given is that some Senators have promised somebody—I suppose the Secretary of State or the President—that they will not vote for a reservation. If Senators are convinced that a reservation is necessary to properly interpret the treaty, it seems to me they are violating their duty to their country and as Senators if they refuse to vote for it. Personally I do not believe in it, but if I did I would insist on voting for it and getting the opinion of the Senate on it. I would be glad to accept the judgment of the Senate if it is against my judgment. I hate to have the treaty go out with a statement made by the Senator that a large number of Senators think there ought to be some interpretation made here, but for one reason or another they are afraid to vote for it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator doubt that condition of affairs?

Mr. NORRIS. I never thought of it before. It never occurred to me before that such a condition existed here. But if it is true I would like to know the names of the Senators who have pledged themselves not to vote for a reservation when down in their official hearts they think there ought to be one.

Mr. BINGHAM. So far as I know there are no documents, forged or otherwise, giving any names in this matter. But nobody doubts that that is the fact.

Mr. President, if I may go on without interruption for a few moments, I desire to quote from Chitty's edition of Vattel's Law of Nations. It will be generally recognized by Senators that Vattel is one of the highest authorities on international law. On page 244, chapter 17, in discussing the interpretation of treaties, which is a subject to which he gives a great deal of attention, perhaps more than any other writer on international law, he said:

> The first general maxim of interpretation is, that it is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation. When a deed is worded in clear and precise terms—when its meaning is evident, and leads to no absurd conclusion—there can be no reason for refusing to admit the meaning which such deed naturally presents.

The position maintained by the distinguished lawyer from New York, Mr. Colcord, and others who believe the treaty is plain and explicit, is that no one could possibly vote hundreds of millions of dollars for an army and navy after having signed the treaty.

Vattel proceeds:

> To go elsewhere in search of conjectures, in order to restrict or extend it, is but an attempt to elude it. If this dangerous method be once admitted, there will be no deed which it will not render useless.

It has been stated on the floor of the Senate that in the opinion of some Senators there is no war which may not be considered a war of self-defense. Certainly, so far as my recollection serves me, there were no nations in Europe in the last and greatest of all wars that did not maintain that they went to war purely to defend themselves and their interests.

Vattel says:

> However luminous each clause may be, however clear and precise the terms in which the deed is couched, all this will be of no avail if it be allowed to go in quest of extraneous arguments to prove that it is not to be understood in the sense which it naturally presents.

When these good friends who oppose the cruiser bill read that maxim of interpretation it seems to me they will have a fair and reasonable position on which to base their opposition to the cruisers.

> Those cavilers who dispute the sense of a clear and determinate article are accustomed to seek their frivolous subterfuges in the pretended intentions and views which they attribute to its author. It would be very often dangerous to enter with them into the discussion of those supposed views that are not pointed out in the piece itself. The following rule is better calculated to foil such cavilers and will at once cut short all chicanery: "If he who could and ought to have explained himself clearly and fully has not done it, it is the worst for him."

I assume it is possible that there will be people who will cavil at this treaty in the years to come. If we who ought to have explained ourselves clearly and fully in this matter, by resolution or otherwise or by report of the committee, do not do it, it is the worst for us.

Vattel goes on to say:

He can not be allowed to introduce subsequent restrictions which he has not expressed. * * * The equity of this rule is glaringly obvious, and its necessity is not less evident. There will be no security in conventions, no stability in grants or concessions, if they may be rendered nugatory by subsequent limitations, which ought to have been originally specified in the deed, if they were in the contemplation of the contracting parties.

It is obvious that our European friends had that in mind when they wrote those letters in which they specifically stated what they understood the treaty to mean when they signed it.

Vattel goes on to say:

The third general maxim or principle on the subject of interpretation is that neither the one nor the other of the parties interested in the contract has a right to interpret the deed or treaty according to his own fancy.

That would seem to give those people who are greatly in favor of the treaty and opposed to the cruisers the right to say that we have no right to interpret the treaty according to our own fancy and virtually to go to war, as they believe we do when we send marines to Nicaragua and China as we have done in the past.

For if you are at liberty to affix whatever meaning you please to my promise, you will have the power of obliging me to do whatever you choose, contrary to my intention, and beyond my real engagements; and, on the other hand, if I am allowed to explain my promises as I please, I may render them vain and illusory by giving them a meaning quite different from that which they presented to you, and in which you must have understood them at the time of your accepting them.

Vattel then goes on to say:

On every occasion when a person could and ought to have made known his intention, we assume for true against him what he has sufficiently declared. This is an incontestable principle, applied to treaties: For, if they are not a vain play of words, the contracting parties ought to express themselves in them with truth, and according to their real intentions. If the intention which is sufficiently declared were not to be taken of course as the true intention of him who speaks and enters into engagements, it would be perfectly useless to form contracts or treaties.

It seems to me that if we were to use that maxim of interpretation in regard to article 2, it would have to read somewhat as follows:

The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means, except when we believe that our self-preservation is in danger, except when we believe that we are pledged to exercise the right of self-defense, and except when our citizens, their lives and property, are endangered in foreign lands, and except when the Monroe doctrine is threatened.

If we did that then we would safely come under this rule of Vattel where he said that on every occasion when a person could and ought to have made known his intentions, we assume for true against him what he has certainly declared. But we do not do it in the treaty. The treaty has been signed, but it is only half effective, for it has not been ratified. If we do not do this before we ratify it seems to me a perfectly valid ground for contention on the part of Mr. Colcord and others that they may assume for true against us that we will not use any but pacific means, under any consideration whatsoever.

Vattel goes on to say:

As these rules are founded on right reason, and are consequently approved and prescribed by the law of nature, every man, every sovereign, is obliged to admit and to follow them. Unless certain rules be admitted for determining the sense in which the expressions are to be taken, treaties will be only empty words; nothing can be agreed upon with security, and it will be almost ridiculous to place any dependence on the effect of conventions.

But, as sovereigns acknowledge no common judge, no superior that can oblige them to adopt an interpretation founded on just rules, the faith of treaties constitutes in this respect all the security of the contracting powers. That faith is no less violated by a refusal to admit an evidently fair interpretation than by an open infraction. It is the same injustice, the same want of good faith; nor is its turpitude rendered less odious by being choked up in the subtilities of fraud.

Let us now enter into the particular rules on which the interpretation ought to be formed, in order to be just and fair. Since the sole object of the lawful interpretation of a deed ought to be the discovery of the thoughts of the author or authors of that deed, whenever we meet with any obscurity in it, we are to consider what probably were the ideas of those who drew up the deed, and to interpret it accordingly.

So long as the Foreign Relations Committee makes no report, so long as we are permitted to pass no resolution of interpretation, how are our friends in this country or abroad or our enemies to interpret the ideas of those who ratify the treaty? Every Senator has his own views of what the treaty means. None of those views is valid in a court of law.

Mr. President, there is one more quotation from Vattel which seems to me to be very important. On page 252 he says:

It is not to be presumed that sensible persons in treating together, or transacting any other serious business, meant that the result of their proceedings should prove a mere nullity.

There are a number of Senators on this floor who think that the treaty is practically a mere nullity, but, since they have been asked to vote for it, they are going to vote for it.

Vattel goes on to say:

The interpretation, therefore, which would render a treaty null and inefficient can not be admitted.

Mr. President, there are a great many people in the world who will hold that an interpretation of the treaty which would permit us to send marines or a cruiser into any port of the world or into the interior of China, if we should think the lives and property of our citizens were affected, would render the treaty null and inefficient. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Does anyone doubt that? I do not hear anyone object to that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I doubt it; that is to say, I claim it would not be violative of the treaty.

Mr. BINGHAM. I did not say that it would be violative of the treaty. What I tried to state was that there were a great many people in the world who would hold that such an act on our part would render the treaty null and inefficient. I did not say that the Senator from California would think so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; but it would not have any effect upon the treaty at all, in my judgment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I know the Senator believes in the national defense, and consequently it would not have any effect in his judgment; but he is at one extreme of the interpretationists, and there are just as many people, if not so distinguished ones, at the other extreme.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Where are they?

Mr. BINGHAM. A good many of them were in the gallery the other day, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. They are in foreign countries. If so, that does not concern us.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have never before heard the gallery referred to as a foreign country.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not know whether or not any distinguished representatives of foreign countries are in the gallery, but if so, they are quite welcome.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator knows that there are very distinguished Americans who hold that we can not possibly do as the Senator proposes to do, namely, vote for the treaty and for the cruiser bill without being hopelessly and wickedly inconsistent.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But I shall be entirely consistent. We propose to enter into this treaty; we propose to keep it absolutely; but if other nations shall break it, I trust this Nation will be able to defend itself and every one of its men, women, and children wherever they may be on God's earth.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator knows that I heartily agree with him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California a question merely to get his views?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Missouri for that purpose.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator from California think that this treaty in any way qualifies or limits our policies as we have heretofore been pursuing them?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not, I will say to the Senator from Missouri; and that is the only verbal criticism I would make of the language of the treaty. We are here renouncing war as an instrument of national policy. We have never resorted to or made use of war as an instrument of national policy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. This Nation is smitten with a love of peace; we wish no war, and I trust we never shall have war. I want to enter into this treaty committing ourselves anew, if you please, to this doctrine of mine and of the Senator from Missouri; and if any nation shall violate it, I wish to be in a position to defend America. I think that if we are in such position it will have a very deterring influence upon other nations if they are disposed to violate it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And then the Senator thinks we ought to spend some millions of dollars to help put ourselves in that position?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think so, if we are not now in such a position; and I fear we are not.

Mr. REED of Missouri. This treaty, then, does not change our national policy one particle; it will remain the same after the treaty shall have been ratified as before. That is the Senator's position?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will repeat my statement, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then all we have done is to reaffirm a policy that we have always maintained.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It may well be so, so far as we are concerned; but, in a sense, we took the large initiative and we are seeking to have all the civilized nations of the earth adopt the same policy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Our policy always has been that we had a right to defend our national interests; that it was our duty so to do; and that policy is not changed? The Senator nods his head, and I take it he concurs.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; I claim that our record is absolutely clear.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And the right that we have to defend our territory and our interests equally obtains for every other nation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did not quite catch the Senator's observation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say it equally obtains for every other nation; they all have similar rights.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that all that we are doing is to say that we are renouncing war as an instrument of national policy and that we will keep the peace. Well, we never did use war as an international policy; and does the Senator know of any civilized nation which will admit that during the last hundred years it has employed war as an instrument of national policy except to defend itself?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not; but I know of many that I think have used war as a national policy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And some of them will say that of us.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I grant that they may.

Mr. REED of Missouri. When, therefore, we say to a nation that has always maintained "We do not employ war as an instrument of national policy," "Please say it over again," we have not made much of an advance, have we? That nation is just where it was before.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Here is a thought which I think is responsive to the one just expressed: Most treaties of peace have been entered into as between two nations, while here is a proposed treaty entered into by and between and among all the nations of the world.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that adds to the obligation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I certainly do, sir.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; that is to say, there exists to-day between the United States and every civilized nation a treaty of perpetual amity and peace; similar treaties exist substantially between all other nations; in the aggregate the existing treaties are pledges of amity and peace and pledges in many instances to settle all controversies by peaceful means. That is the existing state of affairs. Now, the Senator thinks that by putting that all in one document, and by signing it, in some way it strengthens the articles of peace. I take it that is the Senator's view?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; I entertain that view.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that there springs from that any mutual obligation, since it is a mutual contract, to defend or sustain the contract?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Well, first, I think, to repeat myself——

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want really to get the Senator's view.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely; but I am trespassing and intruding upon the time of our friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. However, I feel sure he will suffer a prolongation of the interruption.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have great respect for the views of the Senator from California, and I know if he and I differ on this question that any two nations in the world when their interests are concerned are likely to differ.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have not differed from the distinguished Senator on many great questions.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And the Senator has generally been right.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I was far away and my views were of little moment. But, first, I do think, even though there exist to-day many treaties of peace, that this proposed treaty, entered into by the great powers and small, the strong and the weak, the European, the American, the Asiatic, all nations in different degree of—shall I say civilization, but with respect for them all—a treaty entered into by them all as of this year committing themselves or recommitting themselves to renounce war as an instrument of national policy will have a most beneficial influence and effect upon all concerned.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Passing to the next question, if the Senator please, does there spring from this multilateral agreement any multilateral obligation to sustain the treaty either expressed or implied?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; if I grasp the import of the question. I have thought of that. I have read with care the remarks attributed to the Senator from Missouri when he was discussing that question, referring, namely, to whether if this treaty should be broken by one of the signatory powers there would be any legal obligation or moral obligation on the part of the others to go to the defense of the assailed or the innocent party; in other words, to become the associate or the ally of the treaty-observing members. With great respect for the views of the Senator, I do not think there is any moral or legal obligation carried in this treaty to become the ally or the associate——

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is to say, if 50 nations sign this treaty, the object being to maintain the peace of the world, and one of them wrongfully assails another, we are to let that nation stand out and take the brunt of the whole matter, it alone to suffer, and the rest of us to be at perfect liberty to deal with the offending nation exactly as with the injured nation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I answer as I have, and for this reason: The Senator has asked me whether there was any moral or legal obligation springing out of this agreement or this proposed treaty in event that it be broken, and I have answered as appears. If the treaty be broken every member of the treaty is released eo instanti from any and all its obligations. That does not mean that we then, freed from this treaty, might deem it proper to become the ally or associate of the nation that had been attacked.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understand; but that is not the question.

Fifty nations sign the treaty. One of them violates the treaty by attacking another. By the violation of the treaty as to that one it has violated the treaty as to all of us, and we are released from any obligations to the offending nation, if we can determine which one it is. The question I am asking, then, is, being released from obligations to the offending nation, are we under any kind of express or implied obligation to assist the injured nation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Not by the terms of this proposed treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; not by its terms; but is there any implication there?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I answer neither explicitly nor impliedly is there any such suggested legal or moral obligation under or by this treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Are we, then, at liberty to send our goods, our supplies, to the offending nation just the same as we would be if we never had ratified this treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would answer, yes; whatever the law may be upon that subject.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We are at liberty to do it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Whatever the law may be, it would be unaffected by this treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then we get the treaty down to this point:

Every nation, now, has a pact of peace with every other nation. If we ratify this treaty, and a nation breaks it, no matter how grossly, we are under no obligation to stand by or assist in any way the nation that is injured. We are at perfect liberty to open our ports and our commerce to the wicked and offending nation just the same as though we had never made this pact of peace.

If that is true, then this is a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. On the contrary, I think it is a high and holy declaration which will have a most wholesome influence upon all the nations of the earth.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if I may resume——

Mr. REED of Missouri. I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. On behalf of the Senator from Missouri, I apologize.

Mr. BINGHAM. The apology is not only accepted but the interruption was extremely welcome.

As the concluding words of the two Senators who have just spoken, and for whom I have a high regard, show the truth of the contention I have been making this afternoon, I should like to repeat them, in that one said that this treaty was a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, and the other said it was a high and holy declaration, a pious aspiration, and so on, and so on.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did not put it just that way.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator kindly put it as he would like to have it appear?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; our words, yours and mine, will be as set down.

Mr. BINGHAM. The point is that the interpretations of these few words in these two clauses are, as I have said before, as wide apart as the poles; and therefore there is really an obligation—a moral, if not a legal, obligation—on the Committee on Foreign Relations to tell us in so many words, by a written report, just what they think the treaty means when they report it to us with their recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. It may not be apropos at this time, but it is near enough to the occasion to suggest to the Senator from California that about the only conclusion a temperate mind may come to in this situation is that this treaty is a pious pronouncement of pure piffle.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to conclude as rapidly as possible by quoting from two or three other authorities on international law with regard to the interpretation of treaties.

A very distinguished authority, Mr. William Edward Hall, whose treatise on international law is familiar to all students of international law, says, in part 2, chapter 10:

> When the language of a treaty, taken in the ordinary meaning of the words, yields a plain and reasonable sense, it must be taken as intended to be read in that sense, subject to the qualifications that any words which may have a customary meaning in treaties differing from their common signification must be understood to have that meaning, and that a sense can not be adopted which leads to an absurdity, or to incompatability of the contract with an accepted fundamental principle of law.

Mr. President, it is quite obvious from what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said a few days ago that he holds that the language of the treaty can not be taken in the ordinary meaning of the words, in which they yield a plain and reasonable sense, because a sense can not be adopted which leads to an absurdity, and the Senator holds that any interpretation of the treaty leading to an interference with the right of self-defense is an absurdity, and I assume that the Senator from California will agree with him in that regard.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me, before he proceeds, to ask whether our Supreme Court, in authoritative cases, has not laid down the rule by which treaties are to be interpreted?

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope, when the Senator presents his speech on the treaty, he will refer to those cases in which the Supreme Court has laid down those rules, because I am extremely anxious to have them presented to the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not wish to encumber the RECORD, but the same rules apply in the interpretation of a written treaty that apply in the interpretation of any written agreement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly, Mr. President.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is the law.

Mr. BINGHAM. And since the Supreme Court has said that the report of a congressional committee to either House is acceptable in the courts, therefore I claim that the least the Committee on Foreign Relations can do to help us settle these tremendous divergences of opinion is to make such a report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the Senator from California a question, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me? Suppose the Supreme Court has laid down rules for the interpretation of treaties. Who will interpret this treaty in the event that we should become signatories to this pact?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is a very thoughtful question, and the subject matter of the question had occurred to me.

The Supreme Court of our country perhaps might never be called upon; but in so far as we are concerned—we, the Senate—I think we are justified in proceeding along the lines mapped out by our Supreme Court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But who would construe the method of interpreting the treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Assume a trouble arising between two nations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Between some other nation and ourselves?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely, and both are perfectly willing to refer it to arbitration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then foreign arbitrators, in that event, would construe the treaty.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Unquestionably so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Our Supreme Court, then, would be entirely out of consideration so far as the foreign arbitrators are concerned?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. To this extent: Those representing us in and about the interpretation of the treaty under consideration by the arbitrators undoubtedly would impress upon the arbitrators the proper rules for interpreting the treaty, and doubtless would have recourse to decisions of our high court in support of their contentions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, suppose this question should arise: Suppose that Japan, for instance, should negotiate with Mexico for territorial concessions; and suppose that Mexico were friendly to the idea, and the arrangement were made. Then assume that the United States should object and say that that violated our understanding of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But suppose that both Japan and Mexico in that situation insisted that they were going through with their understanding. We are bound to use pacific means for arriving at the solution of any controversy or question. Suppose they suggest, then, that under this treaty we refer the whole question to some tribunal pacifically. Then would it be our policy to permit that to be done?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. We have always said that we reserved that doctrine.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But suppose we state that we reserve the right to interpret the Monroe doctrine, then suppose the other two nations insist on having the matter settled by some other pacific means: What is our alternative?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. With equally pacific mind we have said we reserved that doctrine; we interpret that doctrine.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But we have not reserved it in the treaty up to date.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think we have.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But suppose these nations have the same view that I have, and then it were referred to arbitration?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Of course, there are some things that could not be referred to arbitration, and this Monroe doctrine is one of them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But would the Senator then go to war in that instance?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; I would not necessarily go to war.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senator would let them go through with the understanding with Mexico?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What would the Senator do?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would merely indicate our objection, and I think that would be sufficient.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But suppose it were not sufficient?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It was sufficient in the case of Magdalena Bay.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am assuming that it would not be sufficient in this instance.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think the Senator has in mind the supposed—I will not say it was a fact—endeavor of an Asiatic country to acquire a naval base at Magdalena Bay.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, I remember that quite well; but this treaty was not in existence then.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Ah, but the Lodge resolution which passed this body was immediately passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But this treaty supersedes that in the event we become a signatory.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think not. The Senator means that it supersedes the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The resolution of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The resolution was but, perhaps, an enlargement of the Monroe doctrine, although it was grounded upon another well-known principle.

I may allude to that hereafter, but at the moment, if the Senator recalls it, it was thought that an Asiatic country was seeking a naval base at Magdalena Bay, and Senator Lodge, then chairman of the Foreign Relations of the Senate, introduced a resolution bearing on that question. After discussion the resolution, as originally introduced, was amended. It was very thoughtfully considered, and it passed this body, as I recall, by a vote of 51 to 4.

I contend that the Monroe doctrine is reserved from discussion between us and other nations. All the nations of the earth understand this doctrine. Every one of them understands it. There is no question about it; and to repeat myself over and over again, it needs no reservation, it needs no new promulgation. That doctrine is grounded on the natural law of self-defense. If anybody wishes to get at the scope and meaning of that doctrine let him read what former President Grover Cleveland said about it during the Venezuela controversy with England.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will not the Senator confine himself to a specific answer to the specific question? Assume that we should become signatory to this treaty, and that very question did arise, and both Japan and Mexico should insist on arbitrating the question of whether the Monroe doctrine applied or not, and suppose we yielded. Then we would surrender the Monroe doctrine, would we not? The minute we permit the Monroe doctrine to be arbitrated by any foreign arbitrator or any world tribunal we surrender the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is the very thing we do not propose to do—yield to arbitration as to what constitutes this American doctrine, and we are not obligated to do so under this treaty. I listened attentively the other day to the argument of the Senator from Indiana, and I have reflected over it. I do not think it can be held that by this treaty we surrender in any way this doctrine, or put it in question, so that it would be the subject of arbitration between any two nations or ourselves.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am just assuming that the other nations would insist, in a case of that kind, that the Monroe doctrine did not apply, and in that event, if it were left to arbitration, we would surrender the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, again we have evidence that two good men can differ very materially in regard to the interpretation of this treaty, and we have further evidence of the incontrovertible fact that the Foreign Relations Committee does not itself seem willing to present a report which will state what they believe the treaty means and what they believed it meant when they recommended it.

I wish that some members of that committee, or the distinguished chairman of it, would give us conclusive reasons for their failure to do what a committee ordinarily does in reporting a great measure, for their failure to present a written report. Is it because they desire to leave it open, and to leave it broad, and to let anyone interpret it in any way he desires? If that is the case, then we are certainly riding for a fall.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is not usual for the Committee on Foreign Relations to accompany a treaty with a report when we sit in executive session.

Mr. BINGHAM. The rules of the Senate do not permit us to discuss what happens in closed executive session.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not at the moment recall a case where there has been a written report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. I see on the floor the Senator's distinguished colleague who has been a member of that committee for many years.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senators will recall what was a matter of great controversy here, the Colombian treaty. We had majority and minority reports upon that. In matters that are of consequence I think reports are filed. But I have distinctly in mind that in the case of the Colombian treaty there were minority and majority reports, and a very long debate upon both.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; there were reports and there was debate. The Senator is correct. He refreshes my mind as to that.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should like to quote a few sentences from Doctor Oppenheim's great treatise on international law, particularly because Doctor Oppenheim, in presenting this treatise, stated that it was intended not for those who were learned in the subject, but for those who took an interest in international law, were not jurists, and had had no legal training; in other words, people like the great majority of people in the United States, who are taking an interest in this treaty at the present time. They are not international lawyers, they are not jurists, most of them have had no legal training, but they are tremendously keen about the treaty, because it represents, they believe, an ideal. I should like to call to their attention the words of Oppenheim on page 560, where he says:

> The terms used in a treaty must be interpreted according to their usual meaning in the language of everyday life.

Certainly, if you were to ask the ordinary person not familiar with law, not a jurist, not an international lawyer, but thoroughly conversant with the language of everyday life, what is meant by an agreement never to settle all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or whatever origin they may be which may arise among the nations except by pacific means, my impression is that he would place an entirely different interpretation upon that language from that which is placed on it by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and others more conversant with international law than the ordinary man. In other words, it does not seem to be fair to the great majority of the people of this country who are interested in these matters to ratify a treaty which they interpret, as Oppenheim says, in the language of everyday life, when, in that light, it does not mean what it says, there is a lot behind it—the right of self-defense, which includes very extensive possibilities, such as the Monroe doctrine, such as sending cruisers and marines to all parts of the world.

Oppenheim goes on to say:

> It is taken for granted that the contracting parties intend some reasonable, something adequate to the purpose of the treaty, and something not inconsistent with generally recognized principles of international law and with previous treaty obligations toward third states. If, therefore, the meaning of a stipulation is ambiguous, the reasonable meaning is to be preferred to the unreasonable, the more reasonable to the less reasonable, the adequate meaning to the meaning not adequate for the purpose of the treaty.

"Not adequate for the purpose of the treaty." The purpose of the pending treaty, I take it, is to outlaw war, as has been frequently stated, and to promote peace. It is difficult for some people to see how the adequate meaning of this treaty can be held to be adequate for the purpose of the treaty and at the same time to promote wars of self-defense.

Oppenheim further says:

> The principle in dubio mitius must be applied in interpreting treaties. If, therefore, the meaning of a stipulation is ambiguous, the meaning is to be preferred which is less onerous for the obliged party, or which interferes less with the parties' territorial and personal supremacy, or which contains less general restrictions upon the parties.

I shall refer to one more writer and then I shall have done. Sir Robert Phillimore prepared a great work on international law in half a dozen volumes entitled "Commentaries on International Law," which is generally recognized as being one of the great authorities on this subject. In volume 2 of the third edition, chapter 8, on Interpretation of Treaties, he states:

> In all laws and in all conventions the language of the rule must be general and the application of it particular. Moreover, cases arise which have perhaps not been foreseen, which may fall under the principle, but which are not provided for by the letter of the law or contract. Circumstances may give rise to real or apparent contradictions in the different dispositions of the same instrument, or of another instrument * * * which may require to be reconciled. These are difficulties which may arise between contracting parties disposed to act honestly toward each other, but they may not be so disposed; one of them may endeavor to avoid his share of the mutual obligation.

Similar cases might easily arise under this treaty.

> Indeed, there is no need for a priori reasoning on a subject amply demonstrated both in the covenants of individuals and the treaties supposed to be a matter of practical necessity.
>
> The interpretation is the life of the dead letter; but what is meant by the term "interpretation"? The meaning which any party may choose to affix or a meaning governed by settled rules and fixed principles, originally deduced from right reason and rational equity and subsequently formed into laws? Clearly, the latter.

It would seem to prevent us from giving any interpretation to the treaty which we seem inclined at the moment to give it. He goes on to say in paragraph 67:

> The general heads under which, for the sake of perspicuity, we may range the principles and rules of interpretation are the following:
>
> Authentic interpretation. * * *
>
> Usual interpretation. * * *
>
> Doctrinal interpretation. * * *
>
> Authentic interpretation in its strict sense means the exposition given by the lawgiver himself; it is, therefore, strictly speaking, inapplicable to the case of treaties.

Since any effort on our part to interpret it afterwards, or the meaning which we desire to give it ourselves is inapplicable to the case of treaties, it would seem to be all the more important for an official interpretation to be given at this time.

Mr. President, the hour is late, and I ask unanimous consent that there may be included in the RECORD at this point several paragraphs, quoting from Phillimore's work, which call attention to the rules to be followed in the interpretation of treaties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From "Commentaries on International Law," by Sir Robert Phillimore, vol. 2]

Usual interpretation is, in the case of treaties, that meaning which the practice of nations has affixed to the use of certain expressions and phrases, or to the conclusions deducible from their omissions, whether they are or are not to be understood by necessary implication.

* * * * *

Doctrinal interpretation is, as has been said, either, 1, grammatical or philological; or, 2, logical; and first—

As to grammatical interpretation, we must not confound translation and etymology with interpretation. It has been well observed that though it may not be easy to determine with exact precision where the province of the grammarian and the lexicographer ends and that of the interpreter begins, and though their provinces may be scarcely distinguishable upon their confines, yet that in their remote extremities, and for practical purposes, they are sufficiently distinct. A competent knowledge of the language in which the covenant is written is, in fact, necessarily supposed to precede or accompany the work of interpretation; and with respect to etymological refinements, they can but rarely have any place in the legitimate construction of a law or contract; the meaning of the words employed by the lawgiver, or by the parties, is to be sought in the common usage and custom, which indicate the consent of those who use them, that they should bear a particular meaning.

* * * * *

The principal rule has been already adverted to, namely, to follow the ordinary and usual acceptation, the plain and obvious meaning of the language employed. This rule is, in fact, inculcated as a cardinal maxim of interpretation equally by civilians and by writers on international law.

Vattel says that it is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation. If the meaning be evident, and the conclusion not absurd, you have no right to look beyond or beneath it, to alter or add to it by conjecture.

* * * * * * *

With respect to difficulties of construction, arising from both foregoing sources of doubt, two general rules are applicable.

1. That the contracting party, who might and ought to have expressed himself clearly and fully, must take the consequences of his carelessness, and can not, as a general rule, introduce subsequent restrictions or extensions of his meaning.

2. That what is sufficiently declared must be taken to be true, and to have been the true intention of the party entering into the engagement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I can not finish what I have to say without remembering that at various times in my own life I have been in foreign countries, on expeditions of one sort or another, where my intentions were misconstrued, where the object of the scientific expedition was entirely misinterpreted, where the good citizens of the country or countries concerned have honestly held to the opinion that the expedition was not a scientific expedition, carried on for altruistic purposes, and in the interest of science alone, but have held that it was either a secret expedition fathered by the United States for the purpose of finding out something about the interior of those countries for the benefit of our Army, or was an expedition for the purpose of stealing some of their ancient treasures, the gold ornaments and the gold treasures of their ancestors. They have believed that the reason why these expeditions were continued from time to time was that we succeeded in finding a large amount of gold which properly belonged in their own museums and to their own countries. I mention those things merely to show how easily misunderstandings arise when our own citizens are in foreign countries.

I recollect at one time I was practically under arrest and that my headquarters in the interior of one of these foreign countries was surrounded by the soldiers of that country because charges had been made by responsible officials of one of the higher institutions of learning against the expedition on the ground that we were engaged in robbing the country of their ancient treasure. There was no evidence whatever, but according to the law of that country it was not necessary that they adduce evidence. Senators will realize that it is only in a few countries in the world where habeas corpus proceedings may be demanded. It is only in a very few countries of the world where a man is considered innocent until he is proven guilty. In a very large number of countries in the world a man is held to be guilty if he is charged with a crime and it is his duty to prove his innocence. It is extremely difficult to prove one's innocence when there is no evidence of one's guilt to contravene. It places one in a very embarrassing position.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I should like very much to be permitted to conclude the thought I now have in mind.

Mr. BRUCE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that is the rule of evidence which our friends, the prohibitionists, are advocating at the present time, as they have done for the last year or two. It is a part of the coming prohibition program that there is a presumption of guilt until the contrary is established by the accused.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator——

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest that it is very fortunate for the Senator from Idaho and myself that we were not down in that country just the other day, where we would not have had any right to defend ourselves.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has occurred to me that if a larger number of the Members of this body had to do business in foreign countries, as do those engaged in export trade or those engaged in scientific exploration, they would appreciate the importance of doing nothing to tie our hands in defending our citizens and securing their rights when they are menaced in foreign lands.

I was about to say when I was interrupted by the Senator from Maryland that at the time of which I was speaking, when my own liberty was menaced and I was threatened with imprisonment, so lightly was the United States considered in that country and so unlikely was it regarded as being willing to protect its citizens that the representations of our minister availed nothing with the president-dictator of that country. On the other hand, so well known was the habit of Great Britain in defending British subjects, in whatever part of the world they may be, by sending cruisers and by insisting on legal rights, that when the minister of Great Britain and the head of the British colony went to see the president-dictator it made an impression, and the soldiers were removed and I was no longer in danger of imprisonment.

That happened at a time when there was a Secretary of State who was not as anxious to protect American citizens abroad as is the present distinguished occupant of that office. That happened at a time when we had a Secretary of State, as we may have again in the future, who, when his attention was called to the fact that Americans might suffer abroad and were suffering in foreign countries, said, "Why do they not come home, then? They will be safe at home. Why should they go to any country where they may be in danger?"

Mr. President, that is not my idea of the way to promote the prosperity of our country or the security of our citizens or respect for us abroad. I hope not to live long enough to see another Secretary of State who will take a similar view, but the day might come when we might have a Secretary of State who would believe that American citizens should not be protected abroad. For that reason I hope very sincerely that the Senate will not ratify this treaty without there being more of an official interpretation placed upon the records of the Senate than there is at present.

I hope that before we are asked to vote on the ratification of the treaty the committee will present a report showing that in no way does the treaty interfere with the right of our defending our own territory, nor in the slightest degree interfere with our right to defend the lives and property of our citizens in any part of the world. If the day should come when we can not do that, then we may well be ashamed of being Americans. I hope never to see that day come. I am proud of being an American, although there have been times during my short life when I have seen things happen in foreign countries that made me ashamed of my country.

I want no action of the Senate to be taken that will lead to a situation wherein the citizens of this country will feel ashamed of being Americans. On the contrary, I hope that the Senate will take such action as may make sure in the future that every citizen of our country in everything concerned with our foreign relations and with the lives and property of our citizens abroad may say with pride, "I am an American."

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the Briand-Kellogg pact, declaring the outlawry of war and binding its signatories never to seek a solution of disputes or conflicts between them except by pacific means, is the most remarkable step toward world peace ever undertaken. I am not visionary enough to believe that this pact means perpetual peace on earth, but I am convinced that it will be of greater assistance in promoting peace and preventing war than any treaty or international agreement heretofore adopted.

This treaty condemns recourse to war for the solution of international controversies in the relations of nations with one another, and really outlaws war, which heretofore has been one of the most important and highly respected avocations of man, which has received universal sanction, and been practiced throughout all ages by all nations and races of men, savage and civilized. Recorded history is substantially a record of the wars between nations, infinitely more space and prominence being given to the description of battles and the awful destruction of men and cities than to the arts of peace and things which promote human welfare and happiness. Even the Old Testament is largely devoted to accounts of wars, which were so common in the old days that the Scripture refers to certain seasons of the year as the time when kings go out to war.

Prior to the advent of the Prince of Peace, less than 2,000 years ago, war was the principal business of mankind, and all prisoners of war were enslaved. Athens, the center of ancient civilization, art, and science, had only 20,000 free men and 400,000 slaves. During the first 600 years of the Roman Republic the Temple of Janus, open in time of war and closed in time of peace, was closed but for four brief periods. During recent years, however, war has been much less frequent than in the past, and the world seems gradually tending toward peace.

It may truthfully be said that war has ceased to be a probable source of benefit to the conquering state. The victor loses and suffers in many instances no less than the vanquished. War no longer pays; it exhausts and devitilizes both sides. Those who carry the honor of the field find little, if anything, with which to compensate and reward their own losses and contributions.

In addition to being the greatest humanitarian question in the world, modern war has also become our most acute economic problem. The Great War swept away over $300,000,000,000 of accumulated wealth and its indirect loss in the misdirected energies of the peoples of most of the highly civilized nations of the world, and in the curtailing of their productivity would probably double that amount. Therefore, statesmen and business men can not regard war as a problem for pacifists, churchgoers, and women, but one which has now become paramount for themselves as well.

Since the recent World War, fundamental changes have taken place in the very conception of war. That titanic struggle produced many unfortunate results, but it produced some good also. The best result of the World War was that it convinced not only the statesmen of many nations but the peoples thereof that resort to modern science has rendered war so destructive of life and property that unless our civilization shall find some means of making an end of war the next war will make an end of civilization.

Let me recall in a few words the evidence upon which this fateful conclusion was reached. Seven million five hundred thousand of the youth of the world were killed in battle; 5,500,000 more were so desperately wounded that they died within a few days after the battles; so that it is fair to say that the direct deaths of the World War were 13,000,000 men. Twenty million were wounded, not mortally, but so seriously that in many cases death would have been a happy release to them. Never was there such a slaughter of human beings in the history of the world. Consider for a moment the destruction of property. The best authorities estimate the direct losses of property at $186,000,000,000, the indirect losses at $151,000,000,000, or a total of $337,000,000,000. The mind can not grasp such totals, but by comparison let me say that it is as great a destruction of property, aside from the awful losses of human life, as if the United States, with all we possess, had been sunk to the bottom of the sea by an earthquake or other calamity. These are among the facts that have convinced many nations that unless our civilization finds some means of making an end of war modern war will make an end of civilization.

The eminent sociologist, Dr. John A. Ryan, recently said:

> One of the greatest obstacles to peace has always been the lazy assumption that wars must come; that there will always be war while men are men. So long as this pessimism prevails the majority of persons will not assert themselves in the cause of peace. World peace is largely, if not mainly, a matter of human faith. If the majority of people believe that peace can be established and secured, peace will be established and secured. Therefore, we must strive to make people think and talk peace. We must incessantly declare the feasibility of a reign of peace until this idea and faith become a dominating and effective element in the habitual thinking of the average man and woman. No human being knows whether war can be forever banished from the earth. Only God knows. We do know, however, that war may be made more and more remote through human action aided by the grace of God.

In that program Christian principles must find specific and detailed application. As followers of the Prince of Peace, we have the spiritual responsibility of promoting peace not only in our own country but throughout the world. It is not an easy task to apply the moral principles of Christianity to international affairs. There must be both individual instruction and political instruction. Under the first head the religious teacher must declare, expound, interpret, illustrate, and make concrete God's commandment "Thou shalt not kill." This teaching must be imparted to all groups and classes. It is not enough to declare that "every human being is my neighbor." Men must be reminded that "every human being" includes Frenchmen, Germans, Italians, Chinese, Englishmen, Irishmen, Japanese, and all other divisions of the human family. This doctrine should be repeated and reiterated. Effective teaching and adequate assimilation depend largely upon the simple process of repetition.

It is generally conceded that morality is best taught in the church, the home, and the school. Since peace is kindred to morality, let me cite one of the obstacles that must be overcome so far as teaching peace in the schools is concerned:

Not long ago a study was made by three American college professors of 24 history texts and 24 supplementary readers in order to ascertain the extent to which war is emphasized or favored in these school manuals. The investigation showed an excessive amount of space devoted to war; the amount devoted to peace almost negligible; the discussion of war nationalistic, biased, and in many cases flamboyant; the war illustrations reflecting only the glorified imaginings of the artists; very little telling of the real truths about war; and the great military leaders receiving vastly more attention than the conspicuous leaders in the arts of peace.

In taking advantage of every avenue to world peace advocates of that great work should not overlook the schools. Here is one of their greatest opportunities for impression upon the young minds—those who will soon undertake the responsibility of the world's affairs. It is not surprising that our children should receive the impression that war has contributed largely to the development of mankind when so large a part of our histories and so much of the literature studied in our schools is devoted to the details of the battle field, dwelling so emphatically upon the picturesque features of war—the marshaling of soldiers, the stirring music, the brilliant charge of armies—everything to glorify war and its heroes. The other side of the picture should be carefully portrayed—the return of the regiments, reduced to a tenth of their original number, maimed and feeble, carrying torn and blood-stained battle flags, and the terrible losses of life and property, with the consequent sorrow and suffering. The study of history should dwell largely upon the peaceful pursuits of life—agriculture, trade, commerce, science, and so forth.

People of all nationalities and races, of all forms of religious beliefs, and citizens of every government on earth, no matter how much they may differ in other things, can and will unite in efforts for preventing war and promoting peace. This is one thing on which there is no difference of opinion anywhere; and every human being realizes the incalculable benefits that would result if wars should cease forever and peace reign supreme.

How, then, is this end which we all so much desire to be attained? The peace pact makes a fine start by declaring it a crime to engage in war except in national self-defense. But human nature is weak and selfish, and the habits and tendencies of all past generations are hard to overcome. It was extremely difficult to prevent dueling in America; but when the laws of all our States had made it murder to kill a man in a duel that barbarous practice gradually fell into disuse, and men began to settle their differences in peaceful ways, such as arbitration or suits in the courts.

Nations can and will do likewise. Men fought duels when it was considered brave and honorable so to do, but they ceased when dueling became murder under the law and public opinion denounced as criminals those who took life in a duel.

When war has been outlawed by consent of all the world and is no longer respectable except in legitimate national self-defense, nations will not seek excuses for going to war but will resort to peaceful methods for adjusting their disputes.

To bring about world peace we must make a start in our own localities and work on the idea that everyone must be just to his fellow men and promote peace and happiness in his own neighborhood by giving to everyone his due and practicing justice at all times.

If justice be our guide and rule of life in all our private affairs, it will prevail in State, National, and international affairs, with world peace as a result.

We must arouse public opinion in favor of peace and against war. No force is so strong as public opinion when emphatically asserted and supported by sound logic and simple justice. Children must be taught the beauties of peace and the horrors of war at their mother's knee and in the schools. The churches must impress upon their membership that war as a method of settling international differences is a crime, and that disputes between nations can be adjusted by international tribunals in the same way that those between individuals are disposed of by arbitration and courts of justice.

It would be horrible to contemplate a return to savagery among our citizens, when might was right and courts of law were unknown; and what is war but the application of force, of might instead of right? The peace pact provides that right, not might, shall be our guide in the future.

EXECUTIVE SESSION BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business behind closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. As in open executive session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess in open executive session until to-morrow, Friday, January 11, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 10 (legislative day of January 7), 1929

POSTMASTERS

NEW JERSEY

David Tumen, Atlantic Highlands.
John R. Yates, Bivalve.
Earl C. Woodworth, Essex Fells.

NORTH CAROLINA

Roger V. Phillips, Grifton.

NORTH DAKOTA

Myron B. Fallgatter, Kintyre.
Bernice R. Ronning, Kramer.

PENNSYLVANIA

Herald H. Spaide, Ashland.
Mary G. Cann, Stoneboro.

UTAH

Carlos C. Hansen, Midvale.

WYOMING

Charles M. FitzMaurice, Greybull.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, January 10, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock, noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O blessed Teacher of Nazareth, Thou hast said: "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart." We would sit at Thy footstool; our hunger for knowledge is the sure reality of our divine nature. We wait on Thy altar stairs. Teach us the patience of prayer not answered, and also, they serve Thee who stand and wait; teach us the sanctity of life's quiet moment; teach us the sympathetic meaning of life's checkered pathway and the far-away stretch of life's undying hope. O Lord, teach us the heavenly joy of pure love and the happiness that radiates about the consecrated fireside. And, Father in Heaven, we are thankful for the warmth of fidelity in the hearts of our fellows and for the countless mercies that stream forth from the hidden secrets of this dear old earth. We wait with bared head and beseeching hand. Teach us, O God. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15569) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. JONES, Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. BORAH, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HARRIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania and Mr. SIMMONS members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President for his approval bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 53. An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture;

H. R. 3041. An act for the relief of Alfred St. Dennis;

H. R. 4935. An act to authorize the appointment of First Lieut. Clarence E. Burt, retired, to the grade of major, retired, in the United States Army;

H. R. 8798. An act for the relief of William Lentz;

H. R. 8974. An act authorizing the President to order Oren W. Rynearson before a retiring board for a hearing of his case and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation;

H. R. 11071. An act providing for the purchase of 1,124 acres of land, more or less, in the vicinity of Camp Bullis, Tex., and authorizing an appropriation therefor;

H. R. 12897. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon of a fireproof office building or buildings for the House of Representatives;

H. R. 13033. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey certain portions of the military reservation at Monterey, Calif., to the city of Monterey, Calif., for the extension of Alvarado Street;

H. R. 13404. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Louisiana State Museum of the city of New Orleans, La., the silver service set in use on the battleship Louisiana;

H. R. 13503. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Hastings, Minn.;

H. R. 13540. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ouachita River at a point between the mouth of Saline River and the Louisiana and Arkansas line;

H. R. 13826. An act authorizing the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Union, Nebr.; and

H. R. 13848. An act to legalize a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Paw Paw, W. Va.

DIVEST GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE MANUFACTURED, PRODUCED, OR MINED BY CONVICTS OR PRISONERS OF THEIR INTERSTATE CHARACTER IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 7729, an act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 7729, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7729) entitled "An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

W. F. KOPP,
FREDK. N. ZIHLMAN,
WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

JAMES COUZENS,
SIMEON D. FESS,
HARRY B. HAWES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers of the House submit the following statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

The first amendment of the Senate excepts "convicts or prisoners on parole or probation." This amendment in no way conflicts with the purpose or spirit of the bill. It may be unnecessary but it is not prejudicial.

The second amendment of the Senate excepts "commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government." The Federal Government manufactures a number of articles in its penal and correctional institutions, but it makes no sale of any of them on the open market. All the products manufactured by the Federal Government are for the use of the Federal Government. As the policy of the Federal Government is entirely in harmony with this bill, we regard the exception as entirely proper. Many thought that the Federal Government under the original bill had all the rights which this amendment undertakes to preserve, but the managers on the part of the House saw no reason for opposing an amendment which simply safeguards the rights of the Federal Government by express language.

The bill as passed by the House provided that the act should take effect three years after its approval. The Senate, by the fourth amendment, extended the time to five years. In view of the difference of opinion on this question, it was thought best to accept the amendment and end the controversy on that point.

The third amendment of the Senate was eliminated, and this action was in harmony with the previous action of this House.

W. F. KOPP,
FREDERICK N. ZIHLMAN,
WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield me three minutes?

Mr. KOPP. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was called up before the holidays and unanimous consent asked to agree to the Senate amendments I was the one who objected. My objection was based on the ground that a very substantial amendment had been adopted to the bill in the Senate, and in case of such Senate amendments I think that we should always refer the bill either to the committee having charge of the bill, so that we can have the committee's judgment on the Senate amendments, or send the bill to conference, where differences between the two Houses can be thrashed out and composed.

The bill went to conference and the amendment that I regarded as objectionable has been eliminated by the conferees. In that respect the bill has been improved and is along the line of action of the House last May, when the bill was before the House of Representatives for consideration and passage.

The bill was also improved in adding two years to the length of time before the bill goes into effect, making it five years instead of three years.

With the elimination of the third amendment it at least makes the bill applicable to all kinds of goods alike and does not discriminate against the farmer. The Senate amendment No. 3 would have discriminated against the farming industry. The position of the House was very clearly against such discrimination and in conference won out on this point. The House conferees carried out the mandate of this body and are to be commended.

My fundamental objection to the bill is that it is unconstitutional, but there is no use in further pressing this objection at this time. I hope the President and the Attorney General will give that phase of the bill most careful consideration, and undoubtedly it will receive careful consideration before the bill is finally passed on by the President.

We realize that the bill is going to impose many hardships on the prison authorities and on the taxpayers of the different States, but that matter has already been decided by the two Houses, and, of course, is water over the dam.

With this brief statement I do not care to delay the House in its approval or disapproval of the conference report.

Mr. CLARKE. The gentleman feels that the fundamental objection to the bill is that it is unconstitutional?

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is the way I think about it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. KOPP. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman explain what happened in conference?

Mr. KOPP. The only change really made in conference was the extension of the time for the bill to go into effect by two years. We conceded that the time might be five years instead of three years. Of the two other amendments agreed upon, one related to the exception of prisoners on probation or parole. We thought that was included in the original bill. The Senate thought not, and we accepted it. The other amendment related to goods manufactured at Federal prisons.

Mr. SNELL. What happened as to the amendment for processed goods?

Mr. KOPP. That was eliminated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

REFERENDUM ON WAR

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] for 10 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I rise to call the attention of the Members of the House to a joint resolution which I have just introduced providing for a constitutional amendment for a referendum on war. I will read the resolution, as it is self-explanatory.

The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

ARTICLE —

The Congress shall have power to declare war; but war, except in defense of the United States, shall not be waged by the United States until a declaration of war by the Congress shall have been ratified by a majority of the qualified electors in the several States in the manner provided by the laws of each State for chosing Representatives in the Congress, at a time which the President shall fix immediately following such declaration. But when an actual state of war exists the President shall have power to recognize it and to take appropriate action to terminate it.

The proposed constitutional amendment is the natural and logical step after the ratification of the Kellogg multilateral treaty. There are those who believe that the multilateral treaty is a mere gesture, that it is a frigid kiss among nations, that it is a scrap of paper. There are, on the other hand, an overwhelming majority of the people who believe that the renunciation of war, except for self-defense, is the most forward step taken to do away with, or at least limit, wars since the beginning of all history. When the enlightened countries of the world give their plighted word to renounce wars, except for self-defense, it means far more than a mere gesture. It means that war is put beyond the law, that it is outlawed. It means that it is delegalized and made unlawful for the first time in the history of the world. Until we ratify the Kellogg pact the Emperor of Japan has a perfect right under the present status of war to declare war on the United States or to declare any other war of aggression. He would be just as lawful and legal in doing so as it is for you Members to belong to this House, to send your children to the public schools, or to belong to a church. The multilateral treaty proposes to renounce war and to make it unlawful, to take this ancient institution, recognized and entrenched in every civilized country, and put it beyond the law. I am offering the resolution at this time, when people are thinking in terms of peace and the outlawry of wars between nations, except strictly for self-defense, which in my opinion means invasion or threat of invasion. The resolution that I have proposed gives the power to the people of the country to determine whether we should go to war except in self-defense.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I prefer not to yield until I get through with my statement. The act of war is the highest act of sovereignty, all consuming and all absorbing, involving the lives, the property, and the happiness of all the people. It is on a different plane from any other of the constitutional powers, and in these days when a nation goes to war it compels the masses of the people to bear arms by the enactment of arbitrary conscription laws.

It is only right that the people have a say as to whether this country shall declare war or not. Either the democratic principle of submitting this supreme issue to the collective judgment of the people is right or we are afraid to trust the deliberate judgment of the American electorate. I propose this amendment not as a millennium, not as a panacea to forever do away with wars, but as a fundamentally sound proposal that the people be given the right to ratify a declaration of war made by the Congress, except in case of invasion or threat of invasion. It seems to me that the time is ripe for careful and serious consideration of such a proposal. If it is in the interest of the American people and that of world peace, it should be adopted; if not, a discussion of it on its merits or demerits will do no harm.

For example, suppose to-day that we had a President of the United States who was warlike, and he provoked a diplomatic breech with Mexico so that his party in power in Congress followed him, and we declared a war of aggression against Mexico, or a war against Canada, Japan, or any other nation. Is it not right in this great self-governing country that the people should have a voice when they are the ones to carry the rifles and to bear the burdens? Is there any sound reason or insuperable obstacle for not giving the American electorate a direct voice when the Government is confronted with the supreme decision precipitating the country in a war which might affect the very existence of the Constitution, the Government, and the people themselves?

This is no mere gesture. All I am asking at the present time is that the matter be considered carefully; and, if it is a step in the direction of peace, that it be considered by a committee of this House and that the people back home be informed that there is such an amendment before the Congress. Then, if the people want this right, if they want this power, let them make the request to the Congress of the United States. It is merely an extension of the powers given by our forefathers. They did not leave the right, or rather the power, because it is not a right, to declare war to the Senate of the United States. They gave it to the Senate and to the House. They gave to the Senate the power to declare peace, but not to declare war; and, therefore, this proposed constitutional amendment, which may seem revolutionary to some Members at the present time, has the indirect support of the American ambassador to Great Britain, Alanson B. Houghton, who holds the most important foreign post in the gift of our Government. He has made several notable addresses advocating giving the power to the people, by way of a referendum, to declare war. This is along the line, let me say to my Democratic friends, of the Bryan arbitration treaties, postponing a declaration of war to a period of one year after full and free investigation. There are to-day 19 of those treaties in existence. The Congress of the United States is not elected upon the basis of war and peace. It is elected on partisan issues. It is elected on issues of the tariff, on financial issues, on peace-time issues, and may not be representative of the great mass of the American people on the question of war and peace. When you come to consider this resolution, I hope that you will not consider it as something radical or urging peace at any price. We surrender no rights by this resolution. We simply permit the American public to be heard on the question of war and peace in case of a war of aggression. I believe it will be years before such a resolution can be passed, but I believe at the same time that it will be passed and probably in the lifetime of most Members of the present Congress. Why not have faith in the people of the United States and give them an opportunity to vote on this greatest of all issues involving their life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. Let us bring the question of peace and war out into the open for the inspection and determination of a great self-governing people.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. My friend speaks of the possibility of the country engaging in wars of aggression. I do not believe the history of this country is such that it would lead anyone to think that such a thing is imminent.

Mr. FISH. I do not believe it is imminent. There is, however, such a question about the war with Spain, in which the gentleman served. I do not think it was a war of aggression myself, but that is a debatable question. There may be at any time wars which may occur because of the desire of conquest, of some particular island in our sphere of influence that may bring about a war between us and some foreign nation; but I personally can not conceive of a direct war of aggression under the present or incoming administration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Let me ask my friend what he would do if there were an invasion of this country, if such a constitutional amendment had been adopted and that all matters of this kind be referred to the people themselves before any action could be taken.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman evidently did not hear the resolution read. The resolution specifically excepts an invasion, which is a definite question of self-defense.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am sorry. I came into the Chamber after the gentleman had been talking for some time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The latter part of the proposed amendment puts it absolutely in the hands of the President of the United States under the condition such as the gentleman from Michigan inquired about, but is it not a matter of history that every declaration of war that has ever been made by the Congress has been a declaration that war was already in existence?

Mr. FISH. Let me answer the gentleman by saying that such great generals as Grant, who served in the Mexican War, said the Mexican War was an unjust war and an aggressive war. That may or may not be an answer to what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am speaking of a declaration of Congress upon the question. I do not remember the exact verbiage of the declaration in regard to the Mexican War, but it is my very distinct recollection that in every war in which we have participated the declaration has been by Congress setting forth that war was in existence.

Mr. FISH. Our troops had invaded Mexico at the time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHAFER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, who is going to determine whether the war is to be a war of defense?

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman asks me, I believe the Congress is competent to decide that together with the President. I believe, however, public opinion would be decisive.

Mr. SCHAFER. I mean before the matter is submitted to the American people after ratification by Congress who determines whether a war is a war of self-defense? In other words, does the gentleman think that the question of entering the World War would have been submitted to a vote of the American people if the gentleman's amendment was the law of the land?

Mr. FISH. Let me say to the gentleman that if the people of Europe had had a voice in deciding upon war in 1914 there might not have been a world conflict. I think the point by the gentleman from Wisconsin is well taken and that the resolution would be clearer if the words "invasion or threat of invasion" were substituted for the words "self-defense."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT ON H. R. 14154

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to file a supplemental report on the bill H. R. 14154, Report No. 1941, which is a bill to increase the building accommodations for the Army Medical School. The original report is very brief, and I think it would be desirable to have full information before the House. I was authorized by the committee to make the original report, and I desire to file a supplemental report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not hear what the request was.

The SPEAKER. It is to file a supplemental report on the bill mentioned.

Mr. WINGO. There was so much confusion I could not hear.

Mr. McSWAIN. The bill is to authorize an appropriation to increase the building accommodations of the Army Medical School.

Mr. WINGO. Did the gentleman file the original report?
Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.
Mr. WINGO. And this is to file a supplemental report?
Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COL. PAUL V. M'NUTT, NATIONAL COMMANDER OF THE AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for one minute.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we had the honor of being visited by and having presented to us from the gallery the commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. To-day we have the honor of having as a visitor in the Speaker's gallery the national commander of the American Legion, Col. Paul V. McNutt, and I wish to present him to the House. [Applause.]

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I present a privileged report, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.
Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-eighty Members are present, not a quorum.
Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.
A call of the House was ordered.
The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 9]

Adkins	Curry	McMillan	Tillman
Allgood	Dempsey	McSweeney	Timberlake
Anthony	Denison	Milligan	Treadway
Arentz	Doyle	Montague	Tucker
Bell	Estep	Moore, Ky.	Updike
Berger	Evans, Mont.	Moore, N. J.	Vestal
Blanton	Fletcher	O'Brien	Ware
Boies	Fort	O'Connor, N. Y.	Warren
Britten	French	Palmer	Watres
Browne	Garber	Parks	Weaver
Bushong	Gasque	Patterson	White, Colo.
Canfield	Golder	Prall	White, Kans.
Carley	Griest	Pratt	Whitehead
Casey	Hull, Tenn.	Reed, Ark.	Williamson
Celler	Kearns	Sears, Nebr.	Wilson, Miss.
Clancy	Kerr	Somers, N. Y.	Winter
Cole, Md.	Kindred	Speaks	Wolfenden
Collins	King	Stedman	Wolverton
Cooper, Ohio	Kunz	Stobbs
Crowther	Leatherwood	Taylor, Colo.
Culkin	Leech	Temple

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty Members are present, a quorum.
Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.
The motion was agreed to.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be reported.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11725, a bill for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] if time is desired on his side to debate the rule?
Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that, due to the importance of this subject, we think we shall be justified in asking for a longer time. I would like to have 30 minutes on this side.
Mr. MICHENER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the debate on the rule be limited to one hour, one-half of the time to be controlled——
The SPEAKER. The simpler way to do would be for the gentleman from Michigan to yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.
Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we thought we could get unanimous consent to have the previous question ordered if we could get unanimous consent as to the time.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the debate upon the resolution be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], at the conclusion of which the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.
Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the bill H. R. 11725, commonly known as the reapportionment bill.
This is not a new matter. The subject has been constantly before the Congress for the last eight years. Congress up to this time has failed to perform its constitutional duty, and when I say "Congress" I use the term in the inclusive sense. There are two branches of Congress—the House and the Senate.
Much criticism, and just criticism, has been aimed at the Congress; but let us not forget that on January 19, 1921, the first Congress following the report to the Congress of the taking of the 1920 census, a reapportionment bill was passed, reapportioning the Members of the House at 435, but that bill failed in the Senate. It was never considered in the Senate. In each Congress since that time, with one exception, we have had before us a reapportionment bill. On several occasions those bills have been considered by the House, and on each occasion the bill has failed of enactment by the House.
I think we are all familiar with the constitutional mandate, and I shall not discuss that. I think every Member of this House is familiar with the terms of this bill. A very comprehensive report has been presented by the committee favoring the enactment of the bill, and a very comprehensive minority report has also been filed, so that there is to-day in the hands of each and every Member here a clear statement of the matter which this resolution brings before the House; a clear analysis of the bill. I am not going to enter upon any particular analysis of the bill at this time, because that will be taken care of when the bill is being considered.
Something has been said about this being the same bill that was before the Congress last spring, to be exact, on the 17th day of May, 1928. In the main, the report tells us that this is the same bill. However, important changes have been made. All the discretionary power lodged in the Secretary of Commerce in the previous bill has been eliminated, so to-day those who opposed the bill a year ago because they said it was delegating discretionary power have lost that ground of complaint. There is no discretion delegated. The things that are to be done by the Secretary of Commerce are entirely ministerial. He works out a mathematical problem according to directions and reports the result to Congress.
We were told when the bill was previously before the House that the Secretary would do the apportioning and that the House would not have the opportunity to pass upon what the Secretary did, because under the bill all that was necessary to be done was for the Secretary of Commerce to report to the Clerk of the House, and automatically it became the duty of the Clerk of the House to proceed to reapportion. That feature has been eliminated, so that to-day, as I understand this bill, the Secretary of Commerce will report to the House as instructed in the bill. After he has so reported no action can be taken by anyone until after the House has been in session at least from the first Monday in December to the 4th day of the following March.
Therefore the Secretary of Commerce is not reapportioning. He is merely presenting to the House some figures prepared according to the direction of the House, and action must be taken by the House either negatively or affirmatively. In other words, if the House, when it convenes in December, 1930, and has before it these figures, then approves of the figures and approves of what has been done by the Secretary of Commerce, it needs to do nothing further. On the other hand, if the House is not satisfied in any particular with what has been done by the Secretary of Commerce in accordance with the directions laid down in this bill or with the action taken by this Congress, then it will be the privilege of that Congress to provide reapportionment in its own way. So we are not laying down any hard and fast rule. We are not doing anything to deprive the Congress next convening after the taking of the census of its constitutional duty. We are simply providing that if future Congresses fail to do their constitutional duty in reference to reapportionment, then the people of the country shall not be deprived of constitutional representation in Congress. We are providing for an emergency such as has existed since 1921.

As I view the situation, those are the principal changes in this bill, and I am not going to discuss the bill further at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman please show the House where there are any such changes as that in this bill? Please tell us where there are any such changes in the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. If the Members of the House will read the bill they can get that information. This bill is a particularly comprehensive bill, because it embodies a new feature; that is, the bill which was before the House a year ago is included in the print. The parts to be eliminated are stricken out by lines and the new parts are inserted in italics, and if the gentleman will read the bill I am sure he will be able to arrive at the conclusion at which I have arrived.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what led me to believe the gentleman from Michigan had not read it.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, there may be a difference of interpretation, and if the gentleman is still in doubt I would suggest that he read the majority report.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not care to take any more time at this time, and I ask the gentleman from Alabama to use some of his time.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield for a question, in order to correct a statement he has made?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not yield further at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I should be very much gratified to have the indulgence and attention of the House for the few moments I shall occupy in undertaking to give what appears to me as being some sound reasons why this rule should not be adopted, and if the rule should be adopted, why the so-called reapportionment bill should not pass.

This is, by the very nature of the case, a profoundly important question not only to the people of the country but it is also a profoundly important question to the House of Representatives itself as a part of our Government. In the first place, gentlemen, I desire to call your attention to the fact that the Constitution itself, by the terms affecting this so-called duty of the House to reapportion after each decennial census, does not contain any mandatory duty imposed upon the Congress to perform a reapportionment by legislative act. I must confess that by inductive reasoning, possibly, and by construction, that imputation may be put upon the section of the Constitution covering this question; but conceding that there is a duty imposed upon the Congress of the United States to reapportion after each census, I respectfully submit to your candid judgment that upon a reading of this bill and upon a reading of the majority report supporting the bill this is not a reapportionment bill, although it so states in the title of the bill presented. If there is a duty imposed upon the Congress of the United States under the Constitution, if this mandate does exist, which the gentleman from Michigan says has been so long neglected, and for the neglect of which the Congress of the United States has been so severely criticized in the press and otherwise—if this mandate exists, then, by the very nature of the case the duty is imposed upon the Congress undertaking to act upon the matter of reapportionment to perform those duties itself, and by the very admissions of this report it is not a reapportionment bill but at most it only sets up a so-called mathematical thesis which the committee calls anticipatory legislation to become law in the event of the future contingency of neglect upon the part of a future Congress. There is the whole sum and substance of the purposes of this bill in letter and in spirit, and frankly so admitted by the proponents of this measure.

Now, if the Congress of the United States during the last eight years has legitimately laid itself liable to the earnest criticisms which have been hurled against it in the press, in the forum, and otherwise, then surely by waiting for only a period of two years longer it would not gain much in the condemnation of the country or lose much more of its respect.

I submit that is the thing which this Congress ought to do. We ought to refuse to adopt the pending resolution and let this matter go over until after the 1930 census has been taken; and then, with all the facts before us, as disclosed by that census, delivered to the Congress of the United States for its direction, courageously and intelligently and in a constitutional method, and without surrendering the dignity and the prerogatives and duties of the Congress to some subordinate in the Government, meet that duty at that time. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman, I have only a limited time——

Mr. MICHENER. I was just going to ask the gentleman if he supported the reapportionment bill in 1921, immediately following the census, which did not delegate any authority?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If I did support it, I will say to the gentleman, I supported a bill that carried out the evident intention of the framers of the Constitution that the Congress of the United States should reapportion the country and not submit it to some Secretary of Commerce or some subordinate of that department. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The RECORD also shows that the gentleman from Michigan voted to recommit that bill.

Mr. MICHENER. No; it does not show anything of the kind.

Mr. RANKIN. I will read it to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], if we are to be bound by the legislative records of how we voted in this Congress, and if we are to be consistent in our votes, then there is no hope for the passage of this resolution at this time, because only last May this House, after a full and candid discussion of the question, in its deliberate judgment, referred it back to the Committee on the Census. [Applause.] And if you are appealing on the ground of consistency, if the gentleman thinks that is a conclusive argument, then I submit to all of those gentlemen who agreed with us at that time that this bill ought not to become a law; if you will stand firm to your then conviction and your then vote, we will send this bill back to the committee and wait until the next Congress, whose duty it is to act, to perform its constitutional duty.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. RANKIN. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 14, 1921, at page 6348, shows that the reapportionment bill was recommitted by vote of 146 yeas to 142 nays, and it shows that one of the yeas was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. "Oh, that mine adversary had written a book," I believe is an old quotation. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, gentlemen, there is another thing I desire to call to your attention. What is the real substance of this bill? Why, the proponents of it admit it has no binding force or effect whatever upon a subsequent Congress, either in morals or in law or in precedents. They will have to confess that when the Seventy-third Congress assembles for the discharge of its duties, they will have the constitutional, legal, and moral right, as well as the political right, if they see fit, to expunge this bill from the RECORD, to repeal it or to modify it in any way they see fit, to change the basis of representation if they see fit to do so, or in any other wise to meet the constitutional duty imposed upon that Congress to meet this situation.

So in its last anaylsis, by a candid consideration of the very effect of the bill in spirit and in essence, it is nothing more or less than a legislative gesture; that is all.

I now ask you, in all candor, why are you gentlemen here, whose consciences seem to have been so severely aroused by these criticisms that have been laid against you, why have you the right to assume that the Seventy-third Congress will not be as capable of handling this question as the Seventy-first Congress? Are you taking stock in the proposition that because of the fact we have failed to perform our duty, as you say, that we will judge our successors by our own code of morals and of action and anticipate, as the bill says it is anticipating, that they also will not perform their duty, and therefore in order to save our successors, these brethren of ours, in the future, whose reputations we are so anxious to conserve, we will throw around them this cloak of protection and fix up an automatic scheme, by which, if that Congress fails to perform its duties, then by these figures that are presented by this automatic arrangement provided in the bill, the Congress will ipso facto reapportion itself.

Is not that a fair statement of the real crux of this bill? And when any gentleman who proposes to support it comes on the floor to argue its merits, I now ask him to deny that as far as legal effect is concerned, if that is not exactly what is proposed in this bill?

Gentlemen, I am one of those who yet has some faith and some trust in the dignity of the Congress of the United States.

[Applause.] I have been one of those who for the last decade and more has observed with great solicitude the constant dispersion of the power of the House of Representatives, the constant and reiterated abdication of our real constitutional powers and duties to some subordinate function or functionary of the Government. If I had the time, I could call your attention to a great number of the phases of our constitutional duty which we have surrendered, which we have abdicated and passed on to bureaus and divisions.

But here, gentlemen, is a question involving the very essence, the very sacrament, if I may call it that, of the personnel of the House of Representatives, the popular branch of the Government of the United States, and we, the Representatives of the people of this country, by this character of legislation, are abjectly admitting to the people of the country whom we represent that the Congress itself is either too cowardly or too impotent or too incapable to meet its constitutional duty.

I think the time has come, gentlemen—as a matter of fact, has long since passed—when we ought to reflect a little upon this phase of our duty. The founders of this Government looking down the corridors of the future years with that prophetic wisdom of theirs, contemplating no doubt in imagination the character and ability of the people of this generation and the Representatives of the people here, saw no reason to doubt that we would be competent to deal with this question; otherwise, they themselves would have made some specific provision about an automatic reapportionment under the census; but they trusted us; the people of this country trust us, and if we have been negligent, gentlemen, in the performance of that duty for eight years let us candidly confess that omission of duty. Let us to go the people and say, "We have tried every two years to pass a reapportionment bill, but because of some character of opposition, because of some exigency of legislation, because of the real convictions of the Representatives themselves that the bills were not providently or wisely framed, for all these various reasons, although we have recognized either the direct or the imputed mandate of the Constitution, we have failed to perform that duty."

And when this matter comes up after the census, and not before, as contemplated by the Constitution, then let us resolve whatever may be the result, to take some action upon this proposal.

For these reasons, gentlemen, and many others which might be urged if I had time to do so, and which will be presented by others opposing the resolution, I am opposed to the adoption of the rule and shall vote against the pending bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am not interested in the rule, but I take it for granted that you are going to adopt the rule and debate the question again. I am not interested in the mechanics of this bill. In fact, I have not had time to read the bill. I do not know what transpired in the Census Committee or the Rules Committee which has deemed it expedient or wise to call up a bill that was up for consideration last May.

However, you are going to consider it. I am opposed to the bill, on fundamental principles. As I told you last May when I spoke on the bill, I am not opposing the bill because I am afraid that it is going to reduce the representation of certain States, including my own.

In the short session of the Sixty-sixth Congress I supported and voted for the bill to fix the membership at 425, and under that bill Iowa would have lost one Member.

I stated last May that when the time comes in the next Congress to reapportion the membership of the House I should oppose a bill to increase the Members above the present representation—and that regardless of how it might affect my own State. [Applause.] I think the House is large enough now, and I think the country would disapprove any action of Congress fixing the size of this House above the present membership.

This bill is nothing more or less than a proposition to enact a law requiring somebody else to do in January, 1931, what will be the plain duty of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States to do then. [Applause.]

You can not defend this proposition on any grounds except, first, that you are in favor of increasing bureaucracy—that is, let the Secretary of Commerce or somebody else do that which is the constitutional duty of Congress to do.

The second ground on which you can defend the bill is that you have lost faith in the intelligence, the patriotism, and the courage of Members of Congress [applause], to perform their constitutional duty when confronted with it. In order to get the proper perspective of this controversy that has been before Congress more or less intensely since 1921, let us look into the history of this legislation.

A bill during the short session of the Sixty-sixth Congress—January, 1921—passed this House fixing the membership at 435. That bill failed in the Senate. The House performed its full duty in that Congress. If there is any blame it is on the Senate. In the Sixty-seventh Congress when we had an overwhelming Republican majority there was a proposal to put through legislation to empower the governors, together with other State officers who were Republican, in a few States normally Democratic, to redistrict the States in case the legislatures, which were then Democratic, would not perform that duty, and the States being normally Democratic—it was feared that a failure to redistrict would result in electing all Congressmen at large and consequently a solid Democratic delegation from at least one of such States and possibly more. I know that controversy had a great deal to do with defeating the legislation in the Sixty-seventh Congress.

About that time no less a person than the then Secretary of Commerce, the now President elect, in some report—I do not know whether it emanated directly from him—I know it came from his office—made the statement that the census of 1920 was unfair to the rural population of the country. I am not going into the details of that report. That had a tendency to put a damper on this legislation. There was talk that a new census should be taken in 1925. Nothing was done along that line. At any rate, since that time this matter has drifted along until we have the present situation where gentlemen are fearful that Congress will not do its plain constitutional duty in the Seventy-first Congress, because their States are bound to lose in representation on the present basis of 435.

I am not claiming any virtues for myself that I am not willing to accord to my colleagues. I know in other States similar to my own the Members are ready when the time comes to vote for a reapportionment bill on a fair census which will be before us in January, 1931, which will not increase the membership above 435, but who will not vote for this bill to abase Congress in the estimation of the people. Let us face our duties like men when the time comes and not, as this bill proposes, "pass the buck" to somebody else. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of unjust criticism, inspired by certain Members of the House and the Senate, and directed at those of us who have opposed the bringing out and the passage of this bill.

I announced on this floor in 1921 that I was opposed to the reapportionment of the House of Representatives under the census of 1920. I gave as my reasons that that was not a just census. It was taken at a time when our population was very much disturbed, when America was just emerging from the World War, and when a great many of our soldiers were away from home, in the fields, and in camps. It was taken also at a time when great masses of our people were crowded into the industrial centers, working in the various enterprises that had grown up or expanded as a result of the Great War. It was taken in the wintertime, for the first time in the history of this country, in the dead of winter, when the Northern States were invariably wrapped in a sheet of snow, and during the rainy season in the South, when it was practically impossible to go out into the rural sections and get a just census of the farming population. It was taken while everything was at the peak of the high prices. Men in the fields, in every agricultural State of the Union, found it impossible to secure people to go out in the rural sections and take the census for the small amount of money then allowed for such work.

That census has never been approved by the Congress. Why do these men who criticize us, why do they not bring that census before the Congress and get it approved? They know they could not do it.

They say there is a constitutional mandate to take the census every 10 years. That is true, but it is not mandatory that we reapportion the House after the taking of each census.

We did a great many unusual things during the war. We drafted our young men and sent them to foreign fields; we took over our public utilities; we put on wheatless days and meatless meals and lightless nights; limited the amount of sugar a man could put into his coffee; and changed the time of day, as a result of the World War; and all this without any great hue and cry; but when it comes to failing to reapportion the House on an unjust and incomplete census taken under those disturbed conditions we are criticized by Members who think that they will gain some political or personal advantage by having us reapportion under that census.

I have said from the beginning, and I say it to-day—I have said it every time this measure has been before the House—that we are attempting to get a just, full, and complete census taken in 1930; and when we do I am in favor, and those on my side of the House are in favor, of reapportioning the Congress under that census regardless of the consequences.

In 1921 we brought in a bill, after we had toiled and worked and tried to iron out our differences, that would have changed the membership of the House from 435 to 460. Personally, I was not in favor of increasing the number in the House, and I am not now. But I supported that measure in order to get the proposition disposed of. After debating it all day it was recommitted to the committee by a majority of four votes. I was one of the men who voted against recommitting it, but the very gentlemen who have criticized us from that day to this voted to recommit and thereby killed the bill.

This bill does not reapportion at all. It is the most ignominious capitulation I have ever seen the House attempt to make, surrendering our prerogative of reapportioning the membership of the House and abdicating it to some clerk down in the Census Bureau. That is what you are doing. Not only that, but you are manifesting a most flagrant lack of confidence in the Hoover administration before it is even sworn into office. You are attempting to pass a bill to reapportion the House elected in 1932. This is not a reapportionment bill. It is an abdication bill. It is a bill to delegate the right to reapportion to the Secretary of Commerce or to the clerks down in the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the gentleman know who that Secretary of Commerce might be who will act under this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. We are designating it not only to an executive officer but to an executive officer that is now unknown.

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly; and those clerks down there in the department have already tried the case in advance. If I had no other reason for opposing this bill, this forecast of the population of 1930 which they have made would be sufficient to convince me of the inadvisability of it. To show you that they have tried this case in advance, they have made one of their guesses, and one of the things the country is suffering from to-day is bureaucratic guesses. The Census Bureau now undertakes to guess what the population will be in 1930, and I made them admit—and it is in the hearings—that they took it for granted that the same disturbed conditions that apparently shifted the population between 1910 and 1920 would continue until 1930. They think that this disturbed condition, this drift, will continue in that direction until 1930. They do not seem to know that the war is over.

The gentleman from Michigan attempts to leave the impression that we have eliminated the evils of this bill. They have just denatured it in the mildest way. All of the evils of the bill are still there. If they have done anything, they have made it worse. I want you to read the bill. Gentlemen, do not go home and tell your constituents that you voted for this monstrosity and did not know what was in it. The gentleman from Michigan freely admits by his argument that he does not know what is in it, because the changes he indicated were not made at all, I submit, with all due deference to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], of whom I am very fond.

Suppose you pass this bill. I want to show you where you forever shut the door in your faces. Suppose that in 1932 the conditions are such that by a small change, either a reduction or an increase or even leaving the House at its present membership, you should attempt to pass a reapportionment bill. All they would have to do at the other end of the Capitol would be to pigeonhole it and you would have no voice whatever in the reapportionment of the House. The President could veto it, or the Senate could pigeonhole it or defeat it, and the House would be absolutely powerless to recover their prerogative of reapportioning the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will yield, further than that might not the situation be even this: That the House committee might recommend a bill, put it on the calendar, and the Rules Committee by a majority of only one might prevent its consideration on the floor of the House?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly.

Mr. BURTNESS. Are not they yielding the entire power of the House to one man in certain cases?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Can you not say that of any piece of legislation?

Mr. RANKIN. And the gentleman from Washington remembers that Mr. Campbell, of Kansas, chairman of the Rules Committee, carried a rule in his pocket and would not even let it be taken up in the House, thereby killing the bill.

If a majority of the Senate should decide that we did not know what we were doing, they could kill the bill and we would have nothing to do with the reapportioning of the House, but some clerk in the Census Bureau would do it instead. This bill does not propose a reapportionment under the census of 1930.

It is just a legislative manifestation of the lack of confidence in the Hoover administration, and by your vote you will so declare if you support it.

We are demanding that a just, full, and complete census be taken in 1930. We are going to see that it is taken. We are going to do that in order that the agricultural States, composed as a rule of old-line Americans, those men and women whose forebears wrote the Constitution, whose fathers fought the War of the Revolution and the War of 1812, whose fathers and grandfathers fought both sides of the War between the States—we want to see that those old-line Americans are accounted for; that their States shall not be torn asunder; that their representation shall not be reduced by a census that is not full and complete and that does not account for the entire population.

Let me repeat that when the census is properly taken in 1930 we are in favor of reapportioning the House according to that census. But, in the name of common sense, let us retain the few prerogatives we have left, let us show the American people that we have the courage to do the best we can under these unusual conditions, and that we do not propose to surrender the prerogative which they, by their votes, have placed in our hands to control the apportionment of the House of Representatives as handed down to us by the framers of the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and also the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] made the statement that the proposed bill is not an apportionment bill. I think that is true, speaking generally. It is not a bill undertaking any particular apportionment, even the apportionment following the census of 1930. If the bill is enacted into law we shall have a general statute on the Federal statute books that will make certain an apportionment of the Representatives in the House of Representatives following each decennial census. It in no way abridges the right or the power of Congress, following the announcement of the result of a census as provided by law, from passing any kind of an apportionment bill which the Congress thinks proper. It does provide, however, that if such apportionment is not made by Congress, the second succeeding Congress following the one which convenes on the first Monday of December after the census figures are announced and certified to the House shall be elected on a reapportionment made in the manner provided in the bill; that is, a House of 435 Members, the number of Members from each State being determined by the actual enumeration as certified by the Census Bureau.

I think we all agree that the Constitution contemplates the reapportionment of the House of Representatives in this Chamber following each decennial census. The fact that there was a compromise made by the fathers in writing the Constitution, wherein each of the States, the small as well as the large, was to have equal representation in another body, made it manifestly right and fair that in this, the popular branch of the Government, representation should be based upon the actual population of the various States. It is a matter of supreme importance to the membership of this House and to the people of the country in choosing their Representatives that there should be an equitable and fair apportionment of these Representatives according to population. But the matter goes much farther than that; it goes into the Electoral College; and when any State, under an existing apportionment, is entitled to more votes in the Electoral College if an apportionment were made in conformity with the Constitution, an injustice is being done that State by a failure to make such reapportionment.

Now, what objection can be made to having a general law on the statute books of this country that will guarantee to the people of the country and to the various States of the Union an apportionment each 10 years in case Congress for any reason fails or neglects to make an apportionment as provided by law and the Constitution? If this bill were enacted into law it would apply to the census of 1940 and to the census of 1950 and any succeeding census unless the law was repealed or the Congress, following the taking of such census, performed its constitutional duty and made an apportionment.

I think we all recognize the fact that the sentiment of the American people is overwhelmingly against the proposition that would increase the membership of this House above the 435 that it now has. I have consistently supported the proposition to apportion the House under the census of 1920. I voted for the bill of 1921 and voted to amend that bill by reducing the membership from 483, as provided in the bill, to 435 Members. As stated by the gentleman from Michigan, the House voted on that occasion and passed the bill by a large majority. On the occasion of the next attempt to apportion, when the committee reported a bill for 460 Members, I voted to reduce the number to 435; but when the House failed to adopt that amendment I was one of those who voted against the recommittal of the bill, because I wanted to see a reapportionment.

I do not believe that this House is justly subject to the very severe criticism which it has received throughout the country, because within less than two months after the announcement of the census of 1920 it passed a reapportionment bill and sent it to the Senate. But we must all admit and recognize the situation that exists—that for one cause or another eight years have gone by without action, and we have had two presidential elections on the present apportionment, an apportionment manifestly unfair to many of the States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Was the gentleman dissatisfied with the vote of the Electoral College in the last two elections? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I am not dissatisfied, but I think each State should have a vote in the Electoral College according to its population.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course the majority would have been bigger if we had had a reapportionment. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I do not see how you could figure out a reapportionment in this House that would favor the Democratic Party. If the gentleman has such information, he can enlighten the House in the course of the debate.

I voted against a bill similar to this when this matter was before the House previously, because I insisted that we ought to apportion under the census of 1920, so that it would have been in time for the election of 1928. At this time we all know it is not practicable to undertake to apportion under the census of 1920. The enactment of this law simply assures to the country and guarantees to the people of the various States that if Congress for any reason fails to pass a reapportionment act after the census of 1930 the second succeeding Congress elected thereafter will be elected on an automatic ascertainment based on the figures as announced by the Secretary of Commerce. We invest the Secretary of Commerce with no discretion in this matter. The terms of the bill determine what his duties are. They are purely ministerial and can not in any way be declared to affect unfairly the people of any State in the Union.

As I said, I voted against the bill a year ago for the reason that I felt we ought not to apportion under the census of 1920, but that not being possible any longer I am quite strongly convinced that it is the duty of this Congress to enact this legislation and to make certain that in the future we will not have a situation such as we have witnessed in this country during the past eight years. That is all this bill does. It enacts a general law which assures an equitable and fair apportionment following each census. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, in concluding let me correct a statement which I possibly made, because if there is one thing I always want to do it is to state things to the House as they are. I did vote on October 14, 1921, to recommit a reapportionment bill, because that bill carried 460 Members. I, together with a majority of the Members of this House, favored keeping the number at 435, and we did send that bill back to the committee, with the understanding that the committee must bring back a bill containing 435. The matter to which I referred a few minutes ago was the roll call on January 19, 1921, before our good friend from Mississippi came to Congress. As previously stated, the House of Representatives did pass a reapportionment bill in 1921 fixing the number of Members at 435, and I voted for that bill, and that was the bill that failed in the Senate.

I have always favored reapportionment and I have always favored reapportionment at 435. I honestly and sincerely believe that it is the judgment, as has heretofore been expressed by a large majority of this House, that the number should not be increased, and I believe further that it is the desire and it is the will of the American people to-day that we should not add to our numbers.

I believe that there would be little opposition to reapportionment to-day if we would provide that no State in the Union should lose any representation which it now has. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that it makes no difference whether we have 300 or 3,000 Members in Congress, so far as the weight of any vote of any State is concerned, if we are operating under a constitutional apportionment.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] pictured the old framers of the Constitution looking down through the corridors of time, as he said, and blushing with shame to think of the powers we were surrendering. Ah, Mr. BANKHEAD, what would those old fathers think to-day—those men who were so imbued with the idea of representative government—of a Congress of the United States which would defy the very intent if not the mandate of the Constitution and prevent a reapportionment that gives the very representation which those men thought they were guaranteeing to posterity?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As the gentleman has asked me the question will he permit me to answer it?

Mr. MICHENER. Under the 1920 census there are to-day more than 13,000,000 people in this country denied the representation which those old fathers intended they should have, and if this matter goes along until 1930 and there is no reapportionment, more than 31,000,000 people will be denied the representation which those same old patriotic, farseeing fathers intended they should have.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not now. It has been further suggested here that we are taking away from the Seventy-first Congress a duty which the Constitution intended they should perform. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is so worded that there is no question but that the Seventy-first Congress has the opportunity of passing on the question of reapportionment. They may reapportion in such manner as they see fit, but if they do not reapportion and we find ourselves in the condition in which we have found ourselves for the last eight years, then, Mr. Speaker, there is not any question but that a representative Congress will represent the American people until further action is taken by Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman by his statement in effect admits that if it had not been for the absolutely arbitrary attitude assumed by himself and some other gentlemen who thought like him that we would have had a reapportionment bill in 1921 based upon a representation of 460 Members. Is not that true, and does it not follow that because of that absolutely arbitrary attitude—and I do not find anything sacrosanct in numbers—if it had not been the attitude that 435 was the absolute limit, we would long since have reapportioned the House and then we would have had the constitutional mandate carried into effect?

Mr. MICHENER. I think I stated a while ago that that was the crux of the trouble, call it arbitrary or anything you want. There are those people in the House who will reapportion to-day at any number, regardless of what anyone else wants, if they may save the present representation of their States.

It is hard for Members to vote for reapportionment which will result in some Members losing their seats in this body. It is possibly harder for some Members to vote for reapportionment when the particular seat which he occupies may be the one affected. To reapportion under the 1930 census and save the seats of sitting Members will require a House with a membership of not less than 540—more than 100 additional Members. If our population continues to increase, there must be a stop somewhere, and I think all are agreed that the House is already unwieldy, and the country is more interested in quality than quantity of its Representatives in the lower House.

The rule which we are now considering permits three hours general debate on the bill, with full opportunity to amend under the 5-minute rule, and surely there are none who will oppose even considering the question of reapportionment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remaining two minutes of time.

The SPEAKER. Under the agreement, the previous question is ordered. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided and controlled, one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11725, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object if the gentleman will agree for the bill to be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. FENN. I will agree to that and amend my request accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill in its amended form be inserted in the RECORD at this point. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Will this show the changes made in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in the way in which the Chair put the request.

Mr. RANKIN. My understanding was that it should go in with the amendments shown.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chair will put the request again. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point with amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

[Omit the part in black brackets and insert the part printed in italic]

A bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress

Be it enacted, etc., That [as soon as practicable after the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census,] on the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress and of each fifth Congress thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed, as ascertained under [such census] the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population, and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives made in the following manner: By apportioning one Representative to each State (as required by the Constitution) and by apportioning the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census, by the method known as the method of major fractions.

SEC. 2. (a) If the Congress to which the statement required by section 1 is transmitted, fails to enact a law apportioning the Representatives among the several States, then each State shall be entitled, in the second succeeding Congress and in each Congress thereafter until the taking effect of a reapportionment on the basis of the next decennial census, to the number of Representatives shown in the statement; and it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the last House of Representatives forthwith to send to the executive of each State a certificate of the number of Representatives to which such State is entitled under this section. In case of a vacancy in the office of Clerk, or of his absence or inability to discharge this duty, then such duty shall devolve upon the officer who, under section 32 or 33 of the Revised Statutes, is charged with the preparation of the roll of Representatives elect.

(b) This section shall have no force and effect in respect of the apportionment to be made under any decennial census unless the statement required by section 1 in respect of such census is transmitted to the Congress [on or before the first day of the first regular session which begins after the taking of such census has begun] at the time prescribed in section 1.

SEC. 3. In each State entitled under this act to more than one Representative, the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in the Seventy-third and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts equal in number to the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative. Each such district shall be composed of contiguous and compact territory and contain as nearly as practicable the same number of individuals.

SEC. 4. In the election of Representatives to the Seventy-third or any subsequent Congress in any State which under the apportionment provided for in section 2 of this act is given an increased number of Representatives, the additional Representative or Representatives apportioned to such State shall be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives to which the State is entitled shall be elected as theretofore, until such State is redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof, and in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

SEC. 5. In the election of Representatives to the Seventy-third or any subsequent Congress in any State which under the apportionment provided for in section 2 of this act is given a decreased number of Representatives, the whole number of Representatives to which such State is entitled shall be elected by the State at large until such State is redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof, and in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

[SEC. 6. Candidates for Representatives at large shall be nominated, unless the State concerned shall provide otherwise, in the same manner in which candidates for governor in that State are nominated.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two tables, one prepared by the Bureau of the Census and one by the Library.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD by including therein two tables, one prepared by the Bureau of the Census and one by the Congressional Library. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if it will be necessary to go into the consideration of the plans suggested in allocating the Members of the Congress, whether we use major fractions or equal proportion, because it appears to me that there are some insurmountable objections that will preclude us from ever reaching a consideration of either of those plans. I shall direct my remarks principally to two things, first, the relation to the delegation of powers that have from time to time been made by Congress to different executive branches, and doubtless all of the Members are familiar with the long line of decisions that have grown up in relation to the delegation of necessary powers incident to the proper functioning of some branch of the executive part of the Government, and one of the first contests in that respect was in relation to the power the Congress extended when it created the Interstate Commerce Commission, giving that organization control over investigation and later the promulgation of freight and passenger rates. Of course, it is apparent that the Congress would not have the time to enact thousands upon thousands of rates, and the same thought prevailed when the Congress enacted the last tariff measure, vesting certain discretion in the executive branch in relation to the exaction of duties upon imports. But I call attention to this distinction: Thus far the delegation of that power has been confined solely to questions affecting economics or commerce or trade, and the Congress never once delegated a purely political power. This afternoon we are dealing with a measure that proposes to delegate a political power, and when we stop to consider that this body is only called upon once during every five Congresses to devote its attention to the apportionment of the Congress, this act on our part then does not come within the phrase so frequently mentioned by the Supreme Court in interpreting the delegation of powers as being "necessary," and running all through that line of decisions you find the term "necessary" used, because the Congress should not be called upon to deal with minute details, and, therefore, the courts have sustained the delegation of these powers.

But what contention can be made upon the floor of this House that this Congress does not have the time to devote its attention to a determination of this question, seeks to remove a plain constitutional duty by referring it to the executive branch of the Government? The other matter I wish to deal with, and I believe it is one worthy of consideration; I would like to have you all consider section 1 of this bill which purports to set up a rule whereby apportionment shall be made by the executive branch of the Government. If you have the committee report, on page 2 you will there find the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and it will be noted that this bill proposes to take part of the constitutional duties in relation to this subject and vest those powers in the executive branch and makes no mention of the entire or whole constitutional duty in that respect, and I must say this will be of interest when we remember that under section 2 of this amendment a provision is made here in regard to the denial or abridgement of rights of any citizen to vote; and, if this bill passes, can we, the Congress, adopt half or some portion of the method provided here in the Constitution upon this subject and permit the executive branch of the Government to retain a portion, or must all of this measure stand or fall together? I insist that this bill only makes provision for a portion of the constitutional duties that are placed upon the Congress, and if an amendment were offered upon the floor of this House to include the rest of the necessary matter upon the subject, then what would be the situation? The Secretary of Commerce or some subordinate would then be empowered, according to this bill, with the right to have hearings as to whether the rights of a citizen in some certain State have been abridged or diminished or denied, and then application could be made not only by one or two States but six or eight or a dozen, possibly, and I believe we would find if this power was so delegated or attempted to be delegated, that there would be many demands from different portions of the country claiming that the rights of their citizens had been abridged and they desired to make a showing in support of their contention, and then it would be the plain duty of this administrative official to hear and determine a matter that would be thus submitted, and then where would the contention of our friends stand who say that there would be no discretion whatever vested in the administrative official? Because this official would be obliged to deny or affirm; and if that official would fail to act after an application was made, then a citizen acting for some State would have the right to call upon the third branch of our Government, the judicial branch, so that the courts would determine whether or not this was a ministerial act and therefore it was incumbent upon this official to comply with the plain mandate of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. STOBBS. The gentleman is assuming in his argument that the Secretary of Commerce would be called upon to exercise discretion in determining the fact of a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. Is that right?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. STOBBS. Is there any machinery set up now providing for a violation of the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. THURSTON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask for one additional minute.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. STOBBS. Is not this perfectly true, that if there was any machinery set up by Congress to provide for a violation of the fourteenth amendment and it had been determined that the rights of any citizens had been denied, then after the decision of the department by this machinery set up to provide for a violation of the fourteenth amendment, all the Secretary of Commerce will be called upon to do under this bill is to determine what citizens, excluding Indians, have had their rights denied by such machinery, and in respect to such determination the Secretary of Commerce under this bill will be performing a purely administrative duty?

Mr. THURSTON. The Secretary of Commerce would be obliged to exercise discretionary powers in complying with the provisions of the Constitution.

The bill under consideration provides that if the Seventy-first Congress and each fifth Congress that assembles thereafter fails to enact a reapportionment law this measure will stand as a perpetual delegation of not only the legislative power that is vested in the Congress under the Constitution but also would delegate the constitutional function of determining the membership of the House of Representatives by one of the coordinate branches of the Government; and even if there was warrant for avoiding this duty it is hardly conceivable that the legislative branch of the Government desires to make a further surrender of prerogatives that were plainly intended by the framers of the Constitution that it should exercise.

Following the preamble to the Constitution, section 1, Article I, provides that—

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress, which shall be composed of a Senate and House of Representatives, thus according first place in that great instrument to the legislative branch of the Government—

And section 2, Article I, of that instrument makes provision for the House of Representatives, thus according first place to the most numerous branch of the National Legislature, thereby indicating that the framers of the Constitution gave the highest regard to the function devolving upon this body, who bear the same name as the form of our Government, so that a Representative in the Congress of the United States holds one of the high offices in this Government, which is representative in form.

Because of the great industrial, agricultural, and financial expansion in our country, it was manifestly apparent that the Congress could not legislate as to every detail that trade, commerce, or industry might require, and that it was necessary for the Congress to pass laws delegating ministerial duties to the executive branch of the Government, so when the interstate commerce act was passed, whereby the Government was to exercise control over the railroads, and in so far as possible require that fair and equitable freight and passenger rates should be made, thus entailing the investigation and promulgation of thousands upon thousands of rates and regulations therefor, the necessity for a broad construction of delegated power became apparent, and economic necessity warranted this broad construction.

Substantially the same situation but in a lesser degree arose when the last tariff act was passed in relation to the flexible provision in that act which authorized the President to change the rate of duty upon imports. And there is a long line of decisions sustaining the right of the Congress in this respect, but all of the decisions coming within the rule mentioned place stress upon the necessary delegation of ministerial functions, because of the manifold and multiplicity of acts that would arise under the rate structure or tariff schedules that administrative officials would be obliged to encounter; however, all of the decisions mentioned delegating power deal with economic, commercial, or trade activities, whereas the delegation proposed in the instant bill is wholly of a political character, and I would urge any Member to submit authority to the House which will point out the justification for the delegation or surrender of a political power that is vested in the Congress.

I submit that the distinction between the delegation of nonpolitical and political power is one that should challenge the sober thought of students of our form of government, which is representative in form, as well as the membership of the Congress of the United States.

Furthermore, when construing the Constitution, we are always admonished to consider the intent the framers had when drafting this great instrument, and when they placed the duty upon each fifth Congress to make an apportionment of the membership of the House of Representatives, it is inconceivable to believe that they felt that this act to be discharged by the Congress but once every 10 years would become so onerous and burdensome that this simple duty should not be exercised after the decennial enumeration of the population had been determined, so the delegation of this duty can hardly come within the necessary class that is so frequently mentioned in the line of cases justifying a delegation of legislative power.

A fair construction of the Constitution upon this subject warrants the assertion that powers, and particularly political powers, which the Congress can readily and expeditiously exercise, does not warrant a delegation of such powers to another branch of the Government.

If a measure of this character is passed, and after the results of the next decennial census are available, and the Congress desires to amend or change the formula set out in the bill, or make any other change, and a measure providing for the change would pass the Congress by a majority, and would not meet with the approval of the Executive, a two-thirds majority of each branch of the Congress would be required to effect the change desired, so by passing an anticipatory measure of this character the Congress would be surrendering that portion of its strength that lies between a majority and a two-thirds majority. But even so the rule sought to be established in this bill in the respect mentioned is not so important as the situation that might arise and be referred to the third coordinate branch of the Government.

The first section of the bill under consideration apparently intends to fix the rule by which the reapportionment shall be made and also provides a certain formula therefor, but it will be noted that in attempting to state the constitutional rule that will prevail in making the reapportionment, no reference is made to the second paragraph of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and for purpose of reference I will read all of section 2 of said amendment:

> Amendment 14, section 2:
>
> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the whole number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

A careful reading of this section at once brings out the thought that a discretion is vested in the branch of Government that would deny or affirm the right to reduce the membership in the Congress from a State, on account of a noncompliance with the provisions of the major portion of the section just read, and I invite the Members to compare this bill with the fourteenth amendment, which is set out on page 2 of committee hearings, and is in convenient form to consult here.

Manifestly, it is apparent that the bill fails to include the delegation of an important function to be discharged by the Secretary of Commerce.

After the taking of the census, and a determination of the population has been made, and before the certification by the Secretary of Commerce to the Congress, an action of mandamus was commenced by a citizen against the Secretary of Commerce, to require such official to reduce the membership in the Congress from a certain State, the court would first be obliged to determine if the official mentioned was exercising ministerial powers, and if he was so acting, then his acts would have to be based upon the provisions of the second section of the fourteenth amendment, so a chain of incidents might follow that no one here could anticipate or measure.

For instance, on the other hand, if it should be found that such action upon the part of the Secretary of Commerce would involve discretionary action, then the end sought by this legislation would prove to be a nullity, even though present expediency might be satisfied.

Again, we might consider another aspect of this measure in relation to whether or not a discretion is vested in the Secretary of Commerce. For instance, if the official mentioned allocated the membership of the Congress among the respective States, and subsequently an error in such competition should be disclosed or claimed, or if such official knowingly or otherwise acted in violation of the formula prescribed, what recourse would be available to a State that claimed it had not received the number of Representatives to which it was entitled?

Irrespective of an injustice in the allocation of such membership by design or otherwise, would a State be obliged to accept its representation in the Congress on the basis indicated by the executive branch of the Government? Or would a citizen of that State be entitled to maintain an action of mandamus to correct the act of the administrative official, and if such an action would lie, then in the final analysis, the judicial branch of the Government would be assisting or determining matters in relation to the membership of the legislative branch of the Government.

Such a judicial determination might be more far-reaching in its political effect than an adjudication correcting the application of some rule in relation to freight rates or tariff schedules.

So the question involved here, largely, is whether the Congress either morally or legally has the right to relieve itself of a plain, unquestioned, constitutional duty.

A distinguished Member of this body recently wrote a constitutional treatise entitled "The Vanquishing Rights of the States," so it might not be out of place here and now to refer to the constant surrender of legislative powers by the Congress.

The constant trend of legislation in the Congress is to divest legislative control and vest increasing powers in the executive branch of the Government, and measures like the one under consideration will tend to confirm the opinion of those who feel that a legislative body is an unnecessary adjunct of government, and that, after all, a monarchy serves the people best.

A history of England portrays "a thousand years of strife to win rights for the people from the Crown or the autocracy," and in a sense we inherited that contest; and when our Constitution was adopted we thought we had won a permanent victory; and so we had; but the diminishing powers of the legislative branch of our Government might well challenge the attention of those in favor of maintaining our representative form of government.

It might be well to recall that after a complete draft of the Constitution had been presented to the convention, the presiding officer of that body, General Washington, who had listened to all of the debates leading up to the completion, made only one suggestion or request to the body of men composing the convention, and that was "to change the basis of representation from 1 Representative to each 40,000 persons to 1 Representative for each 30,000 persons," thereby expressing his judgment as to a limitation upon the numbers which a Representative would represent in the House; and the change suggested was made.

Alexander Hamilton, one of the great expounders of and contenders for a strong central government, likewise insisted that the Representatives should be greater in number than proposed in the original draft of the Constitution.

So I am leading up to the question as to the number of Representatives that is proposed in the measure under consideration; and if this measure becomes a law, it might take a two-thirds vote in each branch of the Congress to increase or diminish the membership in the House; and with the contentions made by those who are opposed to a House composed of 435 Members or a greater number, it might be well to submit a statement prepared by the legislative service of the Library of Congress giving the membership in the higher and lower branches of the national legislatures in Great Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, and the United States; and this table also shows the population, area, and estimated wealth of each of the nations mentioned.

A Member in the United States Congress represents two to six times as many persons, fifteen to twenty times as much territory, and three to twenty times the wealth as a member in the lower house of the other nations mentioned above:

Membership of parliament in certain foreign countries, in relation to population, area, and estimated wealth, compared with the same figures for the United States

Country	Membership of—		Population	Area (square miles)	Estimated national wealth [1]		Ratio represented by each member of lower house in relation to total
	Higher house	Lower house			Year	Amount	Population	Area	National wealth
Great Britain and Northern Ireland	[2] 730	[3] 815	[4] 42,919,710	89,041	1922	$120,000,000,000	69,788	145	$195,121,951
Canada	[5] 96	[6] 245	[7] 9,364,200	[8] 3,729,665	1921	22,195,000,000	38,221	15,214	90,519,837
France	[9] 314	[10] 580	[11] 39,209,518	212,659	1925	60,000,000,000	67,603	367	103,448,276
Germany	[12] 68	[13] 493	[14] 62,539,098	182,257	1924	[15] 40,000,000,000	126,854	368	81,135,903
Italy	[16] 387	[17] 560	[18] 42,115,606	119,624	1922	35,000,000,000	75,206	214	62,500,000
Japan	[19] 409	[20] 464	[21] 61,081,954	[22] 260,707	1922	22,500,000,000	131,642	562	48,491,379
United States	96	435	[23] 117,136,000	[24] 3,627,557	1922	320,804,000,000	269,278	8,339	737,480,460

[1] None of the data relative to national wealth is official. These estimates are mostly by bankers or statisticians. (World Almanac, 1927, p. 297.)
[2] Average membership. This is the voting strength. The full house would consist of about 740 members.
[3] Including 13 members from Northern Ireland. Number reduced to that figure in 1922. From 1885 to 1917 membership was 670. From 1918 to 1921, under the "Representation of the people act, 1918," membership was 707.
[4] On June 19, 1921.
[5] Total number may not exceed 104.
[6] Fifteenth Parliament, elected on Oct. 29, 1925, under the "Representation act, 1924." (Canadian Parliamentary Guide, 1926, p. 113.)
[7] Estimated population in 1925.
[8] The area of the Dominion, as revised on the basis of the results of recent explorations in the north, is 3,797,123 square miles. (Canada Year Book, 1925, pp. 1, 813.)
[9] Elected Jan. 11, 1924.
[10] Elected May 11, 1924.
[11] Census of 1921.
[12] In 1926.
[13] Elected Dec. 7, 1924.
[14] On June 16, 1925.
[15] According to figures published by Doctor Luther, German Finance Minister. (World Almanac, 1927, p. 297.)
[16] On Jan. 1, 1924. The number of senators is unlimited. Senators are appointed by the King for life.
[17] Elected in April, 1924. Prior to electoral law of Feb. 15, 1925, deputies numbered 535.
[18] Estimated on Jan. 1, 1926. Census of Dec. 1, 1921, returned 38,755,576 inhabitants.
[19] On Dec. 31, 1925. Members of the imperial family are ex officio members of the House of Peers (senate). A large percentage of the membership of the House of Peers consists of members appointed by the Emperor. (Résumé statistique de l'Empire du Japon, 1926, p. 145.)
[20] Elected May 31, 1925; number unchanged from 1924. (Résumé statistique de l'Empire du Japon, 1926, p. 145.)
[21] Estimated Dec. 31, 1924. The census of population of the mainland on Oct. 10, 1925, gave 59,936,000 inhabitants. (Résumé, 1926, p. 5.)
[22] Including Chosen (Korea), Formosa, Pescadores, and Japanese Sakhalin.
[23] Estimated by Census Bureau, July 1, 1926.
[24] Gross area (land and water), Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1925, p. 3.

Sources: Unless otherwise stated, Statesman's Year Book, 1926, and World Almanac, 1927.

As the representation in the Congress is based upon the population rather than citizenship, it might be interesting to submit a statement prepared by the Bureau of the Census showing a table giving the population of each State as returned by the enumeration in 1920 and also the estimated population of each State in the year of 1930, together with an enumeration of the aliens in each State in the Union as of January 1, 1920. So that the failure to reapportion in the year 1920 has not denied citizens the representation claimed, even though the representation for persons was not changed.

I will not make extended reference to the table of population just mentioned, but upon examining the same you will find that the Federal census for 1920 disclosed a population of 105,710,620 in the United States, of which number 7,427,604 were aliens, or one-fifteenth part of the total were not citizens of the United States:

Population of the United States, by States, 1930, 1925, and 1920, with number of aliens in 1920

	Estimated population Jan. 1, 1930 [1]	State census 1925	Federal census Jan. 1, 1920
			Total population	Aliens
United States	122,537,000		105,710,620	7,427,604
Alabama	2,612,000		2,348,174	8,968
Arizona	499,000		334,162	68,606
Arkansas	1,978,000		1,752,204	6,296
California	4,755,000		3,426,861	453,397
Colorado	1,116,000		939,629	54,400
Connecticut	1,717,000		1,380,631	233,634
Delaware	248,000		223,003	11,496
District of Columbia	572,000		437,571	13,739
Florida	1,489,000	1,263,549	968,470	35,899
Georgia	3,258,000		2,895,832	7,652
Idaho	567,000		431,866	15,765
Illinois	7,555,000		6,485,280	543,528
Indiana	3,220,000		2,930,390	84,977
Iowa	2,433,000	2,419,927	2,404,021	69,401
Kansas	1,847,000	1,812,986	1,769,257	48,509
Kentucky	2,577,000		2,416,630	11,934
Louisiana	1,977,000		1,798,509	30,507
Maine	800,000		768,014	65,046
Maryland	1,645,000		1,449,661	51,163
Massachusetts	4,367,000	4,144,205	3,852,356	629,227
Michigan	4,754,000		3,668,412	383,583
Minnesota	2,781,000		2,387,125	158,374
Mississippi	[3] 1,790,618		1,790,618	4,548
Missouri	3,544,000		3,404,055	78,772
Montana	[3] 548,889		548,889	35,410
Nebraska	1,428,000		1,296,372	58,422
Nevada	[3] 77,407		77,407	9,557
New Hampshire	458,000		443,083	53,250
New Jersey	3,939,000		3,155,900	421,551
New Mexico	402,000		360,350	23,456
New York	11,755,000	11,162,151	10,385,227	1,609,190
North Carolina	3,005,000		2,559,123	3,819
North Dakota	[4] 641,192	641,192	646,872	35,183
Ohio	7,013,000		5,759,394	372,925
Oklahoma	2,496,000		2,028,283	20,287
Oregon	923,000		783,389	49,918
Pennsylvania	10,053,000		8,720,017	795,330
Rhode Island	736,000	679,260	604,397	92,913
South Carolina	1,896,000		1,683,724	3,339
South Dakota	716,000	681,260	636,547	25,544
Tennessee	2,531,000		2,337,885	7,547
Texas	5,633,000		4,663,228	286,297
Utah	545,000		449,396	24,599
Vermont	[3] 352,428		352,428	23,472
Virginia	2,622,000		2,309,187	16,524
Washington	1,628,000		1,356,621	124,866
West Virginia	1,770,000		1,463,701	46,983
Wisconsin	3,009,000		2,632,067	203,888
Wyoming	257,000		194,402	13,913

[1] Revised February, 1928, on 1920–1927 data.
[2] Includes all foreign born, except those reported as naturalized.
[3] Population Jan. 1, 1920; no estimate made.
[4] Population State census 1925; no estimate made.

Population of the 20 largest cities in the United States, 1930, 1925, and 1920, with number of aliens in 1920

	Estimated population Jan. 1, 1930	State census 1925	Federal census Jan. 1, 1920
			Total population	Aliens [1]
New York, N. Y.	6,087,700	5,873,356	5,620,048	1,218,074
Chicago, Ill.	3,234,700		2,701,705	382,741
Philadelphia, Pa.	2,106,700		1,823,779	210,538
Detroit, Mich.	1,445,500	[2] 1,242,044	993,678	185,969
Cleveland, Ohio	1,046,300		796,841	138,368
St. Louis, Mo.	861,300		772,897	45,018
Boston, Mass.	808,200	779,620	748,060	135,627
Baltimore, Md.	847,400		733,826	42,282
Pittsburgh, Pa.	680,900		588,343	58,268
Los Angeles, Calif.	[3]		576,673	72,024

[1] Includes all foreign born, except those reported as naturalized.
[2] Special census taken under Federal supervision as of May 31, 1925.
[3] Estimate not used; result unsatisfactory.

Population of the 20 largest cities in the United States, 1930, 1925, and 1920, with number of aliens in 1920—Continued

	Estimated population Jan. 1, 1930	State census 1925	Federal census Jan. 1, 1920
			Total population	Aliens
Buffalo, N. Y.	564,500	538,016	506,775	58,520
San Francisco, Calif.	599,100		506,676	79,024
Milwaukee, Wis.	555,100		457,147	55,134
Washington, D. C.	572,000		437,571	13,739
Newark, N. J.	483,900		414,524	69,108
Cincinnati, Ohio	[3]		401,247	14,598
New Orleans, La.	436,800		387,219	17,132
Minneapolis, Minn.	468,100		380,582	34,099
Kansas City, Mo.	402,700		324,410	12,969
Seattle, Wash.	395,100		315,312	43,231

[3] Estimate not used; result unsatisfactory.

As the citizens of all of the nations mentioned, excepting the United States, are of the same homogeneous origin with no ethnic differences, whereas our population is composed of practically all of the different races of the world, thereby greatly multiplying our problems and manifestly demanding greater diversity in ideas and knowledge of government, even on these grounds it is apparent that the work of a Member of the United States Congress is much broader and calls for more consideration and legislative knowledge than would be required by a member of a like body in any of the nations mentioned.

It might also be asserted that the scope of legislation considered by the Congress of the United States covers a much larger field than that considered by any of the major legislative bodies of the world, so in view of the foregoing the soundness of a limitation of the membership of the House, as is proposed in this bill, which if enacted might become permanent in effect and therefore may be seriously questioned.

In average wealth represented, in average number of constituents, and in area, the table above set forth clearly proves the case of those opposed to a material reduction in the membership in the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

I regret that lack of time will not permit a discussion of the mathematical methods that have been suggested in relation to the apportionment, but other Members will discuss this feature of the bill.

In conclusion, I trust that our action to-day will not set in motion a train of events that will subsequently require the aid or assistance of either of the other coordinate branches of this Government to discharge a duty that is so clearly a legislative one, and I am appealing to the membership of this House to retain the powers that were so plainly assigned to it by the Federal Constitution.

Mr. FENN. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. It has been argued against this bill that the task contemplated will be put into the hands of somebody in another branch of the Government. That is simply a ministerial duty, and is no more a delegation of power than would be intrusting the adding up of a column of figures to a clerk in the auditing department or of turning over to any other official any other of the mechanical operations of the Government.

It has been argued that a Congress may not bind its successor. That is perfectly true. But if the application of that principle should be carried to extreme, yet logical conclusion, it would be necessary for the first session of the next Congress to reenact the whole code of statute law on the ground that our authority does not extend beyond the period of our life here as a Congress.

It is also objected that this is not, of itself, an apportionment bill. Granting that such a quibble over words should have any attention, nevertheless, the fact is that this bill is a preliminary step, and is part of the performance of a duty we have long neglected.

These three things are pretexts, not reasons. Let no man here salve his conscience with a pretext.

Let him rather ask himself what, in this matter, may be the duty of a Member of Congress sworn to support the Constitution. To understand that, I ask you to turn with me the pages of history for a few minutes.

In September of 1774 the newly assembled Continental Congress, faced with the question of how votes should be taken, decided that each Colony or Province should have one vote. Benjamin Franklin, in the course of the Federal Convention, called attention to what his learned colleague, Mr. Wilson, had said, and indorsed it, to the effect that this method of voting was submitted to originally under a conviction of its impropriety, its inequality, and its injustice.

For 15 years the country lived under that rule, and that rule was one of the causes of the Federal Convention of 1787, the convention that framed the Constitution. Under that rule it is asserted by Alexander Hamilton in the Federalist, by reason of the absence from the floor of delegates from some of the States, several times a sixtieth part of the Union, about the proportion of Delaware and Rhode Island, was able to impose an entire bar to the operations of the Congress. That the minority would and did thus dominate the majority at times was one of the reasons leading thoughtful, patriotic men to take steps for devising a new Constitution.

At the opening of the Federal Convention Gov. Edmund Randolph, of Virginia, presented a plan in the shape of a series of resolutions. One read:

Resolved, therefore, That the rights of suffrage in the National Legislature ought to be proportioned to the quotas of contribution, or to the number of free inhabitants, as the one or the other rule may seem best in different cases.

This became at once a matter of paramount importance, for Mr. Reed, of Delaware, rose and told the convention that the delegates from his State were restrained by their commission from assenting to any change of the rule of suffrage, and in case a change should be fixed upon it might become their duty to retire from the convention. So right at the outset the threat of disrupting that body, perhaps preventing any useful result from its labors, voiced by the gentleman from Delaware, spread itself over the convention like a pall.

The vital dispute began on the 11th of June. Mr. Sherman proposed that suffrage in the first branch should be allotted according to the number of its free inhabitants and that in the second branch each State should have but one vote and no more. Here is the first hint of what afterwards became the great compromise of the convention. That compromise was the rock upon which our Constitution was founded. Without it the Constitution would never have existed. To the adjustment between the large and the small States we owe our existence as a Nation.

The debate proceeded for days. All the strong men in the convention took part. The first result was a vote in committee of the whole that the rights of suffrage should not be according to the rules established in the Articles of Confederation, but in proportion to the whole number of inhabitants. This but incited the small States to further resistance. They demanded that their rights as in the Congress of the Confederation, each State to have one vote, should be preserved. The end of the month approached. Darker and darker became the situation. It was so ominous that Benjamin Franklin, despairing of bringing his colleagues to an agreement, arose and in the most solemn terms said:

In the situation of this assembly, groping, as it were, in the dark to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has it happened, sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of Lights to illuminate our understandings? In the beginning of our contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayer in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered.

He saw the necessity of again turning to divine guidance and moved that thereafter each session should be opened with prayer. For various reasons no vote was taken on his proposal, one of them being the fear that the news of such a resolution at that late day might lead the public to believe that the embarrassments and discussions within the convention had suggested the measure.

It was thought that by referring the matter of representation to a committee perhaps a compromise agreement could be secured. So the convention adjourned over the 4th of July.

In that committee Franklin made the motion which led to agreement. It proposed equality of the States in the upper branch, representation in the lower branch according to numbers, and for the lower branch exclusive power to originate money bills. The committee adopted the proposal, and so reported.

Observe in passing that the new element was the promise that money bills should originate in the lower branch. Mr. Madison could not regard the privilege as any concession on the side of the small States. It has turned out to be as he thought. We now find it of very little importance.

The next day came up the question of one vote for each State in the second branch. Mr. Gerry said:

This is the critical question.

They all knew, every man knew, that the fate of the country depended upon this question. Gerry went on to say that he would rather agree to the proposal than have no accommodation. The spirit of compromise and concession was beginning to show itself.

With parity of States in the Senate agreed upon, there came the question of apportionment of Members of the lower branch, and with it proposal by a committee that in the case of new States or division of old States, Congress should have authority to—regulate the number of Representatives * * * upon the principles of their wealth and number of inhabitants.

This brought Randolph to the front again. He was apprehensive that, as the number was not to be changed till the National Legislature should please, a pretext would never be wanting to postpone alterations and keep the power in the hands of those possessed of it. Farsighted Randolph! The next day he announced it was in his contemplation—note the precise words as they appear in Madison's notes—to make it the duty, instead of leaving it to the discretion, of the legislature; to regulate the representation by a periodical census.

Here you have at the very fountainhead the source of what I conceive it to be our duty to-day.

Before adjournment Randolph moved as an amendment what presently was shaped into the article under which it is here proposed to act. Instantly it brought to his feet a typical aristocrat of his time, Gouverneur Morris, who opposed the proposal as fettering the legislature too much. His argument should interest gentlemen from beyond the Alleghenies, for—he dwelt much on the danger of throwing such a preponderance into the western scale, suggesting that in time the western people would outnumber the Atlantic States.

Mason argued the other way:

If the Western States are to be admitted into the Union as they arise, they must, he would repeat, be treated as equals, and subjected to no degrading discriminations.

Morris, representing the Wall Street of his time, and speaking with a frankness that might not have been expected were not the session held behind closed doors, renewed his argument, saying:

The remarks of Mr. Mason relative to the western country had not changed his opinion on that head. Among other objections, it must be apparent they would not be able to furnish men equally enlightened to share in the administration of our common interests. The busy haunts of men, not the remote wilderness, was the proper school of political talents. If the western people get the power into their hands they will ruin the Atlantic interests. The back Members are always most averse to the best measures.

Randolph prevailed; and so, in defense of the West as well as in behalf of the country as a whole, decision was reached that the census should be taken every 10 years, with the clear intention that apportionment should immediately follow.

There are gentlemen here who consider, however, that this was not the intent, that the provision was merely permissive, not mandatory. See if more proof can be supplied.

After the convention there arose widespread discussion. The arguments for the Constitution, set forth with wonderful ability by Madison, Hamilton, and Jay, appear in what is now known as the Federalist, the greatest book on political science that was ever printed. Here appear the promises made to the people of the United States, the pledges that the agreements of the convention should be carried out. Lest memory might deceive me, let me read to you the very words of the assurance given by statesmen of that convention to all the States, both large and small. They appear in No. 58, believed to have been written by either Hamilton or Madison:

Within every successive term of 10 years a census of inhabitants is to be repeated. The unequivocal objects of these regulations—

Mark you that—the unequivocal objects of these regulations are, first, to readjust, from time to time, the apportionment of Representatives to the number of inhabitants, under the single exception that each State shall have one Representative at least.

Ah, you may say it was still simply permissive; but go on and see the conclusion of that paragraph, where this appears:

If we review the constitutions of the several States, we shall find that some of them contain no determinate regulations on this subject, that others correspond pretty much on this point with the Federal Constitution, and that the most effectual security in any of them is resolvable into a mere directory provision.

The conclusion is inescapable that the framers of the Federal Constitution meant the provision they framed to be mandatory, that they meant nothing else whatever than immediate reapportionment after every decennial census. Every line of the discussion in this matter shows that this positive duty was imposed upon us.

Does any man here contemplate a further avoidance of this duty? Let him remember the oath he took to support the Constitution.

Sir, in yonder Hall, now inhabited only by the effigies of the great, is that of a statesman who once represented Massachusetts, Daniel Webster, foremost expounder of the Constitution. I have not his majestic form, his massive head, his marvelously eloquent voice, his unsurpassed power of logic, but the spirit of Massachusetts may still breathe from the lips of a Representative of Massachusetts, and in his words I for one declare—

I shall exert every faculty I possess in aiding to prevent the Constitution from being nullified, destroyed, or impaired.

[Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD]. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is true, as my colleague has said, that Daniel Webster was a great expounder of the Constitution, and he and the colleagues of his day, it is equally true, were at all times willing to defend and hold within the control of this House the powers that have been delegated to the House by the Constitution itself.

I am not willing to set up a machinery or a formula that goes to the vital elements and the sanctity of this House. I am not willing to say that 435 Members shall at all times in the future be the sacred number upon which this House shall be organized.

I know that the functions of the Federal Government are growing. I know that the details and duties of every Member of this House are accumulating, and the principal complaint that is raised to the present situation comes from the cities where Members have a constituency sometimes of one-half million. Why? Because they have greater duties than other Members that have the uniform and regular number. So I am not willing to pass a bill here that will, for all time, forestall the increasing of the number of this House unless we go and bow down on our knees to the Senate of the United States or to the President and ask them to increase the size of the House and have them assume no responsibility under their oaths of office by saying, "Oh, we are satisfied with it as it is and there is a basic law that we can fall back on," and it will not be reapportioned if they do not desire it, even though the House may desire an increased membership.

Likewise, if the President of the United States shall conclude that 435 is a sacred number for all time, he can veto a bill without any responsibility as to their being no reapportionment, and throw it back on this basic law which we are now attempting to pass, and then the House, in order to increase its own membership, will have to pass a bill by a two-thirds majority vote over the veto of the President.

I do not believe the fathers who ordained and created this Constitution ever expected that the House of Representatives would delegate this power and put it in the hands of the Senate and of the President to hold a whip over the House of Representatives itself.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. In addition to having to pass it by two-thirds over the President's veto, you would have to get two-thirds of the Senate to pass it over the President's veto also.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Certainly; if vetoed, the Senate, by two-thirds, must agree to increase the House, or else we fall back on this monstrosity that we are asked to vote upon here to-day.

The Constitution of the United States does not contemplate either in words or in spirit that a reapportionment bill shall be passed before a census is taken, but it does contemplate that that shall be done after a census is taken.

If I had been here in 1920, in the Sixty-sixth Congress, whether that census suited me or not, I would have voted for reapportionment. I am a Member of the next Congress, and I am willing to say here now that I will vote to reapportion the House of Representatives after the census has been taken, and I know how many Representatives under that bill will be assigned to the State of Indiana by the House of Representatives itself, and not by some delegated authority.

The reports of the Census Bureau, at times using one method and at times using another, known as major fractions and equal proportions, has from the same census given different representation to the same State according to a different method used.

I am not willing to commit myself by saying that the method of major fractions is the best method, but this bill says so, and it is put in as a fundamental law for all time, unless we can change it by a two-thirds majority of this House and of the Senate over the President's veto.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. This method of major fractions has been discarded, has it not, by the Census Bureau itself?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think they favor the other method, and they have assigned representation that is different to the same State by using the two different methods.

When a bill comes out of the Census Committee before this House that tells me how many Representatives my State shall have and your State shall have, as they have in the past, without delegating that to some other authority to figure out, I am willing to act upon it.

I am willing to vote in the next Congress for reapportionment, but I am not willing to express a lack of confidence in the next Congress, of which I am to be a Member, and to which most of you have been elected to be Members, by saying that I am not willing to trust that Congress, of which we will be a part, to do its constitutional duty and provide a reapportionment after a census is taken; but that we must provide some means before a census is taken.

I am not willing to stultify myself to this extent. I am not willing to say that I am not willing to trust you, my colleagues, to do your constitutional duty, and I shall vote against this bill. Even though my State shall lose, I would expect it to lose, if the census showed that it should lose; and I say to you that most of the opposition in this House is not based upon the fact that certain States will lose representation, as has been said by one of my colleagues, but is based upon the irregular, the anomalous way, a method that is an innovation, that lacks trust and confidence in the Congress to do its duty, and I am not willing to stultify myself by voting for a bill of that kind, which is something that has never yet been proposed in the annals of the history of our country.

This is not a reapportionment bill. This is simply signing a proxy for somebody else to do your constitutional duty which you will do when the time comes for you to do it.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. There is some uncertainty among some of us as to what the method of major fractions is; will the gentleman kindly explain that?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not pretend to know. I have sat in the committee room and have heard the professors explain this method and the other method. I think I know a little something about it, but I would not undertake to try to explain it; and I doubt if there is anybody in the House, unless it would be my friend JACOBSTEIN who would undertake to explain it. I do not think there is another member of the committee who could explain it or who understands it.

I do know that when they use that method and when they lay alongside of it the other method of equal proportions out of the same census they can give my State one more Member by one method than they can by the other method.

I prefer to see in the printed bill just how many Members your State will have and my State will have. The Constitution provides in the first instance for that, and I think I can read that language with understanding.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. Under the tabulations already made, using the methods of equal proportion, the State of New York would lose two Members, and under the major fractions she would lose but one Member. Are there two Members from New York on the committee?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think so.

A MEMBER. There are three.

Mr. BEEDY. That would account for the adoption of major fractions. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. The formula in this bill ties us up for all time under the law to a method that you can not change unless you have a two-thirds vote of the Senate or a veto by the President and you pass it over the veto. I am not willing to accept that method. The Census Bureau has reported this as not the most equitable formula. We can wait until two years hence, after the census has been taken and the bill which is to be framed stating how many Representatives the State of Indiana will have and how many we will have from your own State. [Applause.] Then I shall support reapportionment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of speaking, because I feel that probably I am one of the least qualified of the Members to speak on this subject. I have never given it any great thought, because it did not come within the scope of my work or duty. While I have read the bill and have studied the surrounding conditions and the history of the legislation for the last six or seven years, I feel that this piece of legislation comes before the House in the form in which it can be accepted by every Member as the initial step in making an apportionment.

I do not know that it is perfect. I might have some question about it; but, after all, it seems to me that whether you do it by limiting the membership to some method of fractions or by population, it is immaterial. After all, Congress does in that way apportion among the States the representatives who are to represent them. It strikes me that the argument that we are delegating our powers and duties is rather technical and does not have much merit. The Census Bureau gathers all the facts and the statisticians must make up the returns, and they file the certificate with the House and the House can accept or reject it and get other statisticians. There is no delegation of legislative power that I can see.

I was wondering whether the third and fourth paragraphs were really necessary, because the law itself would take care of that. Under the Constitution the power rests with the States to regulate except so far as Congress may enact legislation; the whole power is with the State. It does seem to me, and in a general way I have felt the force of the suggestion, that our duty is to make an apportionment, and when we fail to do it we are not living up to our constitutional duty, and I welcome this report from the committee giving us this formula in which we may take the first step to cure this situation. I am going to give my vote in favor of the adoption of this measure, for I think it is wisely considered and presents the best possible form in which we can now approach this subject. Let us go ahead and have an apportionment made, obeying the Constitution, and cease to be a subject of censure. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not believe during my short experience as a Member of this body so short a bill as this has ever come before Congress with so many invalid, specious, and unconstitutional provisions as has this bill.

Apropos the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], I have heretofore called the attention of the House, and the committee that reported the bill, to the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5. No man familiar with the Constitution, no man that has even a speaking acquaintance with our organic law, will contend for one moment that sections 3, 4, and 5 have any binding force or effect whatever. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, one of the ablest lawyers in this body, nods his head in approval. Every lawyer, every man that knows anything about the Constitution, knows that these three provisions are violative of the letter and spirit of constitutional mandate. The only power that Congress is given by the Constitution with reference to apportionment of Representatives is to apportion the representation among the several States in proportion to the numbers or population. That duty done, the power of Congress ends, and Congress has no power to determine in what manner the several States exercise their sovereign rights in selecting their Representatives in Congress, and I was glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] indorse what I said on this subject at the last session of Congress on this floor. He says that there is no occasion or need for those provisions. I go further and say that no man who has even a speaking acquaintance with the Constitution will get on this floor and defend the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5.

I recognize the right and the duty of Congress to apportion representation, but that duty is placed primarily upon Congress, and it is a duty and responsibility that Congress can not and should not seek to avoid.

I would rather vote to-day for a reapportionment bill which will allocate the representation among the several States, based upon the census of 1920, than vote for this measure, because while it is not probable a reapportionment measure of that kind could become effective and operative before the next decennial census, yet in doing that we would be carrying out the constitutional mandate, but the bill before us is not a reapportionment bill. It does not seek to correct the abuses and errors of Congress in failing to reapportion representation after the Fourteenth Decennial Census was taken. It is a mere gesture. It furnishes the party in power or the Congress composed of both Democrats and Republicans with an alibi for their failure in 1921 to enact a reapportionment measure.

By this bill, if it becomes a law, you say that you are not vesting the Secretary of Commerce with any arbitrary power. I deny that. I say that by this bill you are placing in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce the absolute power to defeat any reapportionment under the provisions of this act. Section 1 does not provide for reapportionment. It provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit to Congress a statement of the population and the number of Representatives that each State would have on the basis of the membership of 435. But it ends there. What does section 2 provide? Among other things it provides that if the session of Congress to which the population is certified fails to pass a reapportionment bill, then the Clerk of the House shall transmit to the executives of the several States a certificate showing the number of Representatives that each is entitled to under the new census. So far, so good. Then we pass to paragraph (b) of section 2, which provides that section 2 shall have no force and effect unless the statement required by section 1, in respect to such census, is transmitted to Congress at the time prescribed in section 1; and what does section 1 prescribe as the time those reports as to population must be submitted to the Congress? Section 1 provides that this certificate must be sent to Congress on the first day of the first session of the Congress following the taking of the census.

If this bill becomes a law and the census is taken in 1930, the Bureau of the Census and the Secretary of Commerce might have all of the facts and figures as to population, and yet, purposely withhold or delay the certificate, and unless he on that particular day, not a day sooner, not a day later, transmits to Congress the certificate showing the population, then section 2 by the terms of the act itself is not operative, and you get no reapportionment whatever.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. In a moment. Then again what does this bill provide? It gives the Secretary of Commerce the arbitrary power by delaying the completion and promulgation of the census to delay sending in the certificate beyond the first day of the session of the succeeding Congress, and whether he does that from an unworthy or a worthy motive, he is vested with absolute power to emasculate and destroy this law, and at no subsequent day after that can he furnish the certificate to Congress, and this law has no force and effect.

Think of the autocratic power you are giving to the Secretary of Commerce. You are making it possible for a Secretary of Commerce to arbitrarily delay the completion and promulgation of the census. You are placing in his hands the power to play politics and use his high office for partisan purposes. He could have the census in certain cities and States retaken, in an effort to increase or decrease the population of this or that State so as to create a major fraction for a favored State and reduce the major fraction of another State to a minor fraction. You are giving to the Secretary of Commerce the power to manipulate census statistics relating to the population of this or that State, and by omissions or additions to deprive States of one Representative when a slight change will convert a major fraction into a minor fraction or a minor fraction into a major fraction thereby giving a favored State a Representative to which it is not entitled. Think of the Congress of the United States writing into a bill that is supposed to be permanent law a provision that makes it possible for the Secretary of Commerce, from a worthy or an unworthy motive, actuated by partisanship or patriotism, to delay sending this certificate to the Congress, and if this certificate fails to reach Congress on the first day of the short session of Congress after the taking of the census, then by the express terms of the bill, no action can be taken under this law for 10 years, and this act would have no force or effect whatever!

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman emphasizes a situation where the Secretary of Commerce may voluntarily fail to do such a thing. What about it, for example, if he has overlooked it?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What would be the situation if he did transmit it by messenger on that day and the messenger either got sick or was waylaid and the message taken away from him by somebody who did not want the law to go into effect?

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman is quite right. I say that no law has ever been placed on the statute books of this Nation which contained a provision as loosely drawn as this one and carrying with it so many possibilities of danger and abuse. We can not suppose for one moment that all Secretaries of Commerce are going to be honest or entirely impartial in the exercise of power with which they are entrusted. This bill would furnish a temptation and easy chance for a partisan or corrupt Secretary of Commerce to manipulate census statistics and withhold this certificate where by so doing he could aid his political party. Heretofore the Bureau of the Census has been a nonpartisan body and a very efficient organization. It has been a purely business bureau, free from political bias, and under the wise administration of Director Steuart and Assistant Director Hill and bureau chiefs it has established an enviable reputation for efficiency and nonpartisanship. Under present conditions there is no motive to furnish anything but accurate statistics, but when you give the Secretary of Commerce the power carried by this bill you invest him with prerogatives that would tempt any man who is a partisan and who sees an opportunity to aid his party by the shifting of a few figures under cover, and a designing partisan as Secretary of Commerce could manipulate statistics so as to deny States representation to which they are entitled and you make it possible for him to prevent a reapportionment by not sending his certificate to Congress on the first day of the short session of Congress after the census is taken. In 10 minutes I can not even refer to the many reasons which influence me to oppose this measure. After the 1930 census is taken I will vote for a reapportionment bill. I hope it will be a bill that will not reduce the number of Representatives from Missouri, but whether or not Missouri retains her present number of Representatives, I will vote for a reapportionment bill immediately after the 1930 census is taken. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELSH].

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my esteemed colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has referred to this proposed legislation as being an initial step on the part of the House toward disposing of the question of reapportionment. Now, what a great many of us fear is that this is not the initial step but it may be the final step so far as the House is concerned in having a voice in the apportionment or the representation in this House.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. In a moment. I come from one of the large cities of the country. There is no question of the fact that those of us who come from these large cities feel we ought to have a greater representation in the Halls of the Government. But my State, by this mysterious method of computation as shown by the figures, will be deprived of one vote. The district which I have the honor to represent has over a half million population. We voted 150,000 in the last presidential election, and yet the State of Pennsylvania will be deprived of one Representative in Congress if this proposed legislation should be adopted. I am not saying that controls my vote here to-day. I think I can approach this matter as unselfishly as any Member of this House, but it is because I believe this plan will place it beyond the power of Members of this House to decide the constitutional question of apportionment of Representatives that I am so strongly opposed to the proposal. The plan does not seem to me to be wise. It seems to me, my colleagues, that the proponents of this bill are fearful of conditions that might exist in 1931 and 1932. Why in 1929 should we pass legislation having to do with the control of this House in the matter of apportionment when we do not know what may be the facts in 1932? In 1931, when that great question of the shift of population shall have been decided, when we shall have spread before us the urban and suburban population in figures, when we have the figures of the migration East, South, North, and West, we can then understand the situation and act according to the facts before us. Reapportionment I am in favor of, but it should be done by this House and when we are in possession of all the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill, and I hope it will be adopted, and one reason I intend to support the bill is because I believe it will do what the gentleman from Missouri seems to fear will not be done, and that is that when the results of the 1930 census are declared there will be an apportionment even if the Seventy-first Congress fails to do its duty as Congresses have failed to do their duty since the result of the 1920 census. Now, I do not think that there is a plainer duty imposed upon the Congress of the United States by the Constitution than the duty of apportioning representation among the several States according to their population. During the debate a good deal has been said to the effect that Congress ought to be jealous of its constitutional prerogatives, and I agree to that. I like to see the House of Representatives stand up for its rights and resist any efforts to take away its powers; but while the House of Representatives ought to be jealous of its rights and prerogatives, at the same time it ought to be just as keenly anxious to discharge its duties and responsibilities. One of its most important duties is to apportion the Members of the House following each decennial census, according to population. Now, let us get down to the facts. Why has there not been a reapportionment since the results of the 1920 census were declared? The answer is simple enough. It is because the House of Representatives determined that the membership should not be increased, and that meant that some States would lose some of their Representatives, and those States, by use of first one device and then another, have thus far prevented any apportionment following the 1920 census.

The House of Representatives of the United States Congress is to the American people very much the same as the House of Commons is to the British people. It is the popular branch of our Government, and in the use of that word "popular" I, of course, mean it represents the people of the several States according to population, and is elected every two years by a direct vote of the people. Therefore we more nearly represent the current thought of the people on public questions than any other branch of the Government.

The United States Constitution provides that Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States according to population.

By the sixteenth amendment, commonly known as the income tax amendment, we have done away with that requirement so far as direct taxes are concerned—income taxes—but there has been no change in the rule regarding Representatives in the House, and there will be no change in that rule, because if there were, it would strike at one of the foundations of our Republic. But while there will be no change in the rule so far as the Constitution is concerned, Congress itself, by neglect, could very seriously impair the rule. There is no executive, there is no court, that can compel Congress to discharge this duty. Therefore, because of that very fact, we ought to be more keenly anxious to discharge the responsibility. It is claimed by some of the opponents of this bill that it delegates legislative powers to the Secretary of Commerce. The duties prescribed in the bill for the Secretary of Commerce are so clearly ministerial in character that I do not deem it necessary to discuss that phase of the matter.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I like to hear my colleague, because he is always clear on things he has given thought to. I do not understand why minor fractions have not been used. Why base this matter on equal proportions without fractions?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I must answer that briefly and then go ahead with my remarks, for I have only 10 minutes. The method of major fractions was used in the apportionment after the census of 1910 and was generally satisfactory to the people. I have never heard any complaint against it. This bill simply follows the method of apportionment which was used in 1910.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I may add that no other method has been used.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I presume the gentleman from New York is correct in that statement. Ever since the taking of the first census in 1790 the size of the House of Representatives has been increased following each decennial census, except two—the census of 1830 and 1920. There has been no apportionment at all following the 1920 census.

Now, I believe that there are many people in this country who are earnestly of the opinion that increasing the size of the House of Representatives to prevent any States from losing representation has gone on longer than it should have gone, and ought to have been stopped, perhaps, at a membership of 300 or 350. I am sure that there are many people who believe that a House of Representatives with 300 Members or 350 would function better and be really more representative of the people than a membership of 435. But whether that is true or not, it is not worth while to argue at this time.

I believe that almost everyone is agreed that the membership ought not to go beyond the present membership of 435. We already have too many offices and too many officers in the United States, municipal, county, State, and Federal, and let us not add to the number by increasing the size of the House of Representatives. The surest way to prevent an increase in the size of the House of Representatives following the census of 1930 is to pass this bill at the present time. It provides a definite method, one that is just and workable. The House now has an opportunity to perform a duty already too long delayed, and I hope that we will not fail to perform that duty. Let us pass this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, everybody is trying to fix the responsibility for the lack of apportionment during the last eight years, and you can not fix it upon any one group of people in the House of Representatives. A certain number of people thought the census of 1920 was not fair; that it was taken to the disadvantage of the rural sections of the country, it having been taken following the war. There is another group of people who believe that we should not increase the membership of the House above 435, and in view of all these conditions we have faced a situation here that has prevented a reapportionment.

I want to say to those Members from States which are getting an increase in the number of Congressmen under this new apportionment plan that they are no more loyal to the Constitution than those of us who are against the bill when our States lose 1 or 2 or 3 Members of Congress; and if you would turn the program around the other way they would be occupying very much the same position that those of us occupy who are opposing the bill. In other words, there is a lot of difference whose ox is gored.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I think the State of New York is pretty nearly unanimous for this bill, although they expect to lose two Members.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; probably New York has had a change of faith, the same as some other delegations.

Mr. SNELL. That has been my position since the beginning. I am speaking of the present Members from New York.

Mr. STOBBS. The State of Massachusetts is content.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It has been recently converted to a new political faith, and no one can predict what they are going to do in the future.

Mr. LUCE. That has been the position of Massachusetts every time this question has been up.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Possibly you have had a lot of friends there who are so wrapped up in the provisions of the Constitution that you are more holy-minded than the rest of the Members of the House. But I notice that the Members from Massachusetts are just as human as the rest of us, and when Massachusetts interests are involved they are against a thing when it is adverse to the interests of Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. In 1921, when we had a bill on the floor of the House that would have adjusted these differences and disposed of this matter, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] voted to recommit it to the committee without instructions, thereby killing the bill.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. For the sake of the RECORD, I would like to have the gentleman know that the Republican Member and the Democratic Member from New York on the committee have always favored apportionment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I want to say to the House that it happens that there are two men on the committee from Detroit, Mich. This bill was reported out by a majority of one vote, and tell me of another committee in this House where you have two men from one city or State that is gaining, I think, four or five or six Members—I do not remember the number—on that one committee. What are they on there for? To get this bill through this House and nothing else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think any Member has the right to impugn the motives of any other Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. All right.

Mr. RANKIN. That is the order of the day. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. McLEOD. Does the gentleman know why that condition exists?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I presume because the Michigan delegation was active in getting those two Members on that committee.

Mr. McLEOD. Does the gentleman know that for six years that committee has failed to report out a bill due to the fact that there were so many members on that committee who would not vote for any bill whatsoever?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I am glad to have that confession from the gentleman from Michigan, that they went on there for that purpose. Now, let me suggest to you that the trouble with this bill is this: That you are adopting a formula here by which this apportionment in the future is going to become automatic. Ah, what kind of leadership are you going to have? What is the fear of the Members of this House that in the future the Members are not going to be able to carry out the provisions of the Constitution, so that the easiest thing on earth to do would be to say, "Oh, well, we do not want the responsibility of apportioning the House and therefore we are going to fix it by a little formula here that will act automatically, and thereafter, every time a decennial census period runs around, in a period of 10 years, Congress is not going to do its duty, the leadership is going to run to the woods and they are going to sit down and let this formula do the job of apportioning Members of Congress in the various States according to this formula." What a splendid view we must take of the Congresses of the future when we say we have got to fix up a sugar-coated pill by which they can perform their duties and perform them automatically without having any responsibility on themselves. If I were going to be a leader in some of the future Congresses, I would resent any such imputation upon the responsibilities of those Congresses which are to come.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman contemplate retiring?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I do not know and I am not going to make any promises. [Laughter.] There are some people here who have made promises on this floor about which they have changed their minds. At the present time I am perfectly satisfied with my job.

Mr. PERKINS. We have heard the Constitution expounded, but some of us are waiting to hear the theory of major fractions expounded. Will the gentleman kindly do that?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. No.

Mr. BEEDY. We will call on New York State for that.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I will refer you to the gentleman from New York, but I will say to you that I am going to offer an amendment by which I change from major fractions to equal proportions. [Applause.]

Mr. FENN. May I ask the gentleman whether he can explain the theory of equal proportions?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. No; I can not, and I do not think the chairman of the committee, who has been studying this thing for six or eight years, can explain them either, and I have every respect for his splendid ability and believe he is one of the outstanding Members of the House.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. If the gentleman will not undertake to explain major fractions and equal proportions, can he tell us in a word what would be the practical effect of the adoption of either of these two methods?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Well, the practical effect is just as selfish as some of the other things I have referred to here, that some States will get another man and some States will lose a man, and that is what is behind the motives of most of the Members if we tell the truth about it.

Mr. KETCHAM. In the gentleman's extension of remarks, will he put in exactly what will be the result?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I think I have that information and I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield for one question in re the major-fractions theory?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Answering the gentleman as to what the major fractions formula is, I will say that Doctor Willcox, its founder and formulator, says:

> It is a system by which you cut and try to find out a basis by which you can reach a desired end.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to yield any further. Somehow I have the habit of stating things so that everybody wants to ask me questions.

Let me suggest this to you: Why make a situation worse by legislation? As a matter of fact, one of the things this bill will do will be to convince the next Congress and the Congresses that are to follow that the Seventieth Congress did not have any business passing this legislation, and therefore they will say, "We are going to show them that we are boss of this job, and we are not going to follow their rule."

Next, if you want information, pass the first section of this bill and strike out the provisions for further reports, other than the 1930 census, and so that the Secretary of Commerce, through the Census Bureau, shall report to the House the information that we need; and when you come to section 2, that ought to be stricken out. Section 3 ought not to be in here, because the States ought to have their own way of making up their apportionment when they know the number of Congressmen they are going to have. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of the pending Fenn bill. I think that Congress should declare its purpose now, without any further delay, to perform its constitutional duty with respect to this matter of apportionment. It, of course, has delayed doing so already all too long.

Something was said by the preceding speaker about the membership on the Census Committee of two Representatives from the State of Michigan. It might be interesting in that connection for the House to keep in mind that of the eight members of the Census Committee who signed the minority views on this bill seven of them come from States which would lose representation in this body if the bill should be enacted into law.

I compliment the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RUTHERFORD] as being the only man who signed the minority views who comes from a State that is not scheduled to lose membership in this body under the bill. Here are the names of the Members who signed the minority report: Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, his State loses 2; Mr. GREENWOOD, of Indiana, 2; Mr. LOZIER, of Missouri, 3; Mr. RUTHERFORD, of Georgia, none; Mr. MOORMAN, of Kentucky, 2; Mr. DEROUEN, of Louisiana, 1; Mr. FITZPATRICK, of New York, 1; and Mr. THURSTON, of Iowa, 2.

I believe that it is a plain mandate of the Constitution for Congress to make a reapportionment every 10 years. In the language of Justice Story it is "a duty positively enjoined by the Constitution." How else can the spirit or the letter of the compromise which resulted in one provision being written into the Constitution giving each State two representatives in the Senate, regardless of its size, and the other provision giving each State representation in the House of Representatives according to its population be carried into effect? Failure to pass apportionment legislation destroys the purpose of that compromise and clearly nullifies the provision of the Constitution which promises every State representation in this body according to its population. Failure to pass it is unfair and unjust to States whose population increases more rapidly than the others.

Many Members of the House are in favor of the Fenn bill who come from States that will lose some of their membership if the bill is enacted into law. They are entitled to our admiration and have it. May their number increase. Some of us can not claim any such credit. I come from a State whose delegation in the House of Representatives will be materially increased if the bill becomes a law. The people of Michigan feel very keenly that Congress ought to act upon this matter. However, I believe that it is my deliberate judgment, uninfluenced by these considerations, that it is the plain duty of Congress to act and that its failure to do so can not be defended.

Let me read an extract from an editorial appearing in the Public Ledger of Philadelphia last Sunday referring to this bill:

> Use of the terms "gain" and "lose" should not obscure the fact that all this measure does is to restore the system of equal representation in the House according to the population of the States. The same principle is made fully applicable to the Electoral College. This is a measure for justice to all. By its prompt passage Congress can do something to remove the disgrace it has incurred by its long defiance of the plain mandate of the Constitution.

That is the expression of an unprejudiced editorial writer on a great metropolitan paper representing a State which will undoubtedly lose one Member in this body if the bill is passed, and in my judgment it is the same conclusion which any unprejudiced student of this question will arrive at after giving it mature deliberation.

Let us see what some of the consequences of our failure to pass any reapportionment legislation since the census of 1910 are. For example, the estimated population of the sixth congressional district of Michigan, represented by my colleague, Mr. HUDSON, is over 1,350,000. That of the tenth district of California, represented by the gentleman from California, Mr. CRAIL, is over 1,250,000. The first district of Michigan, represented by my colleague, Mr. CLANCY, and the thirteenth, represented by my colleague, Mr. MCLEOD, are not far behind, and there are districts in other States nearly as large.

Compare the population of these districts which I have mentioned with those in some of the other States and what do we find? In making this comparison I have no desire to pick on any State, and I am calling attention to the different States and the districts in them only to show the inequalities which now exist.

The eighth congressional district of Missouri, for example, has a population according to the census of 1920 of 138,807, only a trifle over one-tenth of the present estimated population of the district represented by my colleague, Mr. HUDSON. Can anyone defend that situation?

The sixth district of Missouri, according to the census of 1920, has a population of 138,931; the twelfth district of Missouri, 141,664; the third district, 151,884. In fact, 10 of the 16 districts in the State of Missouri have a population of less than 180,000. It is a significant fact, too, that every one of the 10 districts of Missouri referred to had a smaller population in 1920 than it did in 1910, the decrease ranging from 3,000 to 13,000 per district. Can Congress justify itself under the Constitution in permitting districts with a diminishing population to have votes in this body equal to those with a rapidly increasing population?

Is there anyone who in his wildest dreams imagines that it is either feasible or practicable to continue to increase the size of this body so that those districts or States with a progressively diminishing population will never lose in membership in this body?

There are four congressional districts in Maine, each one of which has a population of less than 200,000. Vermont has two Congressional districts, one of which has a population of 175,832, the other 176,596. The two Vermont districts also had a smaller population according to the census of 1920 than they had according to that of 1910. The State of Indiana, as a whole, according to the census of 1920, has a population of 2,930,390. The same census gives the State of Michigan a population of 3,668,412, over 700,000 more than the State of Indiana. Yet both States have the same number of Representatives in this body. The estimated population of the two States for 1920 increases the disparity. The estimated population of the State of Indiana for 1930, according to the report of the Census Committee, is 3,200,000; for the State of Michigan it is 4,754,000.

I take it that no one will attempt to justify a condition which permits two States with such differences in population to have the same number of Representatives here.

In my judgment no one can justify a vote against this bill on the ground that its passage may deprive his State of some of its Representatives in this body. If the Constitution is complied with, every State will always have its proportionate representation. Is there a State that desires to have a greater proportionate representation here than it is entitled to under the Constitution; or is there anyone who thinks that his State will long be permitted to cast more votes in this body than it is entitled to cast under the Constitution?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry. I can not yield. My time is too limited.

It is probably true that no power outside that fundamental one of the people to change the personnel of Congress can compel Congress to perform this duty, this mandate of the Constitution; but that very fact puts an added responsibility upon us to see to it that our duty in this respect is faithfully and scrupulously performed. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill not alone for the reason that under its operation my State would suffer an inequality of representation greater than any other, with one possible exception, but because it is proposed to use a method that discriminates in favor of the large State, because it is proposed to tell a future Congress what it shall do in the matter of reapportionment, because it delegates to an executive department the actual reapportionment, and because at the best this measure is only a protest against the failure to make a reapportionment under the census of 1920.

INEQUALITY OF REPRESENTATION

Under the reapportionment proposed, using the population basis of 1920, the departure from the average constituency of the country would be 110,561. This departure would be exceeded by only two States. Thus it will be seen that Vermont will suffer greatly under the contemplated reapportionment.

The work that falls to a Representative has increased greatly during recent years. The closer relations between the Federal and the State Governments has brought this about. Government activities in the matter of highways, agricultural extension work, and many other things have increased the work until it would be practically impossible for one Representative to do what would be required of him. Situations might result in the case of death, for instance, where the people of a State with only a single Member would be without representation for months.

In the interest of good government the representation of no State should be reduced to one. I sincerely trust that in the disposition of this bill some way may be found to maintain the representation of the smaller States. Reapportionment must be made under the census of 1930. I am not opposed to that, but some way should be devised in the making of that reapportionment to care for all States situated as is Vermont.

My colleague [Mr. BRIGHAM], when this proposal was last before the House, offered an amendment which provides that where a State whose representation would be reduced to one shall have apportioned to it an additional Representative if its population exceeds by more than 75 per cent the average population per Representative for the United States, and to that extent the whole number of Representatives shall be increased accordingly. This amendment would affect but two States, and therefore add but two to the whole number of Representatives. This amendment would not do violence to the Constitution. My district is one of the largest in geographical area of any east of the Mississippi River, being 200 miles from one end to the other, extending from the Dominion of Canada on the north to Massachusetts on the south, a district of diversified interests and hard to represent efficiently. It would certainly be a calamity to leave the whole State with but one Representative.

THE METHOD OF APPORTIONMENT

It is proposed to use the method of major fractions in apportioning the Representatives under this measure, a method that has been used only twice in the whole history of reapportionment: This method is not approved by the Census Bureau or by the leading mathematicians of the country. The apportionment of Representatives to the population is a mathematical problem. Then why not use a method that will stand the test under a correct mathematical formula?

What is that test? Does it make both the ratio of population to Representatives and the ratio of Representatives to the population as nearly as may be in all the States? There is only one method that puts each State as nearly as possible on a parity with every other State, and that is the method of equal proportions, which is backed by the best mathematicians of the Nation.

It is true that the use of the method would not retain two Representatives for Vermont with the number in the House held at 435, as contemplated, but without regard to its effect we should authorize the use of such a method as will treat all the States on an even basis. The bill adopts what is practically a discarded mathematical formula and makes it part of the law of the land, so far as apportionment is concerned.

LEGISLATES FOR A FUTURE CONGRESS

The bill before us attempts to legislate for a future Congress on the basis of a future census. This bill proposes to provide for reapportionment under the census of 1930 and is anticipatory legislation. It attempts to hold a whip over a future Congress. Of course, the action which it is proposed to take is little more than a gesture, but nevertheless says to the Congress that will sit in 1930 that unless you make a reapportionment the Secretary of Commerce shall in effect make the apportionment. In that provision there is an imputation that Members of the future Congress will not possess as much intelligence and be as devoted to their duty as the Members of this Congress. It is assumed in this proposal that a future Congress will fail to do its duty. So far as this portion of the bill is concerned it is based on assumptions and imputations that are unwarranted and unjustified.

DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY

It proposes to delegate to the Secretary of Commerce the apportioning power if the Congress fails to act during its first session after the taking of the decennial census. It proposes to clothe this executive head with authority to say just how many Representatives may be allocated to each one of the several States under the provisions of the act. It is a conditional taking away from the Members of the Congress of the duty of apportioning the Representatives provided for under the Constitution and set forth as a duty of the Congress. The delegation of such a power as here contemplated is wrong in principle, though it be conditional—conditional, if you please, that a future Congress do its duty as this Congress conceives that duty. This bill practically gives to the Secretary of Commerce the authority to say how many Representatives the ten million or more of the people of the State of New York shall elect to represent them during the 10 years following the census of 1930. It is urged that such a provision is constitutional, but whether constitutional or not it is a step in the wrong direction in a republic where the powers of government are derived solely from the consent of the governed.

We have gone on from session to session delegating powers to bureau chiefs and departments that formerly rested with the representatives of the people. We are departing from the Government as conceived and established by the fathers, and through the operation of which this Nation has become the leader of the world. Bureaucracy is fast becoming the greatest danger to American institutions. If we keep on delegating authority to bureaus and departments, we may as well get along without Congress. This bill, if passed, will mark a long step toward the destruction of liberty in this country. Let us halt this advance into the danger zone before it is too late. We who deal with these bureaus in behalf of the people we represent know how they operate, many times in defiance of the will of Congress expressed in legislative acts. Our recent experience with the interpretation of the so-called Welch pay bill is an example in point. My experience has been such that so long as I may represent the people of my district I shall consistently vote against any further delegation of authority to any department or bureau. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" to-day as much as it was when that statement first found expression.

CONSTITUTIONALITY

We have heard much about the faliure to apportion under the census of 1920 and failure to carry out the provisions of the Constitution. I challenge anyone to show where the Constitution makes an apportionment mandatory. The Members who have been shouting so loudly that we violated the Constitution in failing to apportion after the census of 1920 are the very ones who helped to prevent apportionment in 1921. We were wholly within constitutional rights when the bill was practically killed, for to have followed that census, taken as it was and at the time it was, would have worked a grave injustice.

INCREASED MEMBERSHIP

I am not afraid of an increased membership of this House. Notwithstanding the able argument of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio now a Member of the other legislative body in respect to a larger House when the matter was last before us, I am not convinced that a larger representation of the people would not make for better legislation and be a safeguard for the country. Witness, if you will, the effective work of this body as compared with some bodies of smaller size. But we are told that to increase the membership would make it unwieldy. The few gentlemen who now direct the course of legislation in this body seem to be getting results. Who doubts that their genius for organization and control would be extended over the House, however large its membership?

There is no widespread demand for this legislation at this time. We are not meeting the Constitution when we defer action until 1930. Rather we are giving legislative sanction to the claimed violation of that sacred document by deferring this apportionment until after the next enumeration. There is no rational excuse for this proposed legislation at this time, and we can render the country no better service than to defeat it. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MOORMAN].

Mr. MOORMAN. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, the Census Committee, of which I became a member in 1927, seems now to get some criticism because there has not been a reapportionment of representation in Congress since the census of 1920. If there was any unjustified failure to follow the spirit or mandate of the Constitution it was a failure of the Congresses immediately following 1920. If politics is any issue, these Congresses were all under Republican administrations. Failure to reapportion at the right time now confronts us with a serious and different situation, one to be dealt with as a matter of common sense and present expediency.

Those of us signing the minority report have even been accused of being obstructionists. We were not. We were convinced that this bill under consideration is unsound, unnecessary, and wrong. This body confirmed our position at the last session when it recommited the reapportionment bill to our committee. The pending bill means the same, in its essentials, as the one the House refused to enact into law. It is open to the same objections. This bill is not to now reapportion representation, but is to compel future Congresses to do so, or if they fail, to delegate the power to the Secretary of Commerce.

I regard this anticipatory legislation, the effort in this bill to bind a future Congress, as a dangerous precedent if fundamentally sound at all. It seeks to meet an emergency situation which might develop in 1930 or thereafter. Why not anticipate that Congress will fail to perform a hundred other duties and functions and now begin legislating accordingly?

I desire to say that I recognize it to be my duty to vote for a reapportionment bill of the right kind, at the proper time. But any reapportionment based on the census of 1920 would be absurd, for the reason that another census upon which reapportionment can be better based is due in 1930. Also, it would be unfair for certain reasons, namely:

First. That the census of population was taken as of January 1, 1920, which was considered unfair to the rural districts, especially in the years following the close of the World War; and Second. That the actual enumeration was not efficient.

Further, the census of 1930 is provided for in a bill that our committee recently unanimously reported out. It will have new and perfected features, provides for taking the census May 1, which is the time agreed upon by our committee when the actual population of the cities and rural sections can be most fairly ascertained, and, on the whole, it promises to be the most complete and dependable enumeration and statistical record of people and facts ever made. In this connection I would like to say there is some disposition to have the 1930 census taken as of November 1. Our committee was convinced that this would be another mistake. Road and weather conditions would prevent fair rural enumeration. This census is going to employ about 100,000 people, has many new features, and will cost about $40,000,000. It will reveal many facts that Congress should have before it is to intelligently consider a reapportionment bill, which is a matter of most vital importance to all of the States.

I respectfully invite your attention to the minority report, concurred in by nearly half of the Census Committee, as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS

We desire to submit briefly our reasons for opposing this bill.

In the first place it is practically the same bill that was rejected by this House on May 18, 1928. It has been slightly denatured by a few minor amendments.

This legislation is unnecessary, and is an attempt to bind a future Congress.

It does not propose to reapportion Congress under the census of 1920, but attempts to legislate for a future Congress, relative to a reapportionment on the basis of a census to be taken in 1930.

It also attempts to arbitrarily fix the size of the House at 435 Members without first taking into consideration the iniquities and injustices that might be avoided by adjusting the size of the House under the census of 1930 to take care of all of the States.

It proposes to lay down a formula, which they call major fractions, and which few Members of the House will understand and fewer still can explain.

It is proposed also to delegate the Secretary of Commerce the apportioning power, which is primarily vested in the Congress of the United States.

In case Congress failed to act at the first session after the taking of the decennial census the executive department charged with the duty of taking the census would also have placed in its hands the power of reapportioning the House of Representatives under that census.

The Department of Commerce seems to have tried the case in advance, as they have filed with the Committee of the Census a table showing their estimation of the number of Representatives each State will receive under the census of 1930. This forecast itself shows the inadvisability of delegating the power of reapportionment of Congress to the Department of Commerce.

Under the table prepared they show that, according to their estimation, if the method of major fractions is used to reapportion Congress after the census of 1930 is taken, the following States would lose the number of Representatives indicated:

Indiana, 2; Iowa, 2; Kansas, 1; Kentucky, 2; Louisiana, 1; Maine, 1; Massachusetts, 1; Mississippi, 2; Missouri, 4; Nebraska, 1; New York, 2; North Dakota, 1; Tennessee, 1; Vermont, 1; Virginia, 1.

Thus approximately one-third of the States would have their representation arbitrarily reduced without any opportunity to equitably adjust the size of the House to meet the then existing conditions.

In order to avoid the absurd and ridiculous situation in which the passage of this bill would place the Congress, we respectfully submit that it would be better to wait until after the taking of the census of 1930, and then have the House reapportion its membership according to that census.

Respectfully submitted.

J. E. RANKIN.
ARTHUR H. GREENWOOD.
RALPH LOZIER.
S. RUTHERFORD.
HENRY D. MOORMAN.
RENÉ L. DEROUEN.
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK.
LLOYD THURSTON.

Concerning this subject, I desire to say that I believe it should be the law that no alien shall be counted in the census enumeration of the number of people in each State. This would reduce to a fair basis city representation and have a tendency to check the drift of legislative power to population centers. Further, if a person does not think enough of the country in which he makes a living to become a citizen of it, he certainly should not be counted in determining the number of Congressmen or electoral votes of any State. There is a disposition to attribute to Representatives from States that will lose Congressmen, a desire to indefinitely postpone reapportionment. This idea is, I am impressed, largely without basis. Due to the unusual and unsettled conditions in 1920, following the war, and when many rural people were in the population centers and elsewhere, resulting in an admittedly unfair population enumeration, there has been much opposition to reapportionment on the basis of the 1920 census. However, Kentucky, under this bill, will lose two Members, based on the population estimated for 1930. Even the contemplation of this result arouses and warrants deep concern. The reduction of any State's present representation is disturbing sacred rights. I do not believe the present number of Representatives of any State should be reduced. The result of reapportionment on the remaining districts of a State are sometimes almost as important as the loss of Members. I also believe this anticipatory feature of the proposed legislation is fundamentally unsound and that the bill is altogether unwise. It amounts to a surrender by Congress of more of its powers, and is the unnecessary delegation of its duties and rights.

The imputation that a future Congress, with all the facts of the new and complete 1930 census before it, can not or will not know or do its duty, or that such a Congress will not possess as much intelligence or integrity as this one, I think, is unwarranted. I believe that practically every Member of this House, under the Constitution and his oath, feels largely as the majority indicates, in the following words:

The committee is strongly of the opinion that the failure to reapportion is a violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution. It holds the view that no section of the Constitution is more fundamental to our Government than this section. Without its observance, representative government becomes a sham.

As to limiting the number in the House to 435, I understand the corresponding branch of the German Government has 493 members, the French Government 580 members, and the English Government 615 members. By the increase of our membership to a body approximately the size of the smallest of these, all States could be saved the loss of present representation. The House would be but little more unwieldy than it is at present, if any more so at all. The comparison of the legislative records of the United States Senate, with only 96 Members, with that of the House, with 435, would indicate no loss of efficiency by the suggested increase in our numbers. Further, there is a drift of population, and consequently of legislative power, to the cities. The loss of Members under this bill will be greatest to rural sections and the gains largely to the population centers. This tendency is worthy of our careful consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it so happens that I come from a State that in all likelihood will lose one Member from its delegation. My colleagues, who are familiar with my political irregularities, know, and it will require no stretch of the imagination to prophesy, which district will be eliminated. [Laughter.]

Nevertheless, I can not see how anyone believing in the fundamental principles of representative government can vote against any kind of a bill that will remedy the existing conditions. If the State of Michigan and the State of California have so grown in population as to be entitled to a greater proportionate representation in this House, they must be given such representation, and the people of those States and other States should not be deprived of their due proportionate representation in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

A great deal has been said about tying the hands of future Congresses. Read the debates of the Constitutional Convention and you will find that it was their intention to make reapportionment mandatory every 10 years. They feared that if the matter was left to the discretion of future Congresses that selfish reasons might prevent action. In providing for an enumeration every 10 years the framers of the Constitution intended and believed that they were providing a mandatory reapportionment every 10 years. A reading of the debate of the Constitutional Convention on this very question can leave no doubt as to that intent.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And does the gentleman not think it clearly indicated by the convention proceedings that Congress should delay reapportionment until after it got hold of the census?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In answer to that, permit me to read what another distinguished gentleman from Virginia said:

> Mr. Randolph was apprehensive that, as the number was not to be changed until the National Legislature should please, a pretext would never be wanting to postpone alterations and keep the power in the hands of those possessed of it.

He, too, was a very distinguished gentleman from Virginia. Again, as to the "tying of hands of future Congresses," Mr. Randolph says:

> If the legislatures are left at liberty, they will never readjust the representatition.

How prophetic!

Mr. Hugh Williamson, of North Carolina, in the Constitutional Convention said:

> It is the duty of the legislature to do what was right and not leaving it at liberty to do or not to do it.

Then, again, Mr. Randolph, quoting Montesquieu—and I have often heard the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] quote him on the floor of this House—says:

> If the danger suggested by Mr. Gouverneur Morris be real, of advantage being taken of the legislatures in pressing moments, it was an additional reason for tying their hands in such a manner that they could not sacrifice their trust to momentary consideration.

That is exactly what we are doing in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have only a moment. It is clear that the very trouble that we are now confronted with—that of local conditions, momentary consideration; that of personal interest; that of losing a seat—was before the Constitutional Convention, just as it is before us now, and if past Congresses had performed their duty we would not be vexed to-day with the very objections in the bill that the gentleman from Virginia suggests. It is because of the failure of past Congresses, the unpardonable failures, that we are sitting to-day in a body constituted not in accordance with constitutional requirements. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] believes too much in representative government to want to be a member in any legislative body that is so out of proportion, that is so manifestly unfair by reason of the drift of population as in a body perpetuated in its disproportionate representation by the culpable failure of past Congresses to act in accordance with a clear mandate of the Constitution.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I was going to suggest to my friend that while we may have flouted the Constitution in not making an apportionment on the basis of the last census, that is no reason why we should further flout the Constitution by enacting anticipatory legislation now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have read what the founders suggested in taking the necessary steps and safeguards and tying the hands of future legislatures so that we will not leave it at their pleasure, and if future Congresses should be as derelict as past Congresses, then we simply provide automatically for proportionate representation. That is what the Constitution intended. That is what we are doing. Future Congresses are not having their hands tied. Future Congresses are not prevented from acting in accordance with their constitutional prerogatives. Future Congresses are only prevented from flouting the Constitution and destroying real representative government by their failure to act. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. BRIGHAM].

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the Senate committee report on the apportionment bill of 1832 Senator Webster indicated the interesting and delicate nature of the proposed legislation because, as he said, "It is to determine the number of voices which, for 10 years to come, each State is to possess in the popular branch of the legislature." The apportionment bill of 1832, however, assigned to each State, after a careful study of all the facts, a definite number of Representatives. The bill we have before us now does not do this, but provides that the Congress shall delegate to the Department of Commerce the task of apportioning 435 Representatives among the several States according to a formula known as major fractions. If the Congress fails to legislate further in regard to apportionment, then forever after the Department of Commerce will apportion to each State the Representatives to which it is entitled according to the formula set up. In view of the conflict of interests between the several States in this matter, we may confidently predict that the method set up in the bill will in the future be the method of apportionment following each census, and will determine, not for 10 years but for all time, the number of voices each State is to have in this House. It is important then that we examine carefully how such a method of apportionment will stand the test of doing justice to the several States.

We can perhaps agree that an ideal apportionment would result in having each Member of the House represent the same number of constituents and in having each State possess its rightful share of the representative power in this House.

If we divide the number of population of the United States in 1920 by 435, the number of Representatives, we have 241,867 persons as the average constituency for the United States. The test of the fairness and justice of a method of apportionment is the degree which it causes constituencies in the several States to depart from this average. Furthermore, if 435 Members is the total representative power of the House, each State should have apportioned to it that share to which it is entitled by its population.

In the RECORD of January 8 I inserted a table which shows the departure from the average which exists now without reapportionment and the departure which would exist had reappointment been made following the completion of the Census of 1920. If you examine this table you will find the greatest departure from the average does not exist now in the States of California or Michigan but in the case of the State of New Mexico. Each Representative from California now has 69,590 persons more than the average and each Representative from Michigan now has 40,317 persons more than the average, while the single Representative from New Mexico has 111,561 persons more than the average. Compared on the basis of the share in the representative power, California has less than ten times the population of New Mexico, but California now has eleven times the representative power of New Mexico.

The Webster report points out that no number of Representatives will exactly correspond with the precise share of representation which belongs to a State according to its population. Then says the report—

> That which can not be done perfectly must be done in a manner as near perfection as can be.

Well, let us assume this bill we are now considering had been a law in 1922. What would have happened? New Mexico would still have one Representative and that Representative would still have 111,561 persons more than the average for the United States while California would have three more Representatives added to her quota and would have fourteen times the representative power of New Mexico with less than ten times New Mexico's population. Do you think this is fair to New Mexico? Is reapportionment done in that manner "done in a manner as near perfection as can be"?

But with reapportionment made on the basis of this bill and the 1920 census, New Mexico is not the only State similarly affected. My State of Vermont would be left with one Representative who would represent an average constituency and 110,561 persons additional. So many of my Michigan friends have mildly reproached me for not supporting this bill that I will take a moment to compare the situation of Michigan and Vermont. As the situation is now, each Michigan Representative has a surplus of 40,317 persons. With reapportionment, the Representative from Vermont would have a surplus more than two and one-half times that which Michigan now has. Furthermore, on the basis of population, Michigan should have here in this House less than eleven times the representative power of Vermont while this bill would give her fifteen times Vermont's representative power. I would like to ask my friends from Michigan if they think I would be doing my duty as a Representative to support a bill which would do such an injustice to my State?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRIGHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I suppose the gentleman is using the 1920 census there?

Mr. BRIGHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. But the gentleman must remember that if the census were taken to-day it would materially change his averages.

Mr. BRIGHAM. I am using this as a basis of illustration; and I will say to the gentleman further that I agree that some reapportionment should be made, but we disagree as to the method of making it.

Mr. RANKIN. And if a thorough census were taken that might not be the case.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Yes; a situation might arise perhaps not with reference to Vermont and New Mexico but with respect to another group of States that had a little larger population.

The question is then, What method of reapportionment can be substituted for the method of major fractions which will come nearer to standing the test of perfection? If the House is held to a membership of 435, the method of equal proportions is one which will better stand the test of fairness and equality of distribution of the representative power than the method of major fractions contained in this bill. This method is approved by the advisory committee to the census and is approved by many of the leading authorities of the country. This method has no bias in favor of larger or smaller States but does as nearly as possible exact justice to each. From the political standpoint, on the basis of the 1920 census, this method has the disadvantage of taking away a Representative from each of three States having among them 64 votes in this House, and gives three votes to three States having a total of 6 votes. This is, of course, a great handicap for any method to carry.

The method of equal proportions applied to the 1920 census population distribution would result in taking from New York one Representative and would give one representative to Vermont. Now, let us test the fairness of such a procedure from the standpoint of number of constituents per Representative and a fair distribution of the representative power. New York had approximately thirty times the population of the State of Vermont in 1920. The method of major fractions provided for in this bill would give New York 43 Representatives and Vermont 1. Therefore New York would have forty-three times the representative power of Vermont, with thirty times the population. The equal-proportions method would give New York 42 and Vermont 2. New York would then have twenty-one times the Representative power of Vermont and would approach nearer her just share of 30 than would be the case if she had forty-three times the representative power of Vermont. Furthermore, the adoption of the major-fractions method would result in assigning to each New York Representative a constituency of 449 persons less than the average for the United States and for the Vermont Representative 110,561 persons more than the average. The equal-proportions method would make the New York constituency 5,299 persons more than the average and the Vermont constituency 65,653 less, which deficiency comes nearer the average than the surplus of over 110,000.

Surely on the ground of fairness and exact justice the method of equal proportions is the preferable one.

This legislation we are asked to pass now is anticipatory. No results will come until the outcome of the 1930 census is known. In my opinion, it would be better to wait and base action upon a definite set of facts and try to do as nearly as possible exact justice to all the States. If you look up the history of apportionment, you will find that one of the major disputes has been over giving Representatives to fractions. President Washington vetoed the apportionment bill in 1792 because Representatives were assigned to some States having the largest fractions of the quota entitling them to a Representative. Mr. Jefferson gave it as his opinion that fractions must be neglected because the Constitution has left them unprovided for. Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution says:

> If a fraction admits of representation in any case, what prohibits the application of the rule to all fractions?

This question he answers by saying:

> The only constitutional limitation seems to be that no State shall have more than one Representative for every 30,000 persons.

A Representative has been assigned for a minor fraction when by so doing more exact justice was done. It seems to me that Senator Collamer, in the debate of 1862, laid down the correct principles. He said:

> Mr. President, by what power and right and principle is it that you give Representatives to fractions at all? I take it, it is because in giving them to the fractions you approximate nearer to the Representative ratio. Then you ought to give representation to each State so long as by giving it they will be nearer to the representative ratio than they will be by withholding it.

This would seem to me to be the fair and just principle.

I am aware that there exists in the country and in this House a feeling that the membership should be kept at 435. There are arguments on both sides of this question. Perhaps any great enlargement is not desirable. But I think it is not so important to hold to this exact number as it is to add a few Members, if by doing so justice can be done to some States that will be found to fall short of having their fair share of the representative power and that will be found to have districts which depart widely from the average. In 1920 two States were so affected. In 1930 the distribution of population may be such that these States will not be affected, but another group will. Reapportionment in my opinion should be made immediately after taking of the 1930 census and should be made by Congress on the basis of the facts disclosed by that census. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, this bill is no reapportionment bill at all. It presents two proposals, one of them foolish and the other vicious. With all deference and apologies to the able gentlemen who have spoken in favor of it, I submit that they have argued in favor of a proposition that is not before the House and one against which they voted when it was formerly and properly before the House. The first and foolish proposal is that we intrude ourselves into the legislative duties and prerogatives of a future Congress. The second and vicious proposal is that we cowardly surrender our constitutional duties to an executive department. For instance, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], and I shall use his sentence as typical of the arguments in favor of the bill, said that he did not see how any Member of the House could refuse to vote for a bill which would remedy the condition existing. This bill does not remedy that condition and is not intended to remedy any condition. In fact, if I were to ask the author of this bill what its purpose is he could not answer the question. It does not attempt to do anything, but merely anticipates that a future Congress will not do its duty, and in that event it provides certain machinery to answer for the neglect. It is termed a "reapportionment bill," but it is not even attempted by the bill to reapportion.

If this is a wise bill then let me submit it would be wise upon its adoption for the Legislature of the State of Texas, for instance, a State that gains two Members by virtue of the reapportionment, to meet and anticipate that the legislature that met after the reapportionment would not subdivide the State into districts as the law provides, and in order that no embarrassment would arise when Texas received its additional representation, the Texas Legislature would provide for the secretary of state of that State to proceed to make a division which would apply in the event that the Legislature of Texas, following the apportionment, failed to make such a division. This is laughable, yet a reasonable sequent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] said he would support the bill as one step in the direction of apportionment. Well, in all sincerity, why not go the whole course if the step is well taken and any duty involves upon us? Why not reapportion in full if not too late, and, if too late, why take any steps? You are fooling the country merely. You neglected to reapportion when you should have. It is ridiculous to do it this late and in the face of another census. So this is merely a face-saving futility. The truth is that following the 1920 census the gentlemen, or most of them, who are here vociferously advocating this procedure were willing to let their views as to the size of this House defeat the constitutional requirement of reapportionment. Rather than permit a larger House they voted to recommit the bill discharging their constitutional obligation. They blocked the constitutional requirement, because, foresooth, the House was to be larger than they in their judgment deemed it wise. The vicious part of the bill is the delegation of authority by this Congress of one of its most important prerogatives to an executive bureau. It may be but a short step, but it is a step in the wrong direction. I have always been in favor of reapportioning this House and favored a smaller House. I favor somewhere about 350 Members, but I was never willing to let my own individual views as to the size of the House defeat a constitutional requirement of reapportionment upon fair percentages, which gentlemen who are so insisting upon the passage of this bill did do.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT]. [Applause.]

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, there are two purposes of making an apportionment of Members of the House. One of those is to determine how many Members there shall be in the House. The other is to determine how many votes shall be cast by each State in the Union in the Electoral College for the selection of a President of the United States. In the determination of that latter fact, it seems to me no Member of the House has the right or the duty to consider the personal equations of friendship which might otherwise largely affect his action on a matter that involved only the reapportionment of the membership of this body.

The rights of the small States under our form of government are entirely and absolutely protected by the membership of two in the Senate which goes alike to Nevada with 77,000 population and to New York with 12,000,000 population. The smaller States can not be deprived of their full voice and their power in this Government. In the passage of legislation they are as potent in the Senate as the largest State.

But when we come to the Electoral College, what do we now find? We find that the State of Nevada has 3 votes, or 1 vote for the President of the United States for every 25,000 citizens. And we find the State of California on the basis of the estimates as to what will prevail in 1930 has 1 vote for President to every 365,000 inhabitants. I do not personally favor the method which many do of electing the President of the United States by popular vote. I believe in the preservation of the right of the State to express itself as a State in such an election.

But certainly it can not be contended that there shall still be attributed to each State its two votes for its two Senators and then a disproportionate vote for its Members in the House.

Now, if the next Congress does not revise the present apportionment, the next election for President of the United States will be upon the present existing basis. Take, for example, four States of somewhat similar size. If we retain the present apportionment, the State of Massachusetts—to which honor is due for its support of this legislation despite the loss of a Member—will have one vote for each 242,000 of its citizens in the choice of a President; the State of Texas will have one for each 281,000 of its citizens; the State of Michigan will have one for each 317,000 of its citizens; the State of California will have one for each 365,000 of its citizens. If we reapportion on the basis that it is estimated this bill will work, the State of Massachusetts will have one for each 257,000 of its citizens; the State of Texas one for each 256,000; the State of Michigan and the State of California one for each 250,000 of their citizens. Under the present apportionment 123,000 more citizens are required to give California an electoral vote than in Massachusetts. Under the new system the entire range in those four States will be a matter of 7,000 citizens only. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. FORT. I could use two additional minutes.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. FORT. Now, the difference it makes is this: That proportionately it takes 1,600,000 more people in California to produce the same effect on the election of a President of the United States than it takes in Massachusetts.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORT. I regret I can not. I have only two minutes.

Now, what are we really doing in this bill? We are fixing the membership of the House at 435 in case the next Congress does not fix it at some other figure. That is where it stands to-day, exactly as it would stand if we passed no bill, 435 Members; so that there is no change in the existing law.

We are adopting the system of major fractions, the system under which we now hold our seats. We therefore are reannunciating the principle of a House of 435 Members chosen on the major-fractions basis, but we are also saying to the next Congress that "unless you, prior to the election of 1932, certify to the States a different basis for electors and Members of the House of Representatives, then the purely mathematical computation provided for in this act will be the basis for the membership." [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I come from a State that will lose one Member if this bill is enacted into law. I protest.

Since when has it become unreasonable or unjust or unpatriotic for a Member from a State about to lose a Member to protest against such a proposed act? If I remained silent, it would not be complimentary to this body. And what reason is there for 435? What mystery, what magic, lurks in that charmed number? What voodoo hangs over us by reason of which this House has refused to consider a basis that would do justice to all the States, including those that have increased largely in population? What mystic or occult spell lies in these numerals or their combination which prevents the adoption of a basis that will maintain the representation of proud old American commonwealths and at the same time do justice to those States which have increased in population by giving them additional representation? In other words, why not increase the number from 435 to that number which will meet the desirable situation I have suggested when the proper time arrives to pass such an act? If the Constitution has been flouted by Congress not passing an apportionment subsequent to the census of 1920, its failure is not condoned by passing an apportionment act which is to be based on the 1930 prior to the taking of that census. The argument is made that the House is cumbersome and unwieldy. When did it become cumbersome? Under Cannon? When did it become unwieldy? Under GILLETT? Under LONGWORTH and TILSON? Why, your discipline on that side—the Republican side—was never known in the Roman legions. [Laughter and applause.] Appropriations here running to $700,000,000 have been considered and voted in less than 24 hours, with an expedition that might be termed rapidity; and yet we are told in solemn tones about the unwieldy character of this body. Solemnity of tone always suggests a superior brand of patriotism—maybe. Business is transacted in this House with such a celerity of movement that no parliamentary body in the history of the world can equal its magnificent record, if you can call such a performance magnificent. [Laughter.]

This body has a smaller membership than the Chamber of Deputies, and a smaller membership than the House of Commons, and is less in number than the Reichstag was under an almost autocratic form of government. Why, gentlemen, why should we be bound by what apparently lies in the charmed number 435? What is the occult influence that has hovered over those who stand immovably behind this bill? I can understand "Pikes Peak or Bust," but the impenetrable occultism, mysticism, and magic is far beyond my ken. It is a puzzle I can not get through. Tear the flag if you must, trample the Constitution under foot, but under the peril of losing your immortal soul do not touch 435! That number is the Ark of the Covenant, and if you dare touch it you will share the fate of Uzzah and drop dead, or worse. What baleful influence lies in that number. It has the sinister influence of the jettatore or evil eye upon its blind votaries who are under its power. Here you have a House trained and disciplined to act in accordance with the rules, precedents, and established customs and in obedience to the command of the apostles of this House. [Applause.] No one on the Republican side will get off the reservation. A recent bitter experience on the part of several has taught them obedience and docility. They were made to do penance—wear sackcloth and endure and suffer aches before they were permitted to even come near the cloistered political precincts of a caucus. And the Democrats, free and untrammeled, offer only such opposition as the parliamentary exigencies and requirements demand, as we recognize that the responsibility of reasonable legislation lies upon the majority party. Our duty is to constructively criticize proposed Republican measures and assist in making for orderly and efficient procedure, and this obligation we have discharged in accordance with the ethics and the best traditions. So that at no time has there been evidenced any cumbersomeness or unwieldiness. Again, it is well to remember that Congress has become largely a recognitory body, giving recognition to the findings of committees. It is as true of the House as of the other body.

A few days ago a very important matter was decided in the Committee of the Whole House which had under consideration the War Department appropriation bill by a vote of 24 to 14. Many Members were at committee meetings, many were in their offices. In perfect candor it may be stated also that there were more Members present than those figures express. There may have been a hundred or more, but that vote expressed the majority opinion, for if it were otherwise a point of order would have been made that no quorum was present. And it may also be well to remember that as a result of the enormous increase in our population and the consequent expansion of governmental activities the average Congressman has become not only the representative of the entity known as the congressional district, but also the attorney in fact of the individuals of his constituency and is the medium of communication between the men and women he represents and the various branches of government that Congress has created, many of which threaten the same fate to their creator that the monster created by Frankenstein consummated to the author of its existence.

But as some one has said, Congress has survived all of its critics; and as long as the American people believe and want representative government, just so long will they want adequate representation that will meet the enlarged and growing needs of an expanding country, and will not heed the cry of those who consciously or unconsciously hearken to the voice that comes from the pillared palaces of privilege and wealth rather than turn the ear to the appeal that comes from the cottage, rural and urban. Of course we all believe in equal representation, but we do not all believe in adequate representation. These whispered mutterings and Solomonic expressions, accompanied by sagacious looks and suggestions of a lofty patriotic purpose, corrugating their brows, in good, plain, unadulterated

American, is the bunk. Let us beat this bill, and when it is in order pass a bill that will give full representation to every State without doing violence to the acquired rights of States whose people have written many of its most brilliant pages into the history of our country. Because 12 ounces make a pound, according to the apothecary weight, or 12 eggs make a dozen, or 12 inches make a foot, or 12 men and women make a jury, or the zodiac has 12 signs, is no justification for determining that 435, which makes a combination of 12, should be the Procrustean bed upon which grand old States that were of us from the beginning and sister States that endured the shackles of 1812 and marched arm in arm in 48 should be mangled to fit its monstrous measurement.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, while there is no direct mandate in the Constitution that the country shall be apportioned every 10 years, I concur in the view that there is an implied duty to do so. I can not agree, however, that the bill now before us is consistent with the Constitution, and I can not support the bill because it does not follow the path marked out by the Constitution. The proponents of this bill seek to perform a constitutional duty in an unconstitutional manner. They profess great veneration for the Constitution but wholly disregard it in this bill.

As it appears to me, the duty of Congress under the Constitution is as follows:

First. To provide for taking the census once every 10 years.

Second. To make an apportionment of the Representatives among the States during each 10-year period, said apportionment to be made as soon after the taking of each census as may be reasonably possible.

The opponents of this bill have been charged with a desire to defeat reapportionment under the 1930 census. This charge is wholly false and groundless. Everybody concedes and agrees that when the 1930 census has been taken a new apportionment shall be made. No Member of this House, as far as I know, has ever suggested the contrary, and I am very sure that none ever will. The opponents of this bill not only want to make an apportionment after the next census, as required by the Constitution, but also want to make that apportionment in the manner pointed out by the Constitution. They do not believe in following the Constitution on one point and at the same time violating the Constitution on another.

Apportionment of the House was not made after taking the census in 1920, but not because anybody questioned the duty of Congress to make such an apportionment after each census. In fact, the RECORD will show that practically every Member of this House voted for a reapportionment. It is well known that the reason a reapportionment bill was not agreed upon after the 1920 census was because that census was believed to be unjust to some of the States. The 1920 census was taken just after the war, while many were still away from their homes and before the population of the country had become stabilized. Men in high positions, whose sincerity and knowledge could not be questioned, stated that said census was not fair to the agricultural States. No such objection can or will be made to the census of 1930. That there will be a reapportionment in 1930, even if this bill does not pass, there is not the slightest doubt. The talk about this being a critical situation and that if this bill is not passed now no reapportionment can be made for years to come is wholly without justification or excuse and an unwarranted reflection upon the integrity of the Members of this House.

The Constitution provides that an apportionment shall be made after the taking of the census, but this bill comes up for consideration before the taking of the census. In answer, it is said that by passing this bill we will not make an apportionment but will simply provide for the Secretary of Commerce to make an apportionment after the results of the 1930 census are known. To the objection that Congress alone is empowered by the Constitution to make the apportionment and that this legislative duty can not be delegated to the Secretary of Commerce or any one else, it is urged that under this bill the duties of the Secretary of Commerce will be simply ministerial. So much has been said upon this point, pro and con, that I shall not dwell upon it at any length, but I do want to make a brief reference to it.

There are different ways of figuring when you endeavor to distribute a certain number of Representatives according to population. The Constitution does not indicate which particular method shall be used. No one, I take it, would contend that if the Secretary of Commerce determined the method of figuring, he would simply be performing a ministerial act, for such would not be the case. Different results are obtained by different methods and if the Secretary of Commerce could choose the method he could affect different States favorably or unfavorably by his choice. It is claimed, however, that this bill fixes the method when it says that the apportionment shall be made "by the method known as the method of major fractions."

That provision in the bill, however, does not fix the method, for there are different methods of major fractions, and the results obtained by using these different methods of major fractions are not the same.

On pages 9 and 10 of the report of the Census Committee on this bill we find the following statement:

METHOD OF MAJOR FRACTIONS

The method known as the method of major fractions is provided for in this bill and prescribed for the Secretary of Commerce in making the apportionment tabulation. This method was used in 1840 and also in 1910.

The learned gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] is a member of the Census Committee and is an authority for the proponents of this bill. He confirms the report of the committee by his statement in the House. I quote from the RECORD:

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Major fractions were used in 1840 and in 1910 and recommended in 1920.

We are told in the report of the committee that the method of major fractions was used in 1840. We are also told this by the gentleman from New York. But the method of major fractions used in 1840 was not the same as the method of major fractions used in 1910. In 1910 the method of Prof. Walter F. Willcox was used. But Professor Willcox had not been born when the 1840 apportionment was made. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] concedes that the methods are not the same, although both are methods of major fractions. He says Professor Willcox's method of major fractions was "developed in its present form by Prof. Walter F. Willcox." Professor Willcox himself says that he developed it after 1900.

It is very clear, therefore, that Professor Willcox's method of major fractions is not the same as the method of major fractions used in 1840. I agree, however, that the method used in 1840 was a method of major fractions. It was different, however, from the method of Professor Willcox. Another prominent advocate of this bill, but not a Member of this House, has referred to the Willcox method of major fractions as "a refinement of the 1840 method, as improved under the auspices of Prof. Walter F. Willcox." So no one can claim that the method of major fractions used in 1840 was identical with the method of major fractions favored by Professor Willcox, and all must concede that the results obtained by these two systems are not identical.

Major fractions are not a new thing. In 1832 Daniel Webster made a study of major fractions in connection with reapportionment. He made a lengthy report and outlined a method of major fractions which he favored for reapportionment. He referred to the method outlined by himself as a method of "major fractions," but that method of major fractions is different from the method of Professor Willcox.

So we have different systems of major fractions. The one used in 1840 and the one used in 1910 and the system of major fractions outlined by Daniel Webster. As far as I know, mathematics and figures and fractions have not changed. The method of major fractions used in 1840 is still a method of major fractions. The method of major fractions outlined by Daniel Webster in his report is still a method of major fractions. It will hardly be claimed that Daniel Webster did not understand the use or meaning of the English language and that he referred to his method as one of major fractions when it was in fact not such. Daniel Webster, I believe, is still good authority. So there are at least three methods of major fractions, and there may be others. It is said, indeed, that there are others. In any event, we certainly have three different methods of major fractions, and these methods do not have identical results; and therefore the number of Representatives a State may have under an apportionment may depend upon which system of major fractions is used in working out the apportionment. Under the language of this bill, then, it is left to the Secretary of Commerce to determine which method of major fractions he will use, and his discretion in choosing the method may affect some States favorably and other States unfavorably.

This matter could not be remedied by designating the method as "the Willcox method of major fractions," for the professor might change his mind. He might "refine" and "develop" some more. By 1940 he might have an entirely new method of major fractions.

I do not question the right of Professor Willcox to refer to his method as one of major fractions, but he can not restrict the use of figures and can not by his fiat obliterate other methods of major fractions. The system used in 1840, which did not have the benefit of the "refining" and "developing" of Professor Willcox, is just as much a method of major fractions to-day as it was then. The method of major fractions outlined by Daniel Webster is just as much a method of major fractions as it was then. These methods will exist during all time. You can no more blot out these methods than you could blot out the multiplication table. To choose the particular method is a legislative duty, and that duty can not be delegated. Under this bill the Secretary of Commerce must choose a method of major fractions, and the exercise of such discretion is certainly not a ministerial act.

But for the time being let us assume that the Willcox method of major fractions is the only known method of major fractions; and that the Secretary of Commerce therefore will not need to exercise discretion and select a method of major fractions. The duties of the Secretary of Commerce being purely ministerial, according to the proponents of this bill, he of course can not change the Willcox method of major fractions in the slightest degree. He can neither add to it nor subtract from it. He must use it just as it was made by Professor Willcox. Let us then ascertain just what the Willcox method is. But before doing that let us look at the bill for a moment. On page 2 of this bill we find the following language:

By apportioning 1 Representative to each State (as required by the Constitution) and by apportioning the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census, by the method known as the method of major fractions.

The Constitution of the United States contains these provisions, which are pertinent at this point:

(a) Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. * * *

(b) But each State shall have at least one Representative.

It seems to be generally conceded that the language of the bill set out and the language of the Constitution set out are not in harmony, and that the bill is in conflict with the Constitution.

I understand that an amendment will be offered, the effect of which will be to make said clause of the bill read substantially like the constitutional provisions.

While the purpose of the amendment will be to cure the vice pointed out, unfortunately that purpose will not be accomplished, still assuming that the Willcox method is the only known method of major fractions. If the Willcox method of major fractions is the only known method, then the use of the Willcox method will be mandatory upon the Secretary of Commerce, for the bill says that the apportionment must be made by the method known as the method of major fractions. The Willcox method, however, contains the very vice which it is the intention to eliminate by the aforesaid amendment.

In other words, the vice is incorporated in the bill twice; once by express language, which it is the intention to eliminate by amendment, and once by directing the use of the Willcox method. As the Willcox method seems to be very imperfectly understood, I want to insert an accurate and authentic description of it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. First I shall refer to page 10 of the report of the Census Committee, where an explanation is given of the Willcox method of major fractions. I now quote the language of the committee:

The following procedure is used when this method is applied: Each State is assigned 1 Member, as provided for by the Constitution, which makes 48. The remainder, 387 (435 less 48), is then assigned to all the States in the following manner: The population of the several States is divided successivley by 1½, 2½, 3½, etc. These numbers or quotients are then set down in the form of a series, the highest number first, the next highest second, the next highest third, and so on, down to the lower numbers. The number which is first or highest on the list has allocated to it the forty-ninth Representative; the next highest on the list is given the fiftieth Representative, the next the fifty-first, and so on, down until you come to the point at which you desire to stop. In this bill it would be at the number of 435.

I refer to another high authority, Doctor Hill, Assistant Director of the Census Bureau. This is his statement on the Willcox method of major fractions as it appears on page 73 of the hearings of the Census Committee held during the Sixty-ninth Congress:

METHOD OF MAJOR FRACTIONS

Process followed:

(1) Here, as in the method of equal proportions, the first step is to assign 1 Representative to each State, making 48 in all.

(2) The next step is to divide the population of each State by the following quantities in succession: 1½, 2½, 3½, etc.

(3) The quotients thereby obtained are then arranged in order of size, beginning with the largest and continuing the process until the total number of quotients plus 48 is one greater than the number of Representatives to be apportioned.

(4) The next step is to divide the population of the several States by a number midway between the last two quotients in the list.

(5) The last step is to assign to each State a number of Representatives equal to the whole number in the quotient which was obtained for that State by the above division plus one more Representative in case the quotient contains a major fraction.

Thus when we get through we will find ourselves in the peculiar position of having rejected a provision in the bill as unconstitutional and at the same time having approved the same provision, by making it mandatory that the Willcox method of major fractions be used.

We shall find ourselves in this dilemma: If the Willcox method is not the only known method of major fractions, then the Secretary of Commerce under this bill must exercise discretion and must determine which method of major fractions shall be used. The exercise of such discretion would clearly be unconstitutional. If the Willcox method is the only known method of major fractions, then the Secretary of Commerce will be compelled to use a method containing a provision which I am sure this House will hold to be unconstitutional. From this dilemma there is no escape. In either event the Secretary of Commerce must do an unconstitutional act.

I now want to refer briefly to a proposition very ably discussed by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON]. Under the Constitution apportionment is more than simply a distribution of Representatives among the States according to population. Apportionment can not be made merely a ministerial function by any anticipatory legislation that Congress may enact. The Constitution of the United States makes that impossible. It has been claimed that a similar act was passed in 1850, and that said act was a precedent and authority for this bill. Without discussing the act of 1850 in any way, it is sufficient to point out that the constitutional provision relating to apportionment in 1850 was entirely different from the provision on that subject now in the Constitution. In 1850 the constitutional provision as to apportionment read as follows:

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.

That provision was superseded in 1868 by section 2 of the fourteenth amendment, which I also set out:

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crimes, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

It will be noticed that said section 2 consists of two sentences. This bill takes cognizance only of the first sentence and wholly ignores the second sentence. It assumes that nothing is taken into consideration in making an apportionment except population and that the first sentence entirely covers the question of apportionment. If so, why was the original section on apportionment superseded? If section 2 is to be given such a construction, then it was wholly unnecessary to have the amendment. The first sentence of said section 2 is identical in effect with the original provision on apportionment. The wording of the original provision was somewhat different on account of slavery which then existed, but slavery had been abolished before the fourteenth amendment was adopted, and after the abolition of slavery the effect of the original provision on apportionment was exactly the same as the effect of the first sentence of said section 2.

This bill entirely ignores and obliterates the second sentence of section 2. Under such a construction, what a piece of folly it was to go to the trouble of adopting section 2 as an amendment to the Constitution. The fourteenth amendment, of which section 2 is a part, was proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress. There were great men in that Congress from Michigan, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, and other States, and all of them regarded section 2 as a matter of great and abiding importance. The men who represented these States in Congress at that time would be surprised if they could see how lightly their successors now regard their work.

What does the second sentence of said section 2 mean? It means just what it says. It means that every time an apportionment is made the Congress which makes it must determine whether that section is being violated; and if so, the apportionment must be made accordingly. Of course, if power to pass upon that section were entrusted to the Secretary of Commerce, it could not be claimed that anything he did by virtue of such power would be a ministerial act. For that reason no doubt the second sentence of said section 2 was completely ignored.

It would not do to give the power to pass upon that question to the Secretary of Commerce, for that would give him legislative functions. Congress can not pass upon that question in advance, for Congress can not tell in advance what the conditions will be when the time comes to make an apportionment. A grand jury can only indict for past crimes and not for future crimes. Congress can not anticipate at this time whether there will or will not be a violation of said section 2 in 1930. Therefore, the only thing the proponents of this bill could do was to blot out the second sentence of said section 2 and eliminate it from consideration, but a part of the Constitution can not be blotted out so easily. Said section 2 is still in full force and effect, and the second sentence of that section is as much a part of the Constitution to-day as any other sentence in the entire instrument. Suppose some State should pass a law denying the right to vote to all under 25 years of age. I use this simply as an illustration, not because I believe any State will pass such a law. If some State did pass such a law, clearly it would be the duty of Congress in making the apportionment to reduce the basis of representation of such State according to the requirement of said section 2. Under this bill, however, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to make an apportionment without taking any such situation into account. It may be said that if such a situation should arise, Congress could step in and repeal the law, if this bill should be passed. Of course, Congress could repeal any law, but that is not the test whether a law is constitutional. The test is whether by its terms a law is in harmony with the Constitution and not whether it can be repealed.

Mr. STOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STOBBS. I want to ask the question once again that I asked of your colleague. Has there been any machinery set up by Congress to provide for a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. STOBBS. What machinery?

Mr. KOPP. The Constitution sets up the machinery.

Mr. STOBBS. Has there been any tribunal set up by Congress to determine whether or not there has been any violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. KOPP. Congress itself is that tribunal. Congress itself must decide that question. Certainly not the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. STOBBS. But it has never been determined here.

Mr. KOPP. Yes. Every time an apportionment bill has been passed Congress by its action has said there was no sufficient reason for reducing the basis of representation in any State under that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. STOBBS. Congress has never decided that, in fact, there has been a violation of this provision of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. KOPP. No. But that does not repeal or in the slightest degree affect the constitutional provision. If there are no violations of a law that does not repeal the law.

Mr. STOBBS. Let us assume that Congress should at some time determine there had been a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. Then all you will have to do will be to provide in the bill that the Secretary of Commerce, in a purely ministerial capacity, shall determine the population in the country, excluding Indians not taxed, and excluding such persons as Congress may decide to have been in conflict with the provisions of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. KOPP. But under this bill the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to proceed, regardless of any violations of this constitutional provision. The test of this bill is what he is authorized to do, and not what laws Congress might pass to head him off. We could do many things to stop him. We could abolish his office, but nothing that Congress could do to prevent a violation of the Constitution in any way contributes in the slightest degree to the constitutionality of this bill. The fact that it authorizes unconstitutional acts, unless restrained by other legislation, clearly shows its unconstitutional character.

Mr. RANKIN. For the satisfaction of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I desire to call attention to the fact that the fifteenth amendment wiped out and nullified that clause of the fourteenth amendment so far as it relates to reducing southern representation on account of the race question.

Mr. STOBBS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KOPP. Yes.

Mr. STOBBS. I understand there is a difference of opinion as to whether it has been wiped out by the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. But not among those who have seriously considered the matter.

Mr. KOPP. I agree that this constitutional provision in said section 2 has no special application to the colored race. The fifteenth amendment does relate particularly to the colored race, but not so the fourteenth amendment. The latter is universal and applies to all. Said section 2 applies just as much to a State without a single colored person in it, if there be such a State, as to any other State in the Union. What I claim is that Congress must pass upon the questions that may arise under the latter part of said section 2. No other body can do that and certainly the Secretary of Commerce can not do that. No such power could be delegated to him, and if we could legally delegate such power to him, I would strenuously oppose such action. I would not be willing to let any individual pass upon such questions. I would not be willing for any other body to pass upon any question connected with the latter part of said section 2. Congress is the only body that has such authority.

Mr. STOBBS. This bill does not ask him to pass upon it.

Mr. KOPP. That is true. The gentleman who drew this bill certainly knew that such extraordinary power could not be delegated to the Secretary of Commerce, and for that reason such a provision was not put in the bill.

Mr. STOBBS. Because Congress has never decided that there has been any violation of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. KOPP. Suppose a grand jury should not find any indictment for years, would that in any way affect the indictable offenses in that jurisdiction? Suppose no crime should be committed in a State for a period of many years, would that repeal any laws against crime or annul the Constitution?

Mr. STOBBS. Just put in a clause, if you want to, excluding also such people or persons as Congress has decided have been affected by a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, and then it would be purely ministerial.

Mr. KOPP. Congress can not decide that in advance. That must be decided at the time the apportionment is made, but this bill passes the making of the apportionment over to the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. STOBBS. No; there is nothing in the bill that would be passed to him.

Mr. KOPP. The bill takes all out of the hands of Congress, and does not let the Secretary of Commerce consider anything but population. That is the only thing he can consider.

Mr. CRAIL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CRAIL. There have been five reapportionments since the fourteenth amendment was made to the Constitution of the United States. In any of the five bills for reapportionment since that time has there been any different language used than is used in this bill in regard to the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. KOPP. When the House passed an apportionment bill that was a finding that there was no occasion to insert other provisions than those contained in the bill. That was the effect of such action.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I can not imagine a Secretary doing what the gentleman thinks he might do, but suppose he did and suppose he were so arbitrary as not to count certain people and would submit those figures to the House.

Mr. KOPP. Has the gentleman suggested that the Secretary might not count them?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Suppose he is going to exempt from the calculation people who have been disfranchised, we will say; he has to submit the figures on the first day of the Seventy-first Congress to the House then convening, and if the House, upon looking at those figures, decides that the Secretary of Commerce had no right to use such discretion, we can go ahead then and do anything we please.

Mr. KOPP. Yes; we could do anything we pleased. As I said before, we could repeal the law, we could abolish the Department of Commerce, and then there would be no Secretary of Commerce, but that is not the test. We can repeal an unconstitutional law, but that fact does not make it constitutional.

If it were otherwise there would be no unconstitutional laws, for all laws can be repealed. Then again, we might get tied up by interested Members, if we may believe the statements of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Why should we be tied up?

Mr. KOPP. That is the argument the gentleman from New York makes for this bill. He says that if Congress should try to pass an apportionment bill in the regular way two years hence, interested Members would tie up Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield to me to reply to the gentleman?

Mr. KOPP. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose the Committee on the Census refused to bring in any report whatever with reference to reapportionment after they had decided, as a matter of fact, that the census figures were wrong, then would not the hands of Congress be absolutely tied?

Mr. KOPP. They certainly would be.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KOPP. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HUDSON. Has not the Congress a chance to get the figures if the Secretary fails to bring them in?

Mr. KOPP. No doubt Congress has the power to do this, but by this bill Congress divests itself of its rights, and it is much better for Congress to retain its rights than to regain them afterwards when an emergency arises. It is much better in legislation to do the right thing at the start than to do the wrong thing and then undo it afterwards. We should follow the Constitution in making a reapportionment, and then there will be no trouble or complications.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has 11 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Connecticut 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to take the little time that my friend has allotted me to state my own position. If the Seventy-first Congress were in session, and the results of the census of 1930 had been reported to Congress and it were engaged in passing reapportionment legislation, I should expect to vote to restrain the membership of the House to the present number of 435, and do so despite the fact that my own State in all probability would suffer a loss of one Member. So my vote in opposition to this bill is not determined by the circumstance that the State of Virginia, if it is enacted, may be reduced from a membership of 10 to a membership of 9.

My opposition to the measure is based upon two main considerations. First, I can not find in the Constitution any warrant at all for the belief that it was intended that Congress should provide a reapportionment in advance of the census being actually made and reported, because, as suggested a while ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELSH], it is conceivable that conditions might thereby be developed which would affect the judgment of Congress as to what the membership should be. That is one reason why I can not bring myself to support the bill.

The other reason is that I do not believe those who framed the Constitution ever intended that reapportionment should be made the subject of anticipatory legislation; that Congress should set up a system, not only involving a final conclusion in advance as to what should be the basis of membership following the next census, but the number of Members to be elected throughout the future. I do not believe they ever dreamed that Congress would hobble itself by taking any such course. As suggested during the debate, if this legislation is passed it will remain on the statute book through all time unless there is repeal legislation enacted. It may not be found objectionable at once. Four hundred and thirty-five Members may be sufficient now, as the distinguished Speaker of the House thinks, and I agree with him, but 20 years from now, 30 years from now, 40 years from now the conditions in the country may be such that a larger number would be justified, and the number could not be increased without legislation, requiring, of course, the approval of the President, and a presidential veto might make it impossible. [Applause.]

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON].

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me there is only one thing to consider, and that is, Do we care to go on record in favor of an apportionment bill? As is usual there is always excuses found for opposing a piece of legislation. At the present time, as we heard in the former session of Congress, the excuse in opposition is that it is not constitutional. And also to-day they have brought in a new excuse that the Secretary of Commerce might not, because he had the "flu," or for some other reason, get the report of the census to us, or his messenger might fall by the wayside or be kidnaped. There are two things in this measure upon which this House is expressing itself. It is not abrogating any power. The House expresses itself as in favor of a membership of 435, and furthermore it is expressing itself as to how that apportionment shall be made.

Now, gentlemen, it seems to me that it is time for us to make up for our dereliction of days gone by and pass this bill, and let the country know that we are standing on the Constitution in this body. It is to be regretted, and I sympathize with the States whose urban population is increasing faster than the rural population.

It is to be regretted, perhaps, that there is this shifting of the population of the country to our great cities like the city which in part I represent, because the shifting in the State of Michigan is toward the metropolitan district of Detroit, at the expense of the other districts, but that is a situation that we can not correct here. It is the situation that is going to exist more and more, and the only question before us is, Do we want to see an effective body of 435 Members, or a body that will become so large that it will not efficiently function? I believe there are enough votes in this House at this time to pass this bill. This may not be perfect, as has been said, but it is a piece of legislation that is a step in the right direction, and each one of us should vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD].

Mr. MCLEOD. Mr. Chairman, this occasion marks the sixth time a reapportionment bill has been before the House since 1920. In a century and a half of American history the Congress has never before failed to perform its reapportionment duty as laid down in the Constitution.

Now, in the ninth year following the census of 1920 we succeed in getting a reapportionment bill before the House which has a good prospect of passage. But this bill does not operate under the census of 1920. So long has the performance of this duty been delayed and postponed that it is no longer feasible to reapportion under the census of 1920. With a new census only one year away, it would be useless and foolish to reapportion on the basis of a census nine years old, especially when the dates of elections and other considerations make it impossible for any apportionment, whatever the basis, to take effect until after the next census will have been completed.

There is only one consideration, and in principle that is an exceedingly strong one, which would make it desirable to reapportion now under the census of 1920, even at this late date in the decennial period, if such action were not precluded by the aforementioned practical reasons; that consideration is one of precedent.

By providing now for reapportionment on the basis of the 1930 census, we are attempting to retrieve the honor and respectability of the Congresses sitting between the years 1920 and 1928 with regard to the census of 1920. Those Congresses have perpetrated a great wrong, a crime against the Constitution. Those who oppose reapportionment have set themselves up as superior to the Constitution, from which they derived their own authority, by not obeying the mandate to reapportion Congress every 10 years.

I have been a Member of the House throughout most of this period of which I have been speaking. I know that the lapse of duty on the part of Congress was accomplished over the vigorous protests of many individual Members. I will say that individually there is not a finer or more conscientious man living than most of those who guide the public affairs of the Nation here in the Halls of Congress. Yet collectively these same men have succumbed to a condition which has made a large blot on the otherwise shining shield of Congress. I would not say that anyone is particularly culpable, yet, all things considered, there is no denying that Congress has failed to abide by the Constitution.

Such uninvited and unwelcome lassitude in Congress must be the result of new conditions or the operation of new forces in our national life over which up to the present time we have had no control. If these new conditions or forces were capable of forcing the abandonment of the 1920 census, thereby jeopardizing the continued progress of representative government, it is time we analyzed carefully the characteristics of this new monster and learn how to combat it. If it should defeat this bill before us to-day and Congress would be forced to let reapportionment go over until after the census of 1930, there are many sober-minded men who believe that nothing short of revolution could restore representative government to the people. If the fact that 11 States would lose representation under the census of 1920 can force a delay or abandonment of the reapportionment principle of the Constitution for 10 years, then the taking of a census which shows that 17 States would lose representation, among them some of the most powerful in the Union, can only make matters infinitely worse. The future is dark indeed if we can not overcome self-interest for the sake of the common welfare of our country.

It has been said that reapportionment has been delayed because the census of 1920 was not accurate, because the Congress could not agree whether the size of the House should be further increased or not, because the reapportionment bill offered was an attempt to bind a future Congress, because the bill was anticipatory legislation, because the bill delegated powers.

The reapportionment bill which is offered is not unconstitutional in any particular, and the features of it which are novel in the construction of a reapportionment bill were deliberately made so, because a majority agreed that such innovations were necessary to meet new conditions. If the bill which the committee has reported does not meet the approval of the House in every particular, it can be amended, and the Congress, as well as the country, must abide by the will of the majority. This is in accordance with our plan of government. But the thing which can not be reconciled with American sense of justice and of government by the people is that Congress should be content to go year after year without passing any reapportionment bill.

Whenever these spurious arguments against the constitutionality or the wisdom or the justice or the necessity of any particular bill succeeded temporarily, we have dropped the subject like a hot iron, and Congress has closed its eyes to the greater injustice and the greater unwisdom of ignoring the first principle written into our Constitution. What we should have done and what we must do now is to remain at the task of restoring representation in proportion to population until we accomplish it. Let all else wait. Ordinary legislation is of less importance than the preservation of the foundation of our Government. Just as it was necessary in the beginning to call a constitutional convention and invest a document of fundamental principles with the solemn approval of the sovereign people before a Congress could legislate even for the necessities of national life, so it is necessary to-day to observe fundamentals before attempting to perform the routine duties of the Nation's business.

When the Revolutionary War turned into glorious victory, the Continental Congress sought to raise money to pay the expense of the Government. While the heroic American Army under General Washington, on the verge of riot due to misunderstanding, waited, or rather growled impatiently for their pay, even for food and clothing and the right to go home to their families and their farms, Congress could not legislate for them because it had not the authority. Could there have been any greater necessity than that? Yet the stalwart Americans who founded this country believed in principle above life, above property, above everything else. They had fought a war to establish the truth of the principle of "government only with the consent of the governed." Therefore—come riot, come what might—the Continental Congress steadfastly held to the principle that before governing the people the legislature must first get the consent of the governed through a constitutional convention.

The very first condition upon which the Americans of Revolutionary days consented to be governed by Congress was that they should have Representatives in the governing body in proportion to their numbers in the several States. This condition is evidenced by Article I, section 2, of the Constitution. Have we kept faith with them? Can we justify Congress in the least for setting aside the question of reapportionment to discuss routine legislation? No. Not even for all the appropriation bills necessary to run the Government. Reapportionment is the most fundamental thing in American government. It is entitled to come first and must be kept first.

Many things are important which do not partake of the nature of fundamental law. It is very important that appropriation bills be passed with precision in order to provide in advance for the operation of the governmental agencies in an orderly fashion during the coming year. But is it not of far greater consequence whether we have a representative republican government or an oligarchy? Is it not of far greater consequence that we avoid throwing the country into a system of rotten boroughs and gerrymanders which might bring about destructive civil strife? Is it not of far greater consequence to preserve the ideal of justice and equality in government than it is to gratify some desire for temporary material advantage?

Perhaps in the future the portions of the population whose Representatives have sacrificed everything to their selfish interests in insisting upon keeping every one of their Representatives in the face of population changes may have occasion to call upon the principle of abstract justice. They may not always be on the side of might; they should recognize the right.

The States of California, Michigan, Ohio, Connecticut, New Jersey, North Carolina, Texas, and Washington have not set up their selfish interests against the selfish interests of their opponents. They have called attention rather to the necessity of abiding by the rules laid down in the Constitution to preserve order and promote the common welfare.

Between matters of narrow local interest, general rules of government must necessarily operate to the disadvantage of some and the advantage of others. But such local advantages are short lived and in a few years may be completely reversed. They should not be the means of fomenting permanent discord. So long as we are satisfied that the general rules of government are founded in truth and justice, we should submit to them willingly, even though in a narrow sense it goes against our interests. In a broader sense the best interest of anyone or any group is to preserve the Constitution. If we revert to the law of the jungle, only the strongest will survive, regardless of right and justice. He who is stronger to-day may be weaker to-morrow.

The above-named States, by their Representatives, have repeatedly come to Congress and stated their case with admirable patience and forbearance. They have pointed to the census of their populations taken by an impartial and disinterested enumerator. They have called attention to the fundamental law that Representatives shall be apportioned among the States every 10 years in proportion to their respective numbers. They have asked Congress to reapportion the Representatives accordingly. They have now suffered the discrimination against them to continue for one entire decennial period. They demand that reapportionment be made and that the law also include provisions for doing away with such criminal neglect of duty in the future as Congress has been guilty of since 1920.

Daniel Webster, as early as 1832, stated with characteristic force and aptitude the problem of reapportionment. Speaking on the apportionment bill of that year, he said:

> This bill, like all laws on the same subject, must be regarded as of an interesting and delicate nature. It respects the distribution of political power among the States of the Union. It is to determine the number of voices which, for 10 years to come, each State is to possess in the popular branch of the legislature. In the opinion of the committee, there can be few or no questions which it is more desirable should be settled on just, fair, and satisfactory principles than this; * * *.
>
> Representatives are to be apportioned among the States according to their respective numbers; and direct taxes are to be apportioned by the same rule. The end aimed at, is, that representation and taxation should go hand in hand. But between the apportionment of Representatives and the apportionment of taxes there necessarily exists one essential difference. Representation, founded on numbers, must have some limit; and, being from its nature a thing not capable of indefinite subdivision, it can not be made precisely equal.
>
> The Constitution, therefore, must be understood, not as enjoining an absolute relative equality—because that would be demanding an impossibility—but as requiring of Congress to make the apportionment of Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers, as near as may be.
>
> Congress is not absolved from all rule, merely because the rule of perfect justice can not be applied.

The foregoing statements of the great Webster are as true in condemnation of failure to pass any apportionment bill as they are in opposition to one at variance with the rule of the Constitution in some particular.

That the time-honored methods of securing apportionments were not satisfactory is amply attested by historical documents. The methods of Government must, like all other branches of human activity, keep pace with the advancement of learning and developments in up-to-date practice, if they are to survive. Modern conditions require that some schemes be devised and adopted by Congress which will insure: First, that Representatives will be apportioned; second, that the apportionment will be equitable and proportionate to numbers, as near as may be; and third, that the House shall be kept within the limits of a reasonable and practicable size.

The bill before the House meets these requirements. By providing for an automatic apportionment according to a fixed rule after each census, prompt apportionment is assured, at the same time affording the House ample opportunity to change the rule by affirmative action after any particular census that it desires. The rule of calculation is the same which has been used in the recent past with satisfaction. Since it has been agreed upon in advance of the census and must be applied with mathematical exactness in each case, it can not conceivably result in partiality to any State or group of States. Lastly it represents the only practicable scheme for accomplishing apportionment, and at the same time keeping the House from further exceeding the limits of desirable size. The experience of years has proved that once a census is taken and political expediency becomes the ruling force, no reapportionment bill which meets the three aforementioned requirements can be enacted, except upon the principles of this bill.

During the course of debate on this bill, there has been in the House evidence of what John Quincy Adams once called "the instinctive expedient of unsteady minds." That is, we have been treated to the spectable of some Members professing to be for reapportionment, but at the same time against every measure proposed for carrying it out.

We have here a bill which is the best that your committee can devise, presumably. I would say that the committee has given its best efforts to the matter. It is unquestionably a good bill. In comparison with the hit-or-miss methods of selecting a basis for apportionment on past occasions, this bill is a model of scientific accuracy and impartiality. Moreover, it is modern enough to meet the new conditions brought about by the controversy over the size of the House. In my opinion, all the House needs now is the same degree of perseverance and determination to see an apportionment bill passed, that Members of Congress had in the early days of American history.

To illustrate the perseverance to which I allude, I would like to describe briefly the procedure in the House, upon the apportionment bill of 1842. The bill was reported on January 22, 1842, specifying a ratio of 63,000 to each Member. A debate of two hours was started. Representative Johnson moved to recommit the bill to a committee of one Member from each State; but the motion prevailed to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and make it the special order of the day for the first Tuesday of February, and every succeeding day till the passage of the bill.

When the bill was called up, the committee ratio was stricken out and 59 different substitutes were moved by 82 different Members on the same day; 6 more substitute numbers on the following day. The bill was debated intermittently, as the special order of business until the 3d of May, 1842, when it was taken from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and passed by the House. I might add that this was the occasion when the requirement that the States elect their Representatives by districts was apparently first enacted. It was the first time major fractions were counted as entitling a State to an additional Representative.

How are we to act in the light of such zeal for prompt reapportionment? Certainly we should not be content to vote once upon a bill each session and then dismiss the subject indefinitely. We can justify no action except perseverance at reapportionment until a bill is passed.

The debates upon the question of reapportionment have always been among the most severe and acrimonious. Had it not been for the fact that prior to 1920 the House has always resorted to the unhappy expedient of increasing the number of Representatives to whatever proportions was necessary to overcome the opposition, it is more than likely that an impasse would have been encountered years ago.

As a further commentary upon the importance of reapportionment and the historic methods of accomplishing it, let me quote from the Memoirs of John Quincy Adams, in which Adams gives an account of the debates upon the apportionment bill of 1832, which occurred while he was a Member of the House, subsequent to his term as President of the United States:

January 10, 1832: Polk, of Tennessee, called up the bill for the apportionment of representation under the Fifth Census. It was referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Michael Hoffman in the chair. The bill was reported with the ratio of representation fixed at 48,000. A motion was made by Robert Crain, of Virginia, to strike out 48,000 without proposing to insert any other number. This gave rise to a long debate on a point of order, which grew into a snarl, till near 4 o'clock, when the House adjourned.

January 12, 1832: The apportionment bill was taken up in the Committee of the Whole. Howard made his speech for postponing the operation of the new apportionment bill till after the next presidential and congressional elections. He met no support. Armstrong of Pennsylvania, Kerr, Craig, Polk, Beardsley, spoke successively against it, till at last McDuffie rose and begged that gentlemen would make no more speeches on that side. If there was another Member in the House who thought with the mover of the amendment, he should be happy to hear him; but as it was apparent there would not be 10 votes in the House to sustain the motion, it was to be hoped nothing more would be said against it. Howard was more abashed with this short speech than by all the arguments against him, and withdrew his motion. J. W. Taylor then moved 59,000—lost; then 53,000—lost; Craig moved 51,000—lost; Letcher, of Kentucky, moved 47,000—lost; 46,000 was also lost. The bill was then reported to the House without amendment. Wickliffe moved that it should be recommitted to a select committee of one member from each State, with instructions to strike out 48,000 and to leave the number in blank. The House then adjourned about 4.

January 30, 1832: The apportionment bill was taken up. Wickliffe's proposition to recommit the bill to a committee of 24, 1 from each State, with instructions to strike out 48,000 and leave blank, was rejected by yeas and nays—114 to 76. Mr. Hubbard then moved to strike out 48 and insert 44. This was last and desperate chance. Wickliffe advised him not to specify the inserting number, because, he said, he would certainly lose it. But Hubbard insisted. As the question was about to be taken, Burges moved an adjournment, which was carried. The number 48,000 is so entrenched in the bill that it is obviously impossible to dislodge it.

January 31, 1832: The apportionment bill was taken up. On motion to strike out 48,000, Slade made a long and sensible speech; Arnold, Kerr, Wilde short ones. The yeas and nays were taken—94 for and 99 against striking out. Hubbard then moved to strike out 48,000 and insert 44,500, upon which Wilde moved and carried an adjournment.

February 1, 1832: The hour expired and the apportionment bill was called up. Hubbard replied at some length to the arguments against his motion; Sutherland and McCarty of Indiana spoke against him. I received a note in pencil from the Speaker, urging me to sum up in reply. It was 4 o'clock and great impatience in the House for the question. I made a very short and incoherent speech, saying not half what I intended and omitting several most forcible positions, which occurred to me after it was all over. I recurred to the Constitution and to a calculation showing that the committee which fixed the ratio at 48,000 had taken special care of their own States. It brought up Barstow, of New York, to vindicate himself, and Polk to refute my positions. The question was taken by yeas and nays and carried—98 to 96—to strike out 48,000 and insert 44,000. Polk then told me that he would give up the question. Holland, of Maine, who was on the committee, came to me with a calculation to show that Maine was better off with 44,000 than with 48,000. Evans had been all along with us and spoke this day for 44,000. Wickliffe thanked me for my calculations and said he had intended to present the same himself. Cambrelong congratulated me upon our success. I had despaired of the vote and was overjoyed at the event. The whole bill was to be modified in conformity to the change in the ratio, and the House adjourned at half past 4. I rode home rejoicing, though much dissatisfied with my own performance.

February 2, 1832: The hour expired and the apportionment bill was taken up. Mr. McKennan moved a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday. The vote of reconsideration was taken, and prevailed by 100 to 94. Two or three were absent who voted with us yesterday and there were two or three deserters. The reconsideration placed the bill just where it was before the vote was taken yesterday; that is, it restored the number 48,000, with the motion of Mr. Hubbard to strike it out and insert 44,000. Allan, of Kentucky, moved to recommit the bill with instructions to reduce the ratio so that the number of the House would not exceed 200 Members. He asked the yeas and nays; rejected. The House then adjourned. Mr. Burges told me that the reconsideration of this day was the effect of interference by some of the Senators.

February 8, 1832: The apportionment bill was taken up. The question upon Mr. Kerr's motion to strike out 48,000 and insert 44,000 as the ratio was about to be taken by yeas and nays, and as it appeared to be the last opportunity for pressing the smaller number, I again addressed the House in a very confused and ill-digested speech, presenting, however, some considerations which had not been touched and recurring particularly to the journal of the convention of 1787 to show the principles upon which the representation had been established in the Constitution.

As usual, I omitted half what I had intended to say and blundered in what I did say. I was answered at some length by Coulter, of Pennsylvania; Clay, of Alabama; and Polk, of Tennessee; and sustained by Wayne, of Georgia, and Letcher, of Kentucky, who tried with success the good effect of joking. The question was taken by yeas and nays and resulted in a tie—97 for and 97 against. The Speaker decided in favor of the change, and for the second time we carried our vote. But we could not get the bill engrossed. Taylor moved to recommit the bill, instructions to strike out 44,400 and insert 53,000, and took the yeas and nays. His motion was rejected. McDuffie moved that the bill should be engroseed; but Mitchell, of South Carolina, moved to adjourn, and it was carried. So we shall lose it again to-morrow.

February 9, 1832: The apportionment bill was taken up, and motion upon motion was made to strike out the numbers of 44,400 agreed upon yesterday, and the yeas and nays were taken six or seven times. A call of the House was demanded, and they prevailed upon Clayton, of Georgia, to move a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday, and then the House adjourned.

February 14, 1832: The apportionment bill was then taken up. Mr. Clayton withdrew his motion for a reconsideration of the motion by which 44,400 had been adopted as the ratio. Evans of Maine's motion to reduce the ratio to 44,300 was then carried by yeas and nays, after which Polk, the chairman of the committee which had reported the bill, moved a recommitment of the bill, with instructions to strike out 44,300 and insert 47,700.

The effect of this was to give an additional Member to each of the three States of Georgia, Kentucky, and New York, and it bought the votes of a sufficient number of the delegations of those States to carry the majority. It had been settled out of doors, like everything else upon this bill. It prevailed by yeas and nays—104 to 91.

February 15, 1832: I passed an entirely sleepless night. The iniquity of the apportionment bill and the disreputable means by which so partial and unjust a distribution of the representation had been effected agitated me so that I could not close my eyes. I was all night meditating in search of some device, if it were possible, to avert the heavy blow from the State of Massachusetts and from New England. I drew up this morning a short paper to show to the Members of the Pennsylvania delegation, appealing to their justice and generosity as umpires upon this question. Walking up to the Capitol I met Mr. Webster and spoke to him upon the subject. He said he would make a dead set against the bill in the Senate.

In the House the bill was taken up * * *. When the report was received an amendment was moved to substitute 45,500 for 47,700. McDuffie moved the previous question upon the plea of saving time and useless debate, but he could not carry it * * *. Many numbers, down to 42,000 and up to 59,000, were moved and rejected; and, lastly, the number reported by the committee, 47,700, was adopted and the bill ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. I hung my harp upon the willow.

Thus former President John Quincy Adams resigns himself to what he believed were the iniquities of an unjust apportionment bill. The thing which is most striking about the early proceedings just described, is that while all the Members felt very keenly on the subject, and although it was customary then to settle the actual ratio of the bill by taking innumerable votes in the House, as well as in the committee, they made reapportionment the special order of business and stayed at it until a bill was agreed upon.

Adams was a contemporary of the men who wrote the Constitution and who started our theories of government in practice in America. The relative importance of apportionment in his mind, and the minds of his contemporaries, is clearly shown in the fullness of his notes. He was a former President of the United States, which gives peculiar significance to his utterance that the inequity of the apportionment laws filled him with dark forebodings for the future of the Republic.

On March 1, 1832, Adams had said:

> I should hope that a great and inveterate defect in the apportionment laws might be remedied. I would not prematurely despair of the Republic, but my forebodings are dark, and the worst of them is in contemplating the precipice before us.

In spite of their strong State loyalties and disagreements, our predecessors of 1832 never delayed the duty of reapportionment more than two years from the date of the census. They would have been horrified indeed, and filled with forebodings even darker than John Quincy Adams's, had they ever contemplated passing one entire decennial census without a reappportionment.

If we are not to confess that the passage of time since 1787 has weakened the American passion for justice and debased our conception of the relative value of things, we must of necessity give some thought to principles of government.

In my opinion, the time is not far distant when a new spirit will be injected into the proceedings of Congress. The lines of thought of men of vision will lead to the necessity of setting up, if not a party, then a group in Congress—a bloc, if you please—which will at all times give first consideration to the fundamental principles of the Constitution.

Such a group might be called a constitutionalist party, because it would have the principal qualification for a great national party, namely, adherence to a set of principles of government. Its duty would be not to seek additional amendments to the Constitution but rather to prevent the enactment of proposed amendments which are foreign to basic principles of government, to keep alive the thoughts and plans embodied in the original covenant, the most promising historic governmental document ever recorded. The duty of such a party would be to prevent the waning away of the Constitution through improper teaching or lack of teaching; to purge the supreme law of matters which are properly only subject matter for mere legislation.

The constantly growing tendency to place everything in the Constitution is evidence of a growing deficiency in moral courage. What we can not do by our own strength we seek to unload upon the shoulders of the Constitution. Such weakness and shortsightedness can result only in disaster. What is the good of having a supreme law of the land if every group and faction succeeds in borrowing its dignity in a vain effort to enforce universal respect for some particular pet rule of social conduct, which by comparison is of trivial importance. Under such conditions there would soon be no respect for any part of the Constitution. As a matter of fact, I think the apathy toward the violation of Article I of the Constitution can largely be attributed to overloading the document with heavy-handed foreign characteristics in the amendments. A supreme law to live and guide a country to a great destiny must be confined to things of supreme importance. [Applause.]

The following information is a complete bibliography of the subject of apportionment of Members of the House of Representatives, prepared at my request by the Library of Congress:

APPORTIONMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

A LIST OF REFERENCES

1. [Adams, Charles Francis.] The papers of James Madison * * * published * * * under the supervision of Henry D. Gilpin. [Review.] North American review, July, 1841, v. 53: 41–75. AP2.N7, v. 53. Pages 57–59 are devoted to representation and apportionment. The necessity of districting a State is touched upon.

2. Adams, John Quincy. Account of the proceedings in the House on resolves of the Massachusetts Legislature of 23d March, 1843, proposing an amendment to the Constitution making the representation of the people in the House proportional to the number of free persons. (In Memoirs of John Quincy Adams, edited by Charles F. Adams. Philadelphia, J. B. Lippincott and co., 1876–77. v. 11, p. 455–458, 462, 464, 472, 473, 480, 481, 482, 499, 503, 509, 511, 512, 532, 533, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543; v. 12, p. 3–7, 12, 13.) E377.A19, v. 11, 12.

3. —— The apportionment bill of 1832. (In Memoirs of John Quincy Adams, edited by Charles F. Adams. Philadelphia, J. B. Lippincott and co., 1876. v. 8, p. 455, 460–461, 463–464, 465–472, 474, 483.) E377.A19, v. 8.

4. —— The apportionment bill of 1842. (In Memoirs of John Quincy Adams. Philadelphia, J. B. Lippincott and co., 1876. v. 11, p. 68, 138, 139, 141–148, 175–179, 189, 194, 199.) E377.A19, v. 11.

5. Alexander, De Alva Stanwood. History and procedure of the House of representatives * * * Boston and New York, Houghton Mifflin company, 1916. 435 p. JK1316.A3. "Apportionment and qualification of members": p. 3–11. Footnote references are given.

6. American statistical association. Report upon the apportionment of representatives. Its Journal, Dec., 1921, v. 17: 1004–1013. HA1.A6. v. 17.

7. Anthony, Henry Bowen. Defense of Rhode Island, her institutions, and her right to her representatives in Congress. Speech * * * in the Senate of the United States, February, 1881. Washington, 1881. 35 p. JK1936.R4A5.

Also in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 46th Congress, 3d sess., v. 11, pt. 2, pp. 1490–1499.

8. Apportionment of representatives. Independent, Nov. 8, 1900, v. 52: 2654. AP2.I53, v. 52.

Discusses briefly the influence of various ratios on the apportionment.

9. Boutell, Lewis Henry. Roger Sherman in the Federal convention. (In American historical association. Annual report, 1893, pp. 231–247. Washington, 1894.) E172.A60, 1893.

Describes Sherman's relation to the compromise whereby the states obtained equal representation in the Senate, while the representatives in the House were apportioned according to population.

Substantially the same material is given in the same author's "Life of Roger Sherman," 1896, as chap. 8, "The constitutional convention."

10. Busey, Samuel Clagett. Immigration, its evils and consequences. * * * New York, De Witt and Davenport [1856] 162 p. JV6451.B9.

Chapter XI, "Present political power of foreign votes," contains a discussion of apportionment of representation in Congress.

11. Congress evades reapportionment. Literary digest, v. 92, Feb. 19, 1927: 13. AP2.L58, v. 92.

12. Congress must be reapportioned on basis of 1920 census figures. Brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen's magazine, Oct. 15, 1920, v. 69: 19. HD6350.R35B8, v. 69.

13. Congress refuses to reapportion. American review of reviews, Apr., 1928, v. 77: 339. AP2.R7, v. 77.

14. Congressmen dodge reapportionment. Literary digest, v. 89, Apr. 24, 1926: 12. AP2.L58, v. 89.

15. Congressional reapportionment. Public opinion, Nov. 29, 1900, v. 29: 675. AP2.P9, v. 29.

16. Congressional reapportionment—the arguments against increasing size of House. Commercial and financial chronicle, Oct. 15, 1921, v. 113: 1620–1622. HG1.C7, v. 113.

17. Cox, Samuel S. Union-disunion-reunion. Three decades of federal legislation. 1855 to 1885. Personal and historical memories of events preceding, during, and since the American civil war, involving slavery and secession, emancipation and reconstruction, with sketches of prominent actors during these periods. * * * Providence, R. I., J. A. and R. A. Reid, 1886. 726 p. E661.C882.

Apportionment under the tenth census, p. 695–697.

18. Crumpacker, Edgar D. Reapportionment of representatives in Congress. Editorial review, Mar. 1911, v. 4: 240–244. AP2.E26, v. 4.

19. Depriving state of representation. Law notes, Feb., 1927, v. 30: 201.

20. Dix, John A. Apportionment of members of Congress. Legislature of New York, 1842. (In his Speeches and occasional addresses. New York, D. Appleton and company, 1864. v. 2, p. 279–317.) E415.6.D6, v. 2.

21. Editorial research reports, Washington, D. C. Apportionment of representation in Congress. Editorial research reports, Washington, D. C. (828 17th St.), Dec. 6, 1927, p. 976–998. Mimeographed.

22. Elliot, Jonathan, ed. The debates, resolutions, and other proceedings, in convention [of the states] on the adoption of the federal Constitution, as recommended by the general convention at Philadelphia, on the 17th of September, 1787; with the yeas and nays on the decision of the main question * * * Washington, The editor, 1827–30. 4 v. JK141 1827.

23. The Federalist. The Federalist, a commentary on the Constitution of the United States; being a collection of essays written in support of the Constitution agreed upon September 17, 1787, by the Federal convention, reprinted from the original text of Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, and James Madison; ed. by Henry Cabot Lodge * * * New York and London, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1902. 586 p. JK154 1902.

No. 54. The apportionment of members among the states, 55–56. The total number of the House of Representatives, 57. The alleged tendency of the new plan to elevate the few at the expense of the many considered in connection with representation, 58. Objection that the number of members will not be augmented as the progress of population demands, considered.

24. Ford, Paul L., ed. Essays on the Constitution of the United States, published during its discussion by the people 1787–1788 * * * Brooklyn, N. Y., Historical printing club, 1892. 424 p. JK171.F72.

The subject of representation is discussed by James Sullivan, Letters of "Cassius," p. 29; James Winthrop, Letters of "Agrippa," pp. 53–54; Oliver Ellsworth, "Letters of a Landholder," p. 151; Roger Sherman, Letters of a "Citizen of New Haven," pp. 236, 240; George Clinton, Letters of "Cato," pp. 268–269; Luther Martin, Letters, pp. 354, 357; Spencer Roane [?], Letter of "a plain dealer," p. 391.

25. Foster, Roger. Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, historical and juridical, with observations upon the ordinary provisions of state constitutions and a comparison with the constitutions of other countries * * * Boston, The Boston book company, 1895. 713 p. JK241.F75.

Chap. VIII. Apportionment of representatives and direct taxes: Constitutional provisions concerning apportionment of representatives and direct taxes; History of the clause concerning the apportionment of representatives and direct taxes; Manner of apportionment; Revision of apportionment by the Courts; The Census.

Appendix to Chap. VIII: Jefferson's opinion on the apportionment of 1792; Webster's report to the Senate on the apportionment of 1832.

26. Franklin, Benjamin. Speech in a committee of the convention; on the proportion of representation and votes. (In The writings of Benjamin Franklin, edited by A. H. Smyth. New York, The Macmillan company, 1906. v. 9, p. 595–599.) E302.F82, v. 9.

The number of representatives should bear some proportion to the number of the represented. Considers the proposal to have the same number of delegates from each state.

27. From 65 to 435. Searchlight, v. 5, Oct. 1920: 5–7. JK1.S4, v. 5.

Gives a table of representation, and the number of Congressmen from 1800–1910.

28. Gannett, Henry. The new congressional apportionment. Forum, Jan., 1901, v. 30: 568–577. AP2.F8, v. 30.

Discusses the effect of a restricted and unrestricted representation on the number of representatives from the several states.

29. Griffith, Elmer C. Congressional representation in South Dakota. Nation, Oct. 30, 1902, v. 75: 343–344. AP2.N2, v. 75.

Explains why S. Dakota has not conformed to the Federal apportionment law directing the districting of the states, but elects members of Congress at large.

30. —— The rise and development of the gerrymander * * * Chicago, Scott, Foresman and company, 1907. 124 p. JK1341.G85.

31. Hamilton, Alexander. Apportionment of representatives. (In The Works of Alexander Hamilton, edited by Henry Cabot Lodge. New York, The Knickerbocker Press, 1904. v. 8, p. 96–100.) E302.H242, v. 8.

Letter to Washington, April 4, 1792; gives an opinion on the constitutionality of the "act for an apportionment of representatives among the several States according to the first enumeration"; regards the question as being whether the ratio of apportionment ought to have been applied to the aggregate numbers of the United States or to the particular numbers of each state, and holds that either course might have been constitutionally pursued.

32. Hasbrouck, Paul De Witt. Party government in the House of representatives. * * * New York, The Macmillan company, 1927. 265 p. JK1316.H3.

Bibliography: p. 247–253. See chapter 3, "House efficiency."

33. Helm, William P., jr. Congress flaunts the Constitution. Washington, D. C., Current news features, Inc., 1926. Four articles, August 9–14, 1926.

34. History of Congress; exhibiting a classification of the proceedings of the Senate and the House of representatives. Vol. I. From March 4, 1789, to March 3, 1793; embracing the first term of the administration of General Washington. Philadelphia, Cary, Lea and Blanchard, 1834. 736 p. J15.A7.

p. 194–217 contains an account of the proceedings in both Houses on the apportionment of representatives under the first census.

35. Hoar, George F. The Connecticut compromise. Roger Sherman, the author of the plan of equal representation of the states in the Senate, and representation of the people in proportion to numbers in the House. * * * Worcester, Mass., Press of C. Hamilton, 1903. 28 p. JK1071.H67.

36. Huntington, Edward V. The mathematical theory of the apportionment of representatives. National academy of sciences of the United States of America. Proceedings, Apr., 1921, v. 7: 123–127. Q11.N26, v. 7.

37. —— The new method of apportionment of representatives. American statistical association. Journal, Sept., 1921, v. 17: 859–870. HA1.A6, v. 17.

38. —— Reapportionment bill in Congress. Science, May 18, 1928, n. s., v. 67: 509–510. Q1.S35, n. s., v. 67.

39. James, E. J. The first apportionment of federal representatives in the United States. American academy of political and social sciences. Annals, Jan., 1897, v. 9: 1–41. H1.A4, v. 9.

40. Jefferson, Thomas. Draft of President's message vetoing apportionment bill. April 5, 1792. (In the writings of Thomas Jefferson, collected and edited by Paul Leicester Ford. New York, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1904. v. 6, p. 471.) E302.J472, v. 6.

41. —— Letter to Archibald Stuart [opposing the apportionment bill]. Philadelphia, March 14, 1792. (In The writings of Thomas Jefferson, collected and edited by Paul Leicester Ford. New York, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1904. v. 6, p. 405–408.) E302.J472, v. 6.

42. —— Letter to President Washington on the apportionment bill. April 4, 1792. (In The works of Alexander Hamilton, edited by John C. Hamilton. New York, John F. Trow, printer, 1851. v. 4, p. 197–206.) E302.H22, v. 4.

43. —— Opinion on the bill apportioning representation. April 4, 1792. (In The writings of Thomas Jefferson, collected and edited by Paul Leicester Ford. New York, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1904. v. 6, p. 460–470.) E302.J472, v. 6.

44. —— Proposed constitution for Virginia. June, 1776. (In The works of Thomas Jefferson, collected and edited by Paul Leicester Ford. New York, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1904. v. 2, p. 158–183.) Basis of apportionment, p. 167. E302.J472, v. 2.

45. —— Recapitulation [of the opinions of the Secretary of State, Secretary of Treasury, Secretary of War, and the Attorney General of the United States on the representation bill]. (In The works of Alexander Hamilton, edited by John C. Hamilton. New York, John F. Trow, printer, 1851. v. 4, p. 213–215.) E302.H22, v. 4.

46. Knox (Henry). Letter to President Washington on the apportionment bill. April 3, 1792. (In The works of Alexander Hamilton, edited by John C. Hamilton. New York, John F. Trow, printer, 1851. v. 4, p. 196–197.) E302.H22, v. 4.

47. Lincoln, G. Gould. The new apportionment of the House. A difficult problem which must be settled by the present Congress. Munsey's magazine, Dec., 1910, v. 44: 347–351. AP2.M8, v. 44.

48. Lodge, Henry Cabot, and T. V. Powderly. The Federal election bill. North American review, Sept., 1890, v. 151: 257–273. AP2.N7, v. 151.

49. Macy, Jesse. Apportionment. (In Cyclopedia of American government, ed. by Andrew C. McLaughlin and Albert B. Hart. New York, D. Appleton and company, 1914. v. 1, p. 55–57.) JK9.C9, v. 1.

"Reference": p. 57.

50. Madison, James. Letter to Charles Francis Adams. Montpellier, Oct. 12, 1835. (In The writings of James Madison, edited by Gaillard Hunt. New York, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1910. v. 9, p. 559–566.) E302.M18, v. 9.

With reference in part to apportioning representation.

51. Madison, James. Letter to Washington. New York, April 16, 1787. (In The writings of James Madison, edited by Gaillard Hunt. New York, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1901. v. 2, p. 344–352.) E302.M18, v. 2.

With reference in part to apportioning representation.

52. —— Letters and other writings. Pub. by order of Congress. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott and Co., 1865. 4 v. E302.M18, v. 1.

"Apportionment," v. 1, p. 544–546, 549, 550, 552, 554.

53. —— The papers of James Madison, purchased by order of Congress; being his correspondence and reports of debates during the Congress of the confederation, and his reports of debates in the Federal convention; now published from the original manuscripts, deposited in the Department of state, by direction of the Joint library committee of Congress, under the superintendence of Henry D. Gilpin. Washington, Langtree, and O'Sullivan, 1840. JK111.M2. 3 v.

See Index, v. 3 under "Apportionment," "Quota," "Proportion," "Representation," "Representatives," "Congress of the Constitution."

54. The new congressional apportionment. Nation, May 29, 1902, v. 74: 419–420. AP2.N2, v. 74.

Analyses the distribution of the gains in apportionment.

55. Ogg, Frederick Austin. The reapportionment of the House. American review of reviews, Feb. 1911, v. 43: 208–211. AP2.R4, v. 43.

56. Owens, F. W. On the apportionment of representatives. American statistical association. Journal, Dec., 1921, v. 17: 958–968. HA1.A6, v. 17.

57. Paxson, Frederic L. Our representatives in Washington: how their number sometimes changes with the growth of the population of the United States, and sometimes doesn't. World review, May 3, 1926, v. 2: 161–162. AP2.W7487, v. 2.

58. Quality not quantity, in the House. Literary digest, v. 68, Feb. 5, 1921: 14. AP2.L58, v. 68.

59. Randolph, Edm. Letter to President Washington on the representation bill. April 4, 1792. (In The works of Alexander Hamilton, edited by John C. Hamilton. New York, John F. Trow, printer, 1851. v. 4, p. 209–213.) E302.H22, v. 4.

60. [The reapportionment bill]. Capitol eye, Jan., 1922, v. 1: 3–7.

Contents.—The Siegel "reapportionment bill": history of the bill.—The House discusses the Siegel "Reapportionment bill": pro and con.—Members of the House discuss "Reapportionment": should the House membership be increased? pro and con.—Wall Street discusses "Reapportionment: should the House membership be increased?" pro and con.

61. Reed, Alfred Z. The Territorial basis of government under the State constitutions, local divisions, and rules for legislative apportionment. * * * New York, Columbia University, Longmans, Green and Co., agents; [etc., etc.] 1911. 250 p. JK2413.R5.

62. Richardson, Hamilton P. The journal of the Federal convention of 1787 analyzed; the acts and proceedings thereof compared; and their precedents cited; in evidence * * * that * * * Congress have general power to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; direct taxes are taxes direct to the several States * * * and the limits of the Union are coextensive with the bounds of America. San Francisco, The Murdock press, 1899. 244 p. JK146.R52.

Rules of representation and direct taxation and the meaning of direct taxation, pp. 59–88, see also p. 120, 198.

63 Root, Elihu. Legislative apportionment. (In Reinsch, Paul S., ed. Readings on American state government. Boston, New York, Ginn and company, 1911. p. 120–126.) JK2408.R5.

From a speech in the New York constitutional convention, 1894.

64. Seavey, Warren A. Unequal representation in Congress. Law notes, Oct., 1920, v. 24: 124–126.

65. Shuman, J. R. The art of gerrymandering. Yale scientific monthly, May, 1911, v. 17: 358–362. Q1.Y17, v. 17.

66. Smith, Robert B. What's the Constitution among friends? Independent, May 8, 1926, v. 116: 542 AP2.153, v. 116.

67. Sumner, Charles. Authorities on right of representation. (In The works of Charles Sumner. Boston, Lee and Shepard, 1880. v. 13, p. 44–46). E415.6.S93, v. 8.

68. —— Hamilton on representation. (In The works of Charles Sumner. Boston, Lee and Shepard, 1876. v. 10, p. 329.) E415.6.S93, v. 10.

69. Thorpe, Francis N. The constitutional history of the United States. * * * 1765–1895. Chicago, Callagghan and co., 1901. 3 v. JK31.T6.

Basis of representation: the Articles of confederation, vol. 1: 221–223; in the first state constitutions, vol. 1, pp. 171–180; discussed in Federal convention, 1787, vol. 1, pp. 315–318, 338, 339, 345–347, 351–356, 373, 382, 405, 408–410, 413, 414, 417, 419, 421–443, 464, 470, 473, 536–539, 592, 593. Fourteenth amendment, v. 3, pp. 261–262, 274. 297.

70. Tucker, John R. The Constitution of the United States. A critical discussion of its genesis, development, and interpretation. * * * Ed. by Henry St. George Tucker. * * * Chicago, Callaghan and co., 1899. 2 v. JK241.T9.

Representation: v. 1, pp. 89–91, 328–337, 395–397, 504. See also "The legislative department," v. 1, chapter 9, and v. 2, chapter 10.

71. Tucker, Ray T. Our delinquent Congress; reapportionment of membership. New Republic, May 26, 1926, v. 47, 11–13. AP2.N624, v. 47.

72. U. S. Bureau of statistics (Dept. of commerce and labor). Apportionment of congressional representation: ratios under the constitution and at each census, 1790–1900, by States. (In its Statistical abstract of the United States, 1905. Washington, 1906. p. 23.) HA202, 1905.

Also in succeeding years.

73. U. S. Bureau of the Census. Apportionment of each number of representatives from 435 up to 483, inclusive, by the method of major fractions. Statistics furnished by S. L. Rogers, director Bureau of census, and confirmed by J. A. Hill, chief statistician. * * * Washington, Govt. print. off., 1920. 21 p. JK1341.A3, 1920. (66th Cong., 3d sess. House. Doc. 918.)

74. U. S. Census office. 10th census, 1880. Apportionment under tenth census of the United States. Tabular statements exhibiting the total population of each state and territory; the apportionment of members of Congress from 293 to 325. * * * Washington, Govt. print. off., 1881. 24 p. JK1341.A3.

75. —— —— 11th census, 1890. Tabular statements exhibiting the population of each state and the apportionment of members of the House of representatives from 332 to 375 under the eleventh census of the United States, 1890. With letter from the superintendent of census to the secretary of the interior, and an appendix relating to the moiety question. Printed at the request of Hon. Mark H. Dunnell, chairman of the House Committee on the eleventh census, for use of committee. Washington, Census printing office, 1890. 32 p. JK1341.A3, 1890.

76. U. S. Congress. House. Committee on the census. Report of hearings on H. J. res. 248 and H. R. 30566 (apportionment bill) before the Committee on the census of the House of representatives, third session, Sixty-first Congress, January 10, 1911. * * * Washington, Govt. print. off., 1911. 20 p. JK1341.A3, 1911.

77. U. S. Congress. House. Committee on the census. Apportionment of representatives. Hearings before the Committee on the census, House of representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, on H. R. 14498, H. R. 15021, H. R. 15158, and H. R. 15217. December 28–29, Jan. 4–5, 1921. Washington, Govt. print. off., 1921. 222 p. JK1341.A3, 1920b.

78. U. S. Congress. House. Committee on the census. Apportionment of representatives. Hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on the census * * * June 27–29, 1921. Washington, Govt. print. off., 1921. 94 p. JK1341.A3 1921a.

79. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives in Congress amongst the several states. Hearings before the Committee on the census, House of representatives, sixty-ninth Congress, first session, on H. R. 111, H. R. 398, H. R. 413, H. R. 3808, February 25, March 4 and 23, 1926. Washington, Govt. print. off., 1926. 62 p. JK1341.A3 1926.

80. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives in Congress amongst the several states. Hearings before the Committee on the census, House of representatives, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, on H. R. 13471, January 10, 19, 28–February 2, 9, 16, 1927. Washington, Govt. print. off., 1927. 4 pts. JK1341.A3 1927.

81. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives. Hearings before the Committee on the census, House of representatives, seventieth Congress, first session, on H. R. 130. February 14, 15, 20, and 21, 1928. Washington, U. S. Govt. print. off., 1928. 94 p. JK1341.A3 1928.

82. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives. * * * Report. (To accompany H. R. 30566.) [Washington, Govt. print. off., 1911.] 73 p. (61st Cong., 3d sess. House. Rept. 1911.) JK1341.A3 1911a.

83. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives. * * * Report. (To accompany H. R. 2983.) [Washington, Govt. print. off., 1911.] 108 p. (62d Cong., 1st sess. House. Rept. 12.) JK1341.A3 1911b.

84. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives. * * * Report. (To accompany H. R. 7882.) * * * [Washington, Govt. print. off., 1921.] 41 p. (67th Cong., 1st sess. House. Rept. 312.) JK1341.A3 1921.

Submitted by Mr. Siegel. "Views of the minority" (p. 35–36), signed: Louis W. Fairfield, Henry E. Barbour, W. W. Larsen, S. M. Brinson, Morgan G. Sanders, John J. McSwain.

"Dissenting views of Representative John J. McSwain": p. 37–41.

85. —— —— —— Apportionment of representatives. * * * Report. (To accompany H. R. 11725.) * * * [Washington, U. S. Govt. print. off., 1928.] 12 p. (70th Cong., 1st sess. House. Rept. 1137.) JK1341.A3 1928b.

Submitted by Mr. Fenn. Referred to the House calendar and ordered printed April 4, 1928.

"Minority views" (p. 12), signed: J. E. Rankin [and others].

86. —— Senate. Committee on the census. Apportionment of representatives. * * * Report. (To accompany H. R. 2983.) [Washington, Govt. print. off., 1911.] 108 p. (62d Cong., 1st sess. Senate. Rept. 94.) JK1341.A3 1911c.

87. U. S. Constitutional convention, 1787. The journal of the debates in the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, May–September, 1787, as recorded by James Madison; ed. by Gaillard Hunt * * * New York and London, G. P. Putnam's sons, 1908. 2 v. JK141 1908.

Consult index under "Legislature, Representation in."

88. U. S. Library of Congress. Legislative reference service. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. [Washington, D. C., n. d.] 5 p. Typewritten.

89. ——— Bills proposed for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several states under the fourteenth census—and the legislative history of each measure. [Washington, D. C.] January 10, 1924. 7 p. Typewritten.

90. ——— A brief chronological summary of Congressional activity relative to apportionment of Representatives from March 4, 1789, to March 4, 1925. [Washington, D. C.] May 13, 1925. 12 p. Typewritten.

91. ——— Citations to Congressional debates concerning the apportionment of members of Congress from first to 67th Congress. [Washington, D. C.] June 27, 1923. 3 p. Typewritten.

92. ——— Congress and the right of reapportionment. [Washington, D. C.] March 9, 1928. 6 p. Typewritten.

93. U. S. Library of Congress. Legislative reference service. Legislative history of apportionment bills. [Washington, D. C.] July 12, 1928. Typewritten.

94. ——— Movement for reduction of representation of the Southern States in Congress. [Washington, D. C.] June 12, 1925. 3 p. Typewritten.

95. ——— Proposed legislation relative to the apportionment of Representatives under the fourteenth census. [Washington, D. C.] March 20, 1928. 6 p. Typewritten.

96. ——— Speeches delivered in the United States Congress against limiting the apportionment of Represenatives in Congress (1791–1921). [Washington, D. C.] June 11, 1928. 13 p. Typewritten.

97. Vote against increasing the membership of the House of representatives in Congress. Commercial and financial chronicle, Jan. 22, 1921, v. 112: 301–302. HG1.C7, v. 112.

98. Webster, Daniel. Apportionment of representation. (In The writings and speeches of Daniel Webster. National edition. Boston, Little, Brown and co., 1903. v. 6, p. 102–123.) E337.8.W24 1903.

A reprint of "A report on the subject of the apportionment of Representation, in the House of Representatives of the United States, made in the Senate, on the 5th of April, 1832."

"The object of the following report is to set forth the unjust operation of the rule by which the apportionment of Representatives had hitherto been made among the States, and was proposed to be made under the Fifth Census. * * * In making provision for the apportionment under the census of 1850, the principles of this report prevailed. By the act of the 23d of May, 1850, it is provided that the number of the new House shall be 233. The entire representative population of the United States is to be divided by this sum; and the quotient is the ratio of apportionment among the several States. Their representative population is in turn to be divided by this ratio; and the loss of members arising from the residuary numbers is made up by assigning as many aditional members as are necessary for that purpose to the States having the largest fractional remainders."

99. What's the Constitution between friends? decennial reapportionment. Collier's, v. 77, May 22, 1926: 21. AP2.C65, v. 77.

100. Willcox, Walter F. Apportionment of Representatives. American economic review, Mar., 1916, v. 6, supp.: 3–16. HB1.E26, v. 6, sup.

101. ——— Apportionment of Representatives; reply to Edward V. Huntington. Science, June 8, 1928, n. s., v. 67: 581–582. Q1.S35, n. s., v. 67.

102. [———] Tables for the apportionment of representatives among the several states under the thirteenth decennial census. [Washington, Govt. print. off., 1911.] 38 p. JK1341.W5.

103. Williams, Talcott. Apportionment. (In Lalor, John J., ed. Cyclopaedia of political science. * * * New York, Maynard, Merrill and co., 1899. v. 1, p. 102–111.) H41.L22, v. 1.

SPEECHES IN CONGRESS

(The compilations of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress will serve as guides to debates on the various apportionment measures. Speeches beginning with those in the Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, are noted here)

66th Congress, 3d session, v. 60 (current file)

104. Aswell, James B. The reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1689–1691.

105. Barbour, Henry E. Apportionment of representatives. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 current file): 1695–1696. Also printed separately.

106. Bee, Carlos. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1692–1694.

107. Black, Eugene. The present membership of 435 is large enough. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1704–1705.

108. Blanton, Thomas L. Decrease the membership of the House instead of increasing it. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1697–1698.

109. Brinson, Samuel M. Some of the disadvantages attached to the proposed increase of the membership of the House. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1691–1692.

110. Caraway, Thaddeus H. Why should the House membership be increased? Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1704.

111. Clark, Champ. Proposed reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1700–1701.

112. Esch, John J. The people of the States are not so much interested in the number of their members as in the efficiency of their members. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1701–1702.

113. Fairfield, Louis W. There is no reason why the size of the House should be increased. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1688–1689.

114. Fess, Simeon D. Representation. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1707.

115. Gard, Warren. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, part 2 (bound file): 1651.

116. Garrett, Finis J. I shall vote for the proposition to retain the membership at the number as at present fixed. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1706–1707.

117. Glynn, James P. A House of 435 Members is precisely as representative as one of 483. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1702.

117a. Greene, Frank L. Proportionate representation. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1702.

118. Hardy, Rufus. The proposed reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1698–1699.

119. Hersey, Ira G. Shall the House of Representatives cease to be a representative body? Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 37 (current file): 1845–1847.

119a. Humphreys, Benjamin G. The Constitution apportions Representatives among the several States according to population. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1699–1700.

120. Johnson, Paul B. Is Mississippi representation in the House of Representatives to be reduced on erroneous calculations? Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 42 (current file): 2150–2151.

Also published separately.

121. Kennedy, Ambrose. Apportionment of Representatives. Speech in the House, Jan. 19, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 36 (current file): 1794.

122. Little, Edward C. The probable effect of the proposed apportionment legislation upon the man at home. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1702–1703.

123. Longworth, Nicholas. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1708.

124. Longworth, Nicholas. Reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Jan. 19, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 36 (current file): 1796–1797.

125. McArthur, Clifton N. Congressional reapportionment. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1698–1699. Also printed separately.

126. McKenzie, John C. In my judgment the addition of 48 or any other number to the membership of the House would be adding a needless burden to the now heavily taxed people of the country. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1700.

127. McLeod, Clarence J. Increased Representatives and the ex-service man's needs. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1694.

128. Madden, Martin B. I am opposed to an increase in the membership of the House at this time. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1707.

129. Peters, John A. Principles of representation in Congress. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file): 1705–1706. Also published separately.

130. Milligan, Jacob L. Reapportionment bill. Extension of remarks in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, part 5 (bound file) : 4692.

131. Quin, Percy E. I am for the 483 Congressmen to represent the increased population. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file) : 1701.

132. Siegel, Isaac. Apportionment of Representatives. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35 (current file) : 1687–1688.

133. Sims, Thetus W. Increase of the membership of the House of Representatives. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, part 2 (bound file) : 1635–1636.

134. Stephens, Hubert D. Reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 37 (current file) : 1847–1849.

135. Tincher, J. N. Apportionment. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, part 2 (bound file) : 1636–1637.

136. Tinkham, George H. Representation. Speech in the House, Jan. 19, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 36 (current file) : 1796–1799.

137. Towner, Horace M. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, Jan. 18, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 42 (current file) : 2149–2150.

138. U. S. Congress. House. Apportionment of Representatives. Debate in the House, Jan. 18 and 19, 1921, on H. R. 14498 for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress amongst the several states under the Fourteenth census. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 3d sess., v. 60, no. 35–36 (current file) : 1687–1709 ; 1788–1807. Record of votes on amendment, p. 1806–1807.

67th Congress, 1st session, v. 61 (current file)

139. Aswell, James B. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7064–7065.

140. Barbour, Henry E. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7063–7064.

141. Beedy, Carroll, L. The reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7065–7067. Also printed separately.

142. Black, Eugene. House can not go on increasing its membership indefinitely. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7073–7074.

143. Blanton, Thomas L. Apportionment of Representatives. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7072–7073.

144. Brinson, Samuel M. The reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7076–7077.

144a. Burton, Theodore E. The reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7070–7071.

145. Cable, John L. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 131 (current file) : 7158–7159.

146. Cockran, W. Bourke. The reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7068–7070.

147. Cole, R. Clint. The apportionment bill. Speech in the House Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 131 (current file) : 7157–7158, 7159–7160.

148. Fairchild, Benjamin L. The increase of the membership of the House. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7075–7076.

149. Gillett, Frederick H. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 6, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no 22 (current file) : 1078–1079.

150. Goodykoontz, Wells. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States. Extension of remarks in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 134 (current file) : 7316–7317.

151. Hardy, Rufus. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, part 6 (bound file) : 6334–6335.

152. Jefferis, Albert W. A representative government. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7075.

153. Langley, John W. The reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7067.

154. Larsen, William W. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7060–7062.

155. Lineberger, Walter F. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7064.

156. McPherson, Isaac V. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 131 (current file) : 7154–7164.

157. Magee, Walter W. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7072.

158. Mondell, Frank W. The size of the House of representatives. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7077–7078.

159. Nelson, John M. The Constitution evaded to increase the House. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 134 (current file) : 7314–7316.

160. Newton, Cleveland A. Reapportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 131 (current file) : 7162–7164.

161. Rankin, John E. The apportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 134 (current file) : 7313–7314.

162. Sanders, Morgan G. The apportionment bill. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 132 (current file) : 7217–7218.

163. Siegel, Isaac. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7054–7060.

164. Tinkham, George H. Question of constitutional privilege. Speech in the House, May 6, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 22 (current file) : 1074–1076.

165. —— Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7060.

166. Treadway, Allen T. Increasing the membership of the House. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7074–7075.

167. Vaile, William N. Representation on the basis of population. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7079–7080.

168. White, Hays B. Increase the number of Representatives proposed rather than reduce that number. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 131 (current file) : 7157.

169. Williams, Thomas S. Apportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7072.

170. Wood, William R. Apportionment. Speech in the House, Oct. 14, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., v. 61, no. 129 (current file) : 7067–7068.

67th Congress, 2d session, v. 62 (current file)

171. Larsen, William W. Method of apportioning representation in the House of Representatives. Speech in the House, Dec. 17, 1921. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 2d sess., v. 62, no. 12 (current file) : 569–570.

68th Congress, 1st session, v. 65 (current file)

172. Barbour, Henry E. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, Mar. 14, 1924. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 68th Cong., 1st sess., v. 65, no. 74 (current file) : 4323–4325.

173. McLeod, Clarence J. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, June 4, 1924. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 68th Cong., 1st sess., v. 65, no. 149 (current file) : 10774–10775.

68th Congress, 2d session, v. 66 (current file)

174. Blanton, Thomas L. We have too many Members in the House of Representatives. Speech in the House, Feb. 12, 1925. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 68th Cong., 2d sess., v. 66, no. 58 (current file) : 3672–3673.

175. Winter, Charles E. Introduction of H. J. Res. 324 proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the apportionment of the Representatives and direct taxes among the several states. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 68th Cong., 2d sess., v. 66, no. 36 (current file) : 2180.

69th Congress, 1st session, v. 67 (current file)

176. Barbour, Henry E. The Constitution and apportionment. Speech in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6888–6889.

177. Cannon, Clarence. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6896.

178. Cooper, Henry A. The privileged status of an apportionment bill. Speech in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6894–6895. Also published separately.

179. Garrett, Finis J. Apportionment. Speech in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6892–6893.

180. Gibson, Ernest W. Methods of reapportionment. Extension of remarks in the House, Apr. 7, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 95 (current file) : 6840.

181. Griffin, Anthony J. Party promises unfulfilled. Congressional reapportionment—the coal question—farm relief. Speech in the House, June 28, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 172 (current file) : 12846–12848.

182. Kahn, Mrs. Florence P. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Apr. 29, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 116 (current file) : 3869–3874.

183. Snell, Bertrand H. No mandatory provision in the Constitution which provides for immediate apportionment. Speech in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6887–6888.

184. Tilson, John Q. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6895.

185. U. S. Congress. House. Apportionment. Debate in the House, Apr. 8, 1926. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 96 (current file) : 6887–6898.

186. U. S. Congress. Senate. Report of the advisory committee to the Director of the Census upon the apportionment of representatives. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess., v. 67, no. 95 (current file) : 6840–6842.

69th Congress, 2d session, v. 68 (current file)

187. Barbour, Henry E. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5327–5328.

188. Bulwinkle, A. L. The so-called apportionment bill. Extension of remarks in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5418.

189. Burton, Theodore E. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 70 (current file) : 5597–5598.

190. Greenwood, Arthur H. Membership of the House of Representatives. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5328.

191. Jacobstein, Meyer. Apportionment of members of the House of Representatives. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5329–5330.

192. Lea, Clarence F. Reapportionment. Extension of remarks in the House, Mar. 3, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 72 (current file) : 5815–5816.

193. Linthicum, J. Charles. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Extension of remarks in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5412.

194. Lozier, Ralph F. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5326–5327.

195. McLeod, Clarence J. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5324–5325.

196. Peery, George C. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 70 (current file) : 5622–5624.

197. Rankin, John E. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5330.

198. Sosnowski, John B. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Jan. 14, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 26 (current file) : 1679–1680.

199. Thurston, Lloyd. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5328–5329.

200. Tydings, Millard E. Reapportionment. Extension of remarks in the House, Mar. 2, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5412.

201. U. S. Congress. House. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Debate in the House, Mar. 2, 1927, on the bill H. R. 17378. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 69 (current file) : 5323–5331.

202. Washington. Legislature. House. [Memorial regarding apportionment.] June 18, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 40 (current file) : 2670–2671.

203. Woodrum, Clifton A. Reapportionment in the House of Representatives. Extension of remarks in the House, Mar. 3, 1927. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 2d sess., v. 68, no. 70 (current file) : 5624.

70th Congress, 1st session, v. 69 (current file)

204. Bankhead, William B. Apportionment of Representatives. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9293.

205. Barbour, Henry E. Apportionment of the Members of the House of Representatives. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9439.

206. Brigham, Elbert S. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9443–9444.

207. Burton, Theodore E. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9295–9296.

208. Celler, Emanuel. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9432–9433.

209. Chapman, Virgil. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9440–9441.

210. Clancy, Robert H. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9435–9436.

211. Clarke, John D. Apportionment of Representatives. Extension of remarks in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9466.

212. Cochran, Thomas C. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess, v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9438–9439.

213. Cole, Cyrenus. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9431–9432.

214. Crail, Joe. Reapportionment among the states. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9307–9308.

215. Evans, W. E. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9433–9434.

216. Free, Arthur M. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9438.

217. Green, R. A. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9442.

218. Hersey, Ira G. Apportionment of members of the House of representatives. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9431.

219. Huntington, Edward V. A simple explanation of the method of equal proportions. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 130 (current file) : 9262–9265.

220. Jacobstein, Meyer. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 8, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 122 (current file) : 8376–8379.

221. —— Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9300–9304.

222. LaGuardia, Fiorello H. Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 133 (current file) : 9590–9592.

223. Linthicum, J. Charles. Apportionment of Representatives. Extension of remarks in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 140 (current file) : 10434.

224. Lozier, Ralph F. Major fractions formula versus equal proportions formula in apportioning representation. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 143 (current file) : 10899–10900.

225. —— Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 143 (current file) : 10875–10884.

226. —— Unconstitutional provisions of pending reapportionment bill. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 143 (current file) : 10902.

227. McLeod, Clarence J. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 24, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 138 (current file) : 10106–10108.

228. —— Reapportioning the members of the House on the census to be taken in 1930. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9298–9299.

229. Mapes, Carl E. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9444–9445.

230. Michener, Earl C. Reapportionment of Representatives. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9291–9292.

231. Moorman, Henry D. Apportionment of Representatives. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9434.

232. Ramseyer, C. William. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9292–9293.

234. Rankin, John E. Reapportioning under the census of 1920. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9296–9298.

235. Romjue, Milton A. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9436–9438.

236. Rutherford, Samuel. The Constitution and reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9434–9435.

237. Thurston, Lloyd. Apportionment. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9305–9306.

238. Tilson, John Q. Reapportionment. Speech in the House, May 18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 132 (current file) : 9439–9440.

239. U. S. Congress. House. Reapportionment of Representatives. Debate in the House, May 17–18, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 current file) : 9291–9309 ; no. 132 (current file) : 94330–9447.

240. Vandenberg, Arthur H. Reapportionment. Explanatory statement regarding Senate bill 4554, relating to reapportionment, and an editorial from the Detroit News. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 143 (current file) : 10789–10790.

241. Williams, Thomas S. Reapportionment of the House of Representatives. Speech in the House, May 17, 1928. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., v. 69, no. 131 (current file) : 9294.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The time for general debate having expired, the Clerk will read the bill under the 5-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as soon as practicable after the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed, as ascertained under such census, and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives made in the following manner: By apportioning one Representative to each State (as required by the Constitution) and by apportioning the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census by the method known as the method of major fractions.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 1, beginning in line 3, after the word "That," strike out "as soon as practical after the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census," and insert in lieu thereof "on the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress and of each fifth Congress thereafter."

Page 2, in line 1, strike out the words "such census" and insert in lieu thereof "the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population."

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11725, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. ALLGOOD, on request of Mr. HILL of Alabama, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, for six days, on account of death in his family.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts, for one week, on account of important business.

Mr. TUCKER, on request of Mr. MOORE of Virginia, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the bill which has been under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will be considered to-morrow.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 13645. An act to establish two United States narcotic farms for the confinement and treatment of persons addicted to the use of habit-forming narcotic drugs who have been convicted of offenses against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River within the city of Aurora, State of Illinois; and

H. R. 14474. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River within the city of Aurora, State of Illinois.

H. R. 15333. An act granting the consent of Congress to the South Park commissioners and the commissioners of Lincoln Park, separately or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of Lincoln Park to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Michigan canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. FENN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, to meet to-morrow, Friday, January 11, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Friday, January 11, 1929, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(10.30 a. m.)

Navy Department appropriation bill.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

Requesting the President to propose the calling of an international conference for the simplification of the calendar, or to accept on behalf of the United States an invitation to participate in such a conference (H. J. Res. 334).

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m. and 2 p. m.)

Tariff hearings as follows:

SCHEDULES

Earths, earthenware, and glassware, January 11.
Metals and manufactures of, January 14, 15, 16.
Wood and manufactures of, January 17, 18.
Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of, January 21, 22.
Tobacco and manufactures of, January 23.
Agricultural products and provisions, January 24, 25, 28.
Spirits, wines, and other beverages, January 29.
Cotton manufactures, January 30, 31, February 1.
Flax, hemp, jute, and manufactures of, February 4, 5.
Wool and manufactures of, February 6.
Silk and silk goods, February 11, 12.
Papers and books, February 13, 14.
Sundries, February 15, 18, 19.
Free list, February 20, 21, 22.
Administrative and miscellaneous, February 25.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

(10.30 a. m., Caucus Room)

Continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927 (H. R. 15430).

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

(10 a. m.)

For improvement of navigation and the control of floods of Caloosahatchie River and Lake Okeechobee and its drainage area, Florida (H. R. 14939).

For the improvement of the Caloosahatchie River, Fla., for purposes of navigation and flood control (H. R. 15095).

SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING PRISONS

(10 a. m., Room 127 House Office Building)

To consider prison conditions, care of inmates, and labor conditions in United States prisons.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

(10 a. m.)

To amend section 5a of the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, providing for placing educational orders for equipment (H. R. 450).

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY—SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 2

(10 a. m.)

A bill to amend sections 116, 118, and 126 of the Judicial Code (H. R. 13567).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

736. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules and lists of papers, documents, etc., in the files of this department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ELLIOTT: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 13857. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 2056). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. H. R. 15468. A bill to repeal the provisions of law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and building for the United States subtreasury and other governmental offices at New Orleans, La.; without amendment (Rept. No. 2057). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEAVITT: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 15213. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to develop power and to lease, for power purposes, structures of Indian irrigation projects, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2062). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEAVITT: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. J. Res. 343. A joint resolution authorizing an extension of time within which suits may be instituted on behalf of the Cherokee Indians, the Seminole Indians, the Creek Indians, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to June 30, 1931, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2063). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 15324. A bill authorizing the attendance of the Marine Band at the Confederate Veterans' reunion to be held at Charlotte, N. C.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2064). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GRAHAM: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 16034. A bill to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of the State of Pennsylvania; without amendment (Rept. No. 2065). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 5932. A bill for the relief of Arthur Moffatt, deceased; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2058). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REECE: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 13673. A bill for the relief of John Burket; without amendment (Rept. No. 2059). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CHAPMAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 14722. A bill for the relief of Jacob Scott; without amendment (Rept. No. 2060). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 14781. A bill for the relief of James D. Poteet; without amendment (Rept. No. 2061). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HUDSPETH: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3677. A bill for the relief of F. M. Gray, jr. Co.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2066). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15287) granting an increase of pension to John H. Jackson; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14951) granting an increase of pension to Carrie C. Fry; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 16126) granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of the county of Lake, State of Indiana, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near Cline Avenue, in the cities of East Chicago and Gary, county of Lake, Ind.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HALE: A bill (H. R. 16127) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ROMJUE: A bill (H. R. 16128) to amend the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOCH: A bill (H. R. 16129) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon and equipment of buildings and appurtenances for the Coast Guard Academy; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 16130) authorizing an appropriation for the erection of veterinary hospital at Fort Bliss, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KELLY: A bill (H. R. 16131) to enable the Postmaster General to make contracts for the transportation of mails by air from island possessions of the United States to foreign countries and to the United States and between such island possessions, and to authorize him to make contracts with private individuals and corporations for the conveyance of mails by air in foreign countries; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 16132) to give military rank to certain officers on the retired list of the Army, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SIROVICH: A bill (H. R. 16133) to amend the national bank act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16134) to amend the classification act of 1923, approved March 4, 1923; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. FISH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 376) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CELLER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 377) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a monument or memorial to Oscar S. Straus; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause I of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AUF DER HEIDE: A bill (H. R. 16135) granting an increase of pension to James J. Kadien; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BEERS: A bill (H. R. 16136) granting a pension to Lydia S. Heiser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16137) granting an increase of pension to Rachel A. Norris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16138) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, A bill (H. R. 16139) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Wallace; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CULKIN: A bill (H. R. 16140) for the relief of Peter Christy, jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EVANS of California: A bill (H. R. 16141) granting a pension to Rebecca P. Trester; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 16142) granting a pension to John Gagen, jr.; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FREE: A bill (H. R. 16143) for the examination and survey of southern or lower San Francisco Bay and Guadalupe River, Calif., with a view of securing increased depth and width in the channels in bay and river, establishing a harbor, turning basin, piers, wharves, etc., in lower San Francisco Bay; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GAMBRILL: A bill (H. R. 16144) for the relief of Charlotte Hall School; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GARBER: A bill (H. R. 16145) granting a pension to Martha Jane Misner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARNER of Texas: A bill (H. R. 16146) for the relief of J. N. Lewis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALE: A bill (H. R. 16147) granting an increase of pension to Frank G. Nelson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HASTINGS: A bill (H. R. 16148) granting a pension to Mary R. Proud; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16149) granting a pension to Annie R. C. Owen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 16150) granting a pension to Joseph Farnandis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 16151) granting an increase of pension to Belle Adams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEMP: A bill (H. R. 16152) for the relief of Joseph T. Byrne; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 16153) for the relief of William J. Sachse; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H. R. 16154) granting a pension to Mary E. Beckner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 16155) for the relief of the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Gilmer, Tex.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STEELE: A bill (H. R. 16156) granting a pension to James Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 16157) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. McCartney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 16158) granting a pension to Emma W. Rice; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 16159) granting an increase of pension to David B. Todd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 16160) granting an increase of pension to Martha Frances Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 16161) granting a pension to Julia L. Libby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8199. By Mr. BRIGGS: Petition of J. S. Bryce, 3808 Avenue J, Galveston, Tex., and others, opposing reduction of power of all broadcasting stations now using more than 10,000 watts; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

8200. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the West Point Society of New York, approving and indorsing the bills introduced in the Senate by Senator BLACK (S. 3089), House by Congressman WAINWRIGHT (H. R. 13509), as amended by Congressman McSWAIN; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

8201. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition signed by citizens of the city of Mount Vernon, N. Y., favoring the passage of House Resolution 14676; to the Committee on Pensions.

8202. By Mr. KELLY: Petition of National Beauty and Barbers' Supply Association, asking for enactment of House bill 11, the fair trade bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8203. By Mr. McCORMACK: Petition of New England Manufacturing Confectioners Association, Olin M. Jacobs, secretary, 40 Court Street, Boston, Mass., recommending a reduction in the tariff on edible gelatin from the present rates of 20 per cent ad valorem and 3½ cents a pound; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8204. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of Dixie Post, No. 64, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States; to the Committee on Pensions.

8205. Also, petition of board of directors of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association; to the Committee on Agriculture.

8206. Also, petition of National Beauty and Barbers Supply Dealers' Association; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8207. Also, petition of American Farm Bureau Federation; to Committee on Agriculture.

8208. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the National Beauty and Barbers Supply Dealers Association of New York, favoring the passage of the Capper-Kelly bill (S. 1418 and H. R. 11), known as the fair trade bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8209. Also, petition of the Tennessee Association Drainage Districts, Obion, Tenn., favoring the passage of Senate bill 4689, for relief of drainage districts; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

SENATE

FRIDAY, January 11, 1929

(Legislative day of Monday, January 7, 1929)

The Senate met in open executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Senate, as in legislative session, will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7729) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 7729. An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases;

H. R. 13645. An act to establish two United States narcotic farms for the confinement and treatment of persons addicted to the use of habit-forming narcotic drugs who have been convicted of offenses against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River within the city of Aurora, State of Illinois;

H. R. 14474. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River within the city of Aurora, State of Illinois; and

H. R. 15333. An act granting the consent of Congress to the South Park commissioners and the commissioners of Lincoln Park, separately or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of Lincoln Park to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frazier	McNary	Shortridge
Barkley	George	Mayfield	Simmons
Bingham	Gerry	Metcalf	Smoot
Black	Glass	Moses	Steck
Blaine	Glenn	Neely	Steiwer
Blease	Goff	Norbeck	Stephens
Borah	Greene	Norris	Swanson
Bratton	Harris	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Harrison	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Hastings	Overman	Trammell
Bruce	Hawes	Phipps	Tydings
Burton	Hayden	Pine	Tyson
Capper	Heflin	Pittman	Vandenberg
Caraway	Johnson	Ransdell	Wagner
Copeland	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Curtis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Deneen	King	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Dill	La Follette	Sackett	Wheeler
Edge	McKellar	Schall
Fess	McLean	Sheppard
Fletcher	McMaster	Shipstead

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is ill and detained from the Senate for that reason. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is detained from the Senate by illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

As in legislative session,

Mr. FLETCHER presented the petition of Rabbi Martin Friedmann, of Temple Beth-el, and sundry other citizens of Pensacola, Fla., praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. OVERMAN presented a petition of post-office clerks and letter carriers of High Point, N. C., praying for the passage of legislation in the interest of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES presented petitions of sundry citizens of Spokane, Tacoma, Chehalis, Longview, Ridgefield, Lynden, and Kelso, all in the State of Washington, praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS presented a petition of post-office clerks and letter carriers of High Point, N. C., praying for the passage of legislation in the interest of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. COPELAND presented petitions of members of the Peekskill Choral Club, of Peekskill, and sundry citizens of New York City and Brooklyn, in the State of New York, praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. As in legislative session, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the urgent deficiency bill, being the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1417) thereon.

I give notice that I shall undertake to secure consideration for the bill on next Monday morning immediately following the routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that on the desk of each Senator will be found a copy of the hearings on the first deficiency appropriation bill. The hearings are of such vast importance to the Senate that I hope every Senator will read them. Every Senator will find a copy on his desk.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in legislative session,

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 5223) to amend subsection 3 of section 3220 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to claims for refunds of taxes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 1418) thereon.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10157) making an additional grant of lands for the support and maintenance of the Agricultural College and School of Mines for the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1419); and

A bill (H. R. 13744) to provide for the acquisition by Parker I-See-O Post, No. 12, All American Indian Legion, Lawton, Okla., of the east half northeast quarter northeast quarter northwest quarter of section 20, township 2 north, range 11 west, Indian meridian, in Comanche County, Okla. (Rept. No. 1420).

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 4979) to authorize the city of Niobrara, Nebr., to transfer Niobrara Island to the State of Nebraska, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1421) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5110) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1422);

A bill (H. R. 10550) to provide for the acquisition by Meyer Shield Post, No. 92, American Legion, Alva, Okla., of lot 19, block 41, the original town site of Alva, Okla. (Rept. No. 1423);

A bill (H. R. 11719) to revise the boundaries of the Lassen Volcanic National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1424); and

A bill (H. R. 15088) to provide for the extension of the boundary limits of the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine and for change of name of said park to the Acadia National Park (Rept. No. 1425).

REPORTS OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. JONES. As in closed executive session, I ask leave to report certain nominations from the Committee on Commerce for the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

As in legislative session,

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TYSON:

A bill (S. 5301) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on Tennessee Highway No. 9, in Cocke County, Tenn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 5302) to amend the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 5303) for the relief of the Osage Tribe of Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 5304) granting a pension to Peter Huntsman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 5305) granting a pension to Anna M. Barnes; and

A bill (S. 5306) granting a pension to Mary H. Rodgers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 5307) equalizing annual leave of employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed outside the continental limits of the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas:

A bill (S. 5308) granting a pension to Alta K. Conley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS (for Mr. HOWELL):

A bill (S. 5309) authorizing the appointment and retirement as a warrant officer, United States Army, of Charles L. Gyger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5310) granting a pension to Edward S. Grigsby (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5311) for the relief of Harry R. Neilson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 5312) granting a pension to Lottie Lou Hart (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 5313) for the relief of Lamar Jamerson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5314) for the relief of Jetta G. Moseley; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5315) granting a pension to Mary E. Cowell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 5316) providing for a per capita payment of $100 to each enrolled member of the Chippewa Tribe of Minnesota from the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. REED of Missouri:

A bill (S. 5317) granting an increase of pension to Henry E. D. Patee (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5318) to declare a portion of the battle field of Westport, in the State of Missouri, a national military park, and to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire title to same on behalf of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to reintroduce Senate bill 5223 with certain amendments so as to have a clean copy of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5319) to amend subsection 3 of section 3220 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to claims for refunds of taxes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 5320) granting a pension to Jessie L. Kilgore; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5321) for the relief of Lester L. Wilson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5322) for the relief of Sargent Brown; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 5323) granting an increase of pension to Sallie H. Dethample; and

A bill (S. 5324) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Jane Stewart; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) increasing the authorization for appropriations for the International Water Commission, United States and Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MONOPOLY IN MANUFACTURE OF RADIO APPARATUS

Mr. DILL submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States on March 3, 1923, unanimously passed a resolution requesting the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and to report the facts concerning attempts to monopolize the manufacture of radio apparatus as well as radio communication to "aid the House of Representatives in determining whether * * * the antitrust statutes of the United States have been or now are being violated by any person, company, or corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the United States"; and

Whereas pursuant to said resolution, the Federal Trade Commission did make such investigation and transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a report of 347 pages embracing various agreements made by and between the General Electric Co., American Telephone & Telegraph Co., Western Electric Co. (Inc.), Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., International Radio Telegraph Co., United Fruit Co., Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co., and Radio Corporation of America, contracting to pool the radio patents of these companies, allocating to each other their respective fields of manufacture, sale and use of radio apparatus and facilities, and to restrain their use so as to give to this group what has been alleged to be a monopoly of radio manufacture and communications in the United States as well as between the United States and foreign countries; and reciting various acts and practices of said companies pursuant to said agreements; and

Whereas said Federal Trade Commission, after submitting said report and upon its own motion, did, on January 28, 1924, issue a formal complaint charging that said General Electric Co., American Telephone & Telegraph Co., Western Electric Co. (Inc.), Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., International Radio Telegraph Co., United Fruit Co., Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co., and Radio Corporation of America, "have combined and conspired for the purpose and with the effect of restraining competition and creating a monopoly in the manufacture, purchase, and sale in interstate commerce of radio devices and apparatus and other electrical devices and apparatus, and in domestic and transoceanic radio communications and broadcasting"; and

Whereas said Federal Trade Commission, at great expense, has spent five years in hearing evidence to support these charges and has accumulated 10,000 pages of sworn testimony and exhibits; and

Whereas said Federal Trade Commission following a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that said commission has no jurisdiction over violations of the antitrust laws and that the remedy for such violations must be administered by the courts in appropriate proceedings therein instituted has dismissed said complaint; and

Whereas if the charges contained in said complaint are true, it is the duty of the Department of Justice to prosecute such violators and to obtain from the United States courts such injunctions or other orders as may be necessary to dissolve such alleged Radio Trust, and to obtain such other relief as may be proper to assure free competition in radio manufacture, sale, and communications: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to immediately transmit to the Attorney General of the United States all such testimony, exhibits, and other information obtained by it in connection with its investigation of the complaint aforesaid and such other pertinent information as it may have in connection with this subject; and be it further

Resolved, That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to have immediate consideration given to the evidence so presented and to have the Department of Justice take such action on the charges of violations of the antitrust laws of the United States as such evidence and information may warrant and to report to Congress as soon as convenient his decision and action in the premises.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE WORLD WAR

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas article 231 of the treaty of Versailles declares as follows: "The allied and associated powers affirm, and Germany acknowledges, that Germany and its allies are guilty of having caused all losses and damages which the allied and associated governments and their nations suffered in consequence of the war, which was forced upon them by Germany and its allies; and

"Whereas said article was founded on a judicial opinion of the Entente Commission of Fifteen, appointed by the victors on January 25, 1919, 'to determine the responsibility of the war and punishment therefor'; and

"Whereas the American Government was a party to said judicial opinion, which was approved and signed by its two delegates on the said commission, namely, Robert Lansing, chairman of the commission, and James Brown Scott; and

"Whereas such a judgment to have had any legal or moral authority should have been pronounced by an impartial tribunal after careful study of the evidence and hearing both sides; and

"Whereas since the formation of the treaty of Versailles abundance of testimony has appeared from the archives of the allied as well as the Central Powers, and from other sources, showing that the said article 231 was based on hysteria, hypocrisy, and falsifications 'forged in the fires of war'; and

"Whereas distinguished historians and statesmen of the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Italy, Russia, France, and Serbia, as well as Germany and Austria, have declared that the evidence now available is sufficient to warrant a just and reasonable attitude on the part of the victors and a reconsideration of the judgment, which they allege was manifestly unjust, violative of judicial principles, and legal procedure, and a grave obstacle to international understanding; and

"Whereas the establishment of the facts and the truth as to the origin of war is vital to a reconciliation of the peoples of Europe and to their moral disarmament: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed (1) to hold an inquiry, either separately or jointly, for the purpose of determining whether in view of the new evidence and other official material the time is appropriate for the American Government, inspired by the sense of justice and fair play, to recommend to the allied powers either to amend article 231 of the treaty of Versailles without further delay or to announce severally their intention to disregard it or to propose to the allied powers that the question of the responsibility for the World War be submitted to a commission of neutrals, and (2) to report to the Congress the result of such inquiry on or before March 4, 1929."

PHONY DISEASE OF THE PEACH (S. DOC. NO. 200)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, supplemental estimates of appropriations, fiscal year 1930, amounting to $100,000, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to eradicate or control the so-called phony disease of the peach, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MRS. LOIS I. MARSHALL

Mr. STECK. I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, to make a favorable report from the Committee on Pensions. I ask to have the bill read and considered, and I call the particular attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 1156) granting a pension to Lois I. Marshall, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Lois I. Marshall, widow of Thomas R. Marshall, late Vice President of the United States, and pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per year from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, relying upon the fact that the beautiful doctrine of noblesse oblige is not dead in the Senate, I ask the Senate to do the handsome thing, which has already been too long delayed, and pass this bill.

It proposes a pension for Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall during her lifetime of $5,000 a year. During the World War important and expensive duties were cast upon the Vice President and his wife. Mrs. Marshall is living to-day in modest circumstances. I shall say no more than that the Senate of this rich Republic, upon which the Creator has showered His blessings, ought to rise to the spirit of this hour and in the spirit of true Americanism pass this bill without a moment's delay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF RADIO COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the WCFL Radio Magazine, volume 2, winter, 1928–29, No. 1.

There will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 1, 1926, page 12508, a short statement made by me in reference to this matter; also, on July 2, 1926, page 12614, there will be found a statement from the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], in which he said:

The bill does not give the commission the power of censoring programs, but, instead, there is a provision in the bill which specifically prohibits the commission from censoring programs in any way.

It seems, Mr. President, that while I was the only Member of the Senate who opposed and voted against this radio bill, the majority are coming over to my side, and that my predictions as to the results of it are now giving them very serious and grave concern.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT ABOUT THE RADIO TRUST?

Congress is in session at Washington.

The session will expire March 4, 1929.

Congress has much work to do, and it must work fast to do it.

But there is nothing more important for Congress to do than to break the monopoly of the Radio Trust.

Last summer's campaign was a radio campaign.

The election was a radio victory.

It proved how dangerous a radio monopoly could be to the life and safety of the Nation.

It proved that radio must be kept free; that it would menace the Republic if radio were ever to become the tool of private monopoly.

The executive department at Washington does not seem to understand this.

Therefore the legislative department must do the work of the executive department.

Seven years ago Attorney General Daugherty gave the Radio Trust an immunity bath.

That immunity from prosecution has been sanctioned by every one of his successors.

Five years ago the Department of Justice began what it called an "investigation" of the Radio Trust. It has been "investigating" ever since. It has done nothing. And the Radio Trust has escaped prosecution.

In 1924 the Federal Radio Commission issued a formal complaint against the Radio Corporation of America, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the General Electric Co., the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., and the United Fruit Co. charging that they were a radio trust violating the Sherman and Clayton laws.

The Federal Trade Commission has been "investigating" that complaint ever since. It also has done nothing and the Radio Trust has escaped prosecution.

The Federal Radio Commission was intrusted by Congress with the control of the air.

It has destroyed a large number of independent broadcasters to make more room on the air for the superpower chain stations of the Radio Trust.

It has declined to enforce the antitrust clauses of the radio law.

It is threatening to destroy even more independent broadcasters that the trust stations may have an even greater share of the air.

The United States Government owns a radio patent which the Supreme Court has declared to be the basic patent in a large branch of the radio art—the famous Schloemilch and von Bronk patent. The United States Government has licensed independent radio manufacturers to use this patent. The Canadian supreme court declared invalid the competing patent—the Alexanderson patent—owned by the Radio Trust. The Radio Trust is using this alleged patent to mulct independent radio manufacturers out of millions of dollars in royalties. The Navy Department is custodian of the Government's radio patents, but it has made no move to protect the Government's property against the trust.

Only Congress can force these branches of the executive department to act.

When the Department of Justice comes to Congress for funds the Attorney General should be asked why he has not prosecuted the Radio Trust.

When the Federal Trade Commission comes to Congress for funds the commissioners should be asked why they have not enforced the law against the Radio Trust.

When the Federal Radio Commission comes to Congress for funds the commissioners should be asked why they have destroyed the independent broadcasters to strengthen the monopoly of the Radio Trust.

When the Navy Department comes to Congress for funds Secretary Wilbur should be asked why his department has not protected the Government's radio patent rights against the Radio Trust.

Only Congress can do this.

It is the duty of every Senator and every Member of the House of Representatives to study the evil history of the Radio Trust.

It is the duty of Congress to see that the Radio Trust is dissolved.

It is the duty of Congress to keep the air free.

PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of January 8 commending the proposed survey of the Nicaraguan canal.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NICARAGUA CANAL

It is, of course, improbable that traffic through the Panama Canal will continue indefinitely to double every five years as it has done since the canal was opened in 1914. Nevertheless, as was pointed out by an admirable news story from Washington in the Post-Dispatch of last Sunday, the Panama Canal will in another 12 years have certainly exhausted its capacity and will, in the event the Nicaragua canal is not by that time under construction, have to be enlarged.

This certainly constitutes the true argument for the Nicaragua canal. That is, to make the Panama Canal a sea-level canal, which would have to be done substantially to enlarge it, would cost approximately as much as the Nicaragua canal will cost. The Panama Canal originally cost $445,000,000. It is estimated that either to make it a sea-level canal or to build the Nicaragua canal would cost a billion dollars.

This being so, the advantage lies with the Nicaragua project. Only 21 per cent of the traffic through the Panama Canal is to or from the west coast of South America. The other 79 per cent is to and from other parts of the world, almost all of them lying north of Panama. For this 79 per cent of the traffic the Nicaragua canal, lessening the distance between New York and San Francisco by 434 statute miles, would mean the saving of a day. The cost of operating cargo ships averages $500 a day. The United States Shipping Board estimates that this would represent to ships going through the Nicaragua canal, and bound neither to nor from the west coast of South America, a total annual saving of $3,400,000.

That is the case for the Nicaragua canal. In the growing importance of costs to all sea commerce, it is a good one. There are, as well, the political considerations to which Senator EDGE, of New Jersey, leading sponsor of the Nicaragua canal, has called attention. To be associated as we would be by so great a project with Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras would unquestionably exert upon the upper isthmus the same stabilizing influence which the Panama Canal has had upon the politics and commerce of the lower isthmus. The Nicaragua canal would place all that part of Central America, including Mexico, upon one of the great highways of commerce. It would take their seaports, sleeping in dreams of the golden past, and make them the busy modern communities which the Panama Canal has made of Colon and Panama City.

The Post-Dispatch agrees with Senator EDGE that we should at once busy ourselves with the preliminaries necessary to getting the Nicaragua canal under way. We owe it to Central America, upon which we have thrust ourselves, to make that invasion beneficent. We owe to world commerce the economies which the canal would bring. We owe to posterity that good report of our trusteeship in Central America which history gladly makes for Rome. Says Stanley Baldwin, Premier of England: "We English must never forget the debt we owe to Rome. She gave us our architecture, our law, our civilization." Because we some time mean to build the Nicaragua canal we have destroyed the tribunal built up by the Central American Republics among themselves by refusing to let it have a voice in our plans for the canal. That being so, we owe them the canal itself and what it will connote.

ADDRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT LUDLOW ON FUTURE OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech by Representative-elect Louis Ludlow at the Seventy-fourth annual Jackson Day banquet, Wooster, Ohio, January 8, 1929.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

THE FUTURE OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. LUDLOW. With the election over and the evidence of the debacle still visible on every hand, there is nothing more meet and proper for Democrats to do at this crisis in our party affairs than to betake ourselves in meekness and lowliness of spirit to Monticello and there reconsecrate ourselves at the feet of Thomas Jefferson. And when we seek to renew communion with the father of democracy let us fervently hope and pray that never again will we wander so far from the old home as we did in the recent campaign, when the fundamentals of our party faith were all but forgotten; when lifetime peaceful neighbors suddenly became virulent enemies; when brother was arrayed against brother and families were torn asunder by bitter and biting recriminations, all on account of issues that were as foreign to the genius of democracy as the brightness of midday is distinguished from the Stygian blackness of midnight.

Grievous as have been our meanderings, it is a mistake to assume that the aberrations of one campaign have in any wise diminished the vital force of democracy. There is no more ludicrous postelection outcropping than the cocksure dictum of hopeless volunteer morticians that the Democratic Party is "dead." A party that polled 15,005,497 votes in spite of the unfortunate and untoward circumstances that divided us in the recent campaign is not exactly a moribund party. Our national ticket polled 1,078,157 more votes than the combined votes cast for three successful Republican presidential candidates of bygone years: Hayes, Garfield, and Harrison. Think of it! It polled 290,853 votes more than were polled by two other successful Republican candidates combined—McKinley in 1896 and Taft in 1908. Think of that! It polled within 719,519 votes of as many as were cast for Coolidge when he swept the country in 1924, and within 1,146,703 of as many as were received by Warren G. Harding in the great landslide of 1920. These figures speak more eloquently than words of the inherent strength and vitality of the Democratic Party and the hold it has on the masses. The foolish persons who speak glibly of the demise of the Democratic Party should remember that democracy, the democracy that wrote the Declaration of Independence and impressed its stamp of righteousness all over the Government of the United States at its beginnings, is composed of those indestructible qualities that go to make up the franchise of freedom. They might as well talk of destroying friendship or of blotting love out of the human heart. It can't be done.

What the Democratic Party needs at the present time is no mourners—there is no corpse—but a revival of Jeffersonianism, a steeping in the ancient party faith, with a determination such as actuated the grim old warrior of the Hermitage when he waged his epochal campaign 100 years ago to make the principles of that faith a living realization. We need to return to elementals, to examine once more the philosophy that makes us Democrats. God gave us a beautiful world to live in, with riches enough to make everybody happy. It is inconceivable that there would ever be a time when the resources of the earth, bending to the genius of man, would not prove adequate to enable all human beings to live in happiness and contentment, if life were guided unerringly and universally by the golden rule of doing unto others whatsoever ye would that others would do unto you. But some men are selfish. They want to crowd their fellow mortals out of the picture and lay up treasures for themselves beyond all human needs. They are always striving, through privileged statutes and executive concessions, to pile up wealth that Midas with his golden touch might envy. Others are born tyrants, cursed by an insatiate desire to lord it over their fellow beings. With such elements at work pursuing their selfish aims, human society becomes warped and the designs of the Creator are frustrated in the same measure that special privilege has its sway.

Thomas Jefferson, the philosopher, and Andrew Jackson, the protagonist in the great battle for equal rights, set themselves with nerves of flint against these perversions of government. Both saw that special privilege has a thousand hands, and each hand has an itching palm to clutch the fruits of honest industry. "We declare it to be self-evident that all men are created equal," wrote Jefferson in the opening sentence of the Declaration of Independence, and there you have not only the cornerstone but the archway and the superstructure of the greatest temple of government ever erected among men. Just as the Nazarene, by his whole life and example, and especially by his inspired utterances on the mount, pointed out that the strong and the rich and the powerful have no corner on heaven, so Jefferson demonstrated in his chart of freedom that glows with living light that the welfare of the individual should be the prime aim and purpose of temporal government. He might have compressed his philosophy into a sentence of seven words: "Keep the lanes of opportunity always open!"

And therein lies the future of the Democratic Party. That is what it should set itself doing now and henceforth. "Keep the lanes of opportunity always open."

Let Democrats buckle on their armor once more to fight not Democrats but special privilege. Let them feel, if they can, the heartbeats of Thomas Jefferson as they kneel at the feet of the great humanitarian and pray for guidance, and then let them breathe into their nostrils some of the fire of "Old Hickory," as they go forth, as he did, to battle, with unfaltering faith and courage that touched the stars, for human freedom and the rights of man.

This is big enough a program for the Democratic Party, not only now but forevermore. For the conflict between special privilege and equal rights is eternal. Men may come and men may go, forms of government may change, the sun himself may grow dim with age, but this conflict goes on forever.

If the Democratic Party of America has learned from the recent catastrophe the lesson that it does not pay to wander among the miasmas of hate; that elections are to be won by it on fundamental issues of opposition to special privilege and bureaucracy instead of on collateral questions of ephemeral importance and sheer expediency; if on sober, sound reflection it has learned these things, as I believe it has, then defeat already has been turned to victory and the party faces a glorious future of service.

I have made it my business since the election to interview most of the leaders of our party in both branches of Congress touching the future of democracy, and I find among them a practically unanimous desire to seek a way out of the wilderness and a practically unanimous opinion that the way leads by the gates of Monticello. I am as confident as I ever was of anything in my life that if we only had an Andrew Jackson to lead us we would soon be started in the direction of the promised land. I do not believe it will be difficult for Democrats to get together, and from my investigation I am convinced the following four points will be the ultimate basis of reunion:

1. A tacit agreement that there shall be no proscriptions on account of religious differences, and that the waning religious issue shall be permitted to fade out of existence.

2. Recognition by the vast majority of Democrats that whether or not, as many believe, the eighteenth amendment is as permanent a part of the Constitution of the United States as the amendment against slavery, it is a subject on which both Republicans and Democrats are divided and should never again enter into political campaigns as a party issue.

3. A grim resolve to fight special privilege and to keep the lanes of opportunity open for all deserving men and women.

4. A solid front against Federal bureaucracy and paternalism, to the end that taxes may be reduced, centralization may be checked, and the priceless boon of local self-government may be restored to the people.

These four points comprise the essential basis of a get-together policy which I am led by the consensus of leaders whom I have interviewed to believe will afford common ground for a reunion of the party during the next three years into a militant, aggressive, forward-looking organization. I have canvassed leaders of all wings of the Democracy that flapped so inharmoniously in the late campaign, and not one leader was irreconcilable. With a touch of sentiment almost bordering on pathos, one remarked, "I want to go home," and when I asked him what he meant by "home" he replied:

"The principles of Jefferson and Jackson are good enough for me."

When the Democratic Party holds true to the course charted by Jefferson and Jackson it wins. When it takes up quarrels and issues of momentary expediency and puts them ahead of "equal rights to all, special privileges to none," it loses. When it wanders after strange gods the people no longer have their former interest in it. They chasten it with defeat, but always there comes a time when the mists clear away, when it returns to the fundamental doctrines of the fathers, which are as sound to-day as a century ago, and then it rides triumphantly to victory. The Democratic Party is always needed to fight the battles of the common man who, though born naked into the world, nevertheless possesses a kingly dignity and certain inalienable rights, including the right to life, liberty, and happiness, which are coexistent with his birth and coextensive with his being. It is needed to checkmate the grasping pirates of privilege, to strike at extravagance and waste, to "keep the lanes of opportunity open." When it is used either as a battle ground to settle grudges or as the vehicle for some passing fad it ceases for the time to be effective, and its return to power depends upon how soon it shakes off the will-o'-the-wisps and returns to fundamentals.

I know that in certain circles it is customary to speak of Jeffersonianism as something archaic and old-fashioned. It is nothing of the sort. There are some things that never grow old. The Sermon on the Mount is the same flood of light now as when the Master delivered it. The principles of Jefferson, adapted to present conditions, are to-day the best solvent of our national problems.

The problems of our time in their broad, general scope are very much the same as the problems that confronted the sage of Monticello and that faced the stern warrior of the Hermitage an even century ago when he led the outraged farmers and toilers in his fierce fight on the minions of special privilege. It is true there is to-day no national bank with a death grip on the country's throat—the Federal reserve act of Woodrow Wilson's administration marked the end of political control of the banking system—but a thousand Nicholas Biddles are operating in a thousand ways to filch the honest earnings of the poor, and their nefarious occupation is made possible by privileged statutes and moss-grown practices that will some day fall before the artillery of another Andrew Jackson when the roll of the masses is called and the plain people again come into their own.

Governments do not create wealth. No government on earth ever made a dollar of real value. Wealth is created by the brain and brawn of men and women. But governments can, and do, influence the distribution of wealth in ways that do great injustice to the creators of wealth. The government that takes wealth from its creators and turns it into the coffers of favored beneficiaries who have no right or title to it is not an honest government. It fosters a class of Robin Hoods, who toil not, neither do they spin, but who in all that makes for comfort and softness of living are bestowed as happily as Solomon in all his glory.

I verily believe that if Jefferson and Jackson could realize how this country is rushing pell-mell toward centralization; how rampant special privilege has grown to be; how bureaucracy, enthroned in Washington, exercises lethal dominion over the land and the inhabitants thereof, they would turn over in their graves. For there is hardly any conceivable paternalism of which the Government is not now guilty, from running a railroad to instructions in the homely art of putting the swaddling clothes on a baby. Bureaucracy is in full flower at Washington and the bureaucrats are becoming the lords and masters of the Nation. There is no private business that is safe from interference, for a bureaucratic army of 30,000 agents, inspectors, and spies is abroad in the land, tantalizing business interests and stealthily prying into the private concerns of individuals.

While the farmers of our country are begging Congress for relief from intolerable conditions and getting a stone, 9,000 agents and inspectors of the Department of Agriculture, composing a legalized army of spies, are out in the rural districts harassing the men of the soil with inquisitorial rules and regulations hatched in the bureaus at Washington. When the farmer asks for bread the bureaucrats give him a peremptory order to clean up his premises. When he suggests a tariff that will afford him at least half the show in the game of life that is accorded the industrialists he is answered by the crack of rifles killing his livestock. If ever a class of our people had a special grievance, the farmers of America are in that fix now. While inflation of the war period still exists for the benefit of the industrial and commercial classes the farmers have been crucified by deflation. While Congress gives them the husks of empty promises the bureaucrats ride them with regulations, seen and unseen, and they are forced by tariff legislation passed in the interest of the industrialists to pay top prices for all the things of life. Their situation is best described as being nothing it should be and everything it ought not to be, and presently, if they see the facts in their true light, the farmers will be looking for an Andrew Jackson to speak in their behalf to the masters of privilege in the thunderous tones of righteousness that brought the people's oppressors to their knees 100 years ago.

From the vantage point of the press gallery at Washington I have been watching for nearly 30 years the processes of government run. I would be less of a patriot than I think I am if I did not feel a deep concern for my country, having beheld for so many years the deadly growth of centralization and its accompanying evils, bureaucracy and paternalism. Slowly, but surely, the Federal Government has taken on enormous powers by robbing the sovereignty of the States until to-day it rides astride the Nation like a colossus. Even the most uncompromising apologists of Federal power now admit that the Washington Government has become "top-heavy." The States are not blameless. When offered this, that, or the other appropriation as a gift from Washington they have permitted themselves to be insidiously seduced, ignominiously surrendering their power, one after another, to the bureaucrats. Everywhere there has grown up a deplorable tendency to look upon Washington as the Nation's Santa Claus and to yield priceless local freedom as the exchange for appropriations that in the last analysis come out of the pockets of the people who suffer by the exchange. Bureaus once created never die. In my long experience I have never known of a bureau being abolished. Starting very humbly and with barely enough appropriation and personnel to get the camel's nose into the Treasury they soon begin to flourish like the proverbial green bay tree and keep on growing until the camel's entire body is inside the breastworks.

It was the design of the fathers that all of the executive functions of government should be transacted by the great Cabinet departments, of which there are now 10, but as centralization has gone forward with seven-league boots commissions, boards, and other agencies have been created that outnumber the departments 4 to 1. Nothing more vividly illustrates the extent to which extra constitutional powers have been assumed by the bureaucrats than the fact that there are now more than 40 commissions, boards, and independent establishments, reaching out their tentacles in all directions, grabbing powers of the citizens, weakening local self-government everywhere, sapping State sovereignty, and spending every year hardly less than a billion dollars wrung from the earnings of the taxpayers.

Once I thought I had found a Government commission that was not gifted with everlasting life, but I was mistaken. It was the National Screw Thread Commission. I doted on that commission because, of all the commissions I knew, it apparently was one that was mortal. And then it was such a romantic commission! After Congress seemingly had exhausted the whole gamut of possiblities in devising commissions to exercise paternalistic dominion over the people it scratched its collective head, thought long and hard, and then brought forth a commission to standardize screw threads. There is your beau ideal of a commission—one to standardize screw threads! I was in the Press Gallery when the bill passed and I gave three inward cheers because, tucked on at the end of the act, was a clause limiting the life of the commission to six months.

That was back in 1918. Ten long, eventful years have elapsed and the commission is still going strong. It has attained a robust existence and an honored and permanent place in the Congressional Directory, where it may be seen on page 327. Three times its life was extended, and finally Congress got tired of this piecemeal business and made it a "continuing commission," so I suppose we shall have the screw threaders with us forever. And in this land of opportunity what an incentive it is to every honest and ambitious statesman to so live and serve his party that in the mellow evening of life he may approach the lengthening shadows with calm and peaceful dignity as a member of the Screw Thread Commission.

What are the evidences of centralization? He who essays to answer that question will find his task well-nigh interminable. I shall not undertake to do more than glimpse a few examples on the horizon. The Government for some 10 years has been operating a barge service on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers. It bought and owns the capital stock of the Inland Waterway Corporation, the former owner of the barge line. The Government conducts the river business and it owns and operates terminal railroads. Deficits, when they occur, afford no concern, for they are conveniently paid from the taxpayers' money in the Federal Treasury. It is the same as if the Government, with all its power and resources, should decide to operate an electric railroad from Wooster to Canton in competition with private enterprise or, on a greater scale, should initiate a Federal-owned transcontinental railroad service, using the resources of the Treasury to buck competing lines. Will some one kindly explain to me what business on earth the Government has of operating a barge canal?

I doubt whether even the Bank of the United States in the palmiest sway of Nicholas Biddle, when Andrew Jackson determined to strike it down as a national menace, ever possessed more power over the welfare of our citizens than the power, statutory and assumed, that is to-day possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Please do not construe me as imputing any tyrannical intentions to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I know Ernest I. Lewis, chairman of the commission, intimately, and I say unreservedly that it is fortunate for the country he occupies the position. He is wise, level-headed, and as patriotic a man as there is in America, but I shudder to think what could happen if the commission should fall into the hands of selfish and designing men who would exercise their powers tyrannically. Probably all of the commission's acts to date have been righteously conceived and beneficently executed. I know nothing to the contrary. But in the Lake Cargo decision it unquestionably proved that it has the power by manipulating rates to prosper one community and blight another; to transfer misery and squalor from one section to another section; to make one city blossom as the rose, while another fades and withers. Congress itself has no magic wand to do things like that. Therefore it is difficult for me to conceive how Congress, if it chose, could delegate such powers to its creature, the Interstate Commerce Commission; but somewhere out of the mysterious sky the commission has grabbed these miraculous powers and folded them to its bosom.

Bureaucracy, overmanned, everexpanding, often arrogant, touches with its domineering attitude almost every phase of life. If Andrew Jackson were in the White House, many of these bureaus would subside or, by the eternal, there would be a warfare that would rock the continent. Take, for instance, the Bureau of Indian Affairs. It is weighed down with highly paid officials whose names fill page after page of the Official Register, so that one almost wonders who gets the lion's share of the thirteen and a half million dollars appropriation annually—the bureaucrats or the Indians. As long as poor Lo is regulated and coddled by bureaucracy, he will remain a helpless and pathetic ward of the Nation, but if the bureau were abolished and he were turned over to the States, he would have an opportunity to learn something of the rights and obligations of citizenship. That would be hard on the bureaucrats, but some very good thinkers believe it would be good for the Indian and the taxpayers. In the atmosphere of bureaucratic Washington, the seasoned observer can not escape the conclusion that many bureaus do not exist to serve the people quite so much as to give fat-salaried and high-powered jobs to bureaucrats.

Bureaucracy has produced myriad forms of paternalism which paralyze individual initiative and tend more and more to centralize the Government at Washington. This aggression, so destructive of local self-government, is not resented as it should be because it comes sugar-coated in the guise of a great boon from the Federal Government. The popular slogan "Let Washington do it" would be more meaningful if it were couched in that other pharse: "Let us surrender our rights and powers to a centralized government." The people who are complacently yielding to this piecemeal dismemberment of local self-government should know that in encouraging the centralization of their affairs in Washington they are digging the grave of the American Government as it was conceived by the fathers. I fear that unless another Andrew Jackson arises to arouse resentment against the trend of government and pilot the ship of state into safer channels, we shall ere long have a republic in name but an absolute bureaucracy in fact, which has been described by no less an authority than Senator BORAH as "the most wasteful, the most extravagant, the most demoralizing and deadly form of government which God has permitted to torture the human family."

Instances of paternalism, big and little, hit us in the face at Washington every time we turn around. The Department of Agriculture has just completed a survey of fibers used in men's clothing and announces its solemn conclusions in Miscellaneous Publication No. 31. The survey discloses the horrendous fact, recorded on page 3, that many men are not wearing union suits, undershirts, or drawers, and the equally stupendous fact that 57 per cent of the men replying reported that they are wearing more silk and rayon socks than they had during the preceding five years. Here paternalism makes some epochal revelations, but it falls short of its duty. It should inform us whether or not it is true that the men are deliberately doing without underwear in order to build up the financial stamina necessary to acquire the silk socks. And if this is found to be true, then paternalism, in order to keep up to date and vigilant, ought to swing into action with a counteracting money-squandering campaign for a better-drawered manhood.

While the paternalistic Department of Agriculture is thus revealing a shocking absence of men's nether garments, the Department of Commerce's frog is jumping into prominence faster than Mark Twain's "jumping frog," which may partially be explained by the fact that it does not have as much lead in its insides. When it comes to shining examples of paternalism the bulletin of the Department of Commerce on the propagation of frogs will always be outstanding. Common sense would suggest that the Federal Government should leave the task of propagating frogs to individuals who are frogistically inclined, but Uncle Sam, standing away up there in his supernal majesty, orders the steady, easy-going frog to multiply and replenish the earth. There is in this book a most romantic chapter on the love affairs of frogs which brings to mind the old nursery rhyme:

"The frog he would a wooing go
Whether his mother would let him, or no."

We learn from this chapter that the gentleman frog sings, or rather croaks, when in love, and that he does not hesitate to die in battle in an effort to win his lady.

It remains for the Cornell savant who wrote this bulletin for the department to furnish clear and specific directions which any boy who aspires to be a frog culturist may readily grasp. For instance, quoting from the bulletin:

"The aquatic salamander, like the newt, frequently pulls off eggs from a frog's egg mass for food. The large forms, like the mud puppy (Necturus) and hellbender (Cryptobranchus), may eat frogs' eggs or larvae if favorably situated. Among frogs there are several species whose adults do not stop at fratricide or cannibalism. In fact, it is one of the factors which has led some frog culturists to abandon bullfrogs, which will feed on anything from frogs to alligators, not even sparing their own progeny."

The freckled Ohio lad who wanders around barefooted in the marshes and herds his frogs will know hereafter—thanks to good old Uncle Sam—that he must be on the look-out for the Necturus and the hellbinder or the Cryptobranchus. However, he may extract some comfort from the reflection that by the time one of his fractious bullfrogs has devoured an alligator it probably will be tired enough to hunt a corner somewhere and rest. I have heard it said that some tight elections have been won by polling the frog vote, and I recommend this bulletin to our politicians who are interested in increasing the number of frogs.

The modest oyster, which takes all kinds of insults without squealing, is the subject of more than 20 Government publications dealing with its habits, its ancestry and its crustaceous kin, and its ultimate gastronomic destination. In one of its absorbing works entitled "The Principles of Window Curtaining," the Government directs housewives how to arrange their window curtains. Numerous bureaucratic publications are devoted to instructing mothers in the duties of motherhood, and in every instance the author of the publication is a confirmed old spinster.

A United States Senator told me the other day that when he was in the Far East he read a survey of the industries of Japan, issued by one of our Government commissions. It was regarded in the Orient as a standard work. It occurred to him that it was very kind of our Government to go to the trouble and expense of performing this service for Japan, but that it probably would be a long time before Japan or any other foreign country surveys our industries for our benefit.

Congress this winter is living up to its usual paternalistic form. For the purpose of enabling the Public Health Service to send out emissaries and teach the people how to kill flies, screen their windows, drink pure water, and otherwise take good care of themselves, after the normal fashion of sane and circumspect beings, Congress passed an appropriation of $250,000 in the Treasury appropriation bill. The Senate tried to add $47,000 to this amount, but that was a little more than even the fatherly house could stand, and the extra amount was stricken out in conference, leaving an exact quarter of a million to be spent for this beneficent education in fly killing, window screening, etc. Be it said, to the credit of Representative WILLIAM R. WOOD, acting chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, an able and consistent foe of paternalism, that he fought this nonsense from start to finish, but he could not get the support necessary to defeat it.

How Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson would shudder if they could see the Government doing all it does to-day, from operating ships and railroads to prescribing castor oil for babies! If the drift toward paternalism continues, we shall have American life standardized according to forms prescribed at Washington; education will be acquired through uniform textbooks and the everlasting sameness will destroy individuality and initiative in the growing youth; the bureaucrats will tell us what to think and how to think it!

The natural accompaniment of this luxuriant paternalism is a perfect maze of laws which confront the citizen at every turn and annoy him with statutory "Thou shalts" and "Thou shalt nots." The dictum enunciated by Jefferson and supported by Jackson of "the least governed, the best governed" has been perverted by the bureaucrats into "The most governed, the best governed." Altogether there are 52,499 statutes, which have been codified into a volume of 2,465 pages and over 5,000,000 words. The purpose of every paternalistic statute is to coddle somebody or some class and the expense of coddling is borne by those who are not coddled. The people pay the freight. The whole network of paternalism is only special privilege in another name, and it is special privilege run wild. The theory underlying all paternalism is that some are to prosper at the expense of all. It is a false theory; it is undemocratic; it is un-American.

As Democrats we should take a stand for economy in Government; for the stoppage of the enormous waste; for a simplification of the forms of government; for the elimination of bureaus and agencies that are pyramided sky-high on the fundamental structure of our fathers until the amazing superstructure entirely obscures the original and grinds our people with needless and oppressive taxes. In Washington we have half a dozen bureaus, each with its own overhead, gathering statistics, when one statistical bureau would suffice for all purposes. We have one department with jurisdiction over the polar bear, another with jurisdiction over the black bear and still another lording it over the cinnamon bear.

We have bureaus vying with each other in spending the people's money without any sense of cooperation or economy, as when the Army and the Navy during the World War and thereafter went out into the markets and insanely competed with each other in the purchase of supplies, each seeking to secure the utmost advantage over the other. In a reorganization of the Government, in the abolishment of paternalistic bureaus and in a systematic coordination of other bureaus to do away with overlapping, all to the end of restoring Jeffersonian simplicity and efficiency in American institutions, democracy faces one of its greatest opportunities. We should not only take a stand against these sinister spawns of paternalism but we should fight them incessantly until the whole country becomes aroused to the danger that confronts us. Oh, for another "Old Hickory" to lead our Nation in these crucial times!

With special privilege corrupting the body politic and breaking out in such hideous splotches as the oil scandals; with centralization all but complete and paternalism everywhere invading fields that should be sacred to private endeavor, the hope of the Nation is in a return to common honesty in government. From out of the background of history come the glory circled figures of Jefferson and Jackson to point the way. In them the image of God shines most brightly. Just as they held true to human rights in the beginning, so will they not fail us now. Let us, one and all, cultivate their love of humanity until it becomes once more a flaming torch to light up the cities and the deserts, the prairies and the granite hills. And as Democrats who believe in Jefferson and Jackson let us not fail to exemplify in our own lives the wonderful philosophy of helpfulness and equality, one toward another.

The beauty of our philosophy is that it fosters comradeship. It makes brothers of you and me, and all of us. It binds men one to another with hoops of steel. It recognizes the eternal truth that a hickory shirt or calico dress may cover a heart as pure and true as any that beats beneath purple and fine linen; that virtue dwells as often in humble cottages and by-ways as in palaces. Unlike a government dominated by bureaucrats and catering to special privilege, it is no close corporation. Into its community of service whosoever will, may come. At its table is always spread a feast of love; it invites the oncoming generations to take their stand for brotherhood and equal rights, and posterity throngs to the reception. We should manifest an interest in people, not for the purpose of exploiting them but for the purpose of assisting them to higher and happier levels of living. We should love our fellow men for what we can do for them and not, as the exponents of special privilege would have it, for what we can squeeze out of them. The concern of this Nation should be to see that the average citizen prospers; that however hard and drab may be the surroundings of boys and girls, in whose breasts a righteous ambition burns, they shall have their chance to grow into the larger life; that their God-given right to reach the full stature of useful manhood and womanhood and to enjoy the fruits of honest toil shall not be barred or abridged by privileged statutes and practices that rob them of their birthright before they have fairly started on life's journey.

We can do nothing finer, we can do nothing grander than to help our fellow mortals over the rough places of life. That is what Thomas Jefferson did; that is what Andrew Jackson did; that is democracy. And when democracy comes before the people unalloyed nothing can beat it; nothing should beat it, because it is in consonance with the best there is in life.

I once heard a captain of special privilege say sneeringly of one of my fellow Democrats: "Oh, he is just a plain, honest, sincere person; that's all he is." That is all any of us should ever want to be. A nation made up of "plain, honest, sincere persons" would be about as near millennial perfection as any nation I can imagine. The essence of democracy is simplicity. The greatest thing in the whole world is service, and we should not forget that true service has a spiritual quality. If I love you I will serve you devotedly, nor ever count the cost. And so it is with service on the bigger scale, commonly known as the public service. The incentive and the inspiration of all genuine public service is love, and love flows from a sympathetic human understanding.

Let us, therefore, as Democrats, strive to reestablish in this country a public service in which the individual citizen will be the uncrowned king of all; in which selfishness and sordidness will be supplanted by love and equality, as envisioned by the mighty Jefferson. Let us forget all differences and as a party fight as Jackson and his rugged followers fought to bring the Government back to its constitutional moorings. When we do this we not only will put our party in line for certain victory, but we will be rendering the very best service it is possible to render to this great American commonwealth.

LIEN FOR TAXES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present an opinion published in the Internal Revenue Bulletin of January 7, 1929, headed "Section 613—Lien for Taxes," which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 613.—LIEN FOR TAXES

(VIII–1–4056. G. C. M. 5432)

REVENUE ACT OF 1928 AND PRIOR REVENUE ACTS

"A notice of lien filed by a collector with the proper official covers all the property and rights of property, whether real or personal, belonging to the delinquent taxpayer, and operates as a lien on bank deposits of a taxpayer and on debts due a taxpayer though a specific notice of the lien has not been served on the bank or on the debtors of the delinquent taxpayer."

An opinion is requested as to whether a notice of an income tax lien duly filed and recorded operates as a lien on bank deposits of the taxpayer and on debts due to the taxpayer when specific notice of the lien has not been served on the bank or on the debtors.

Under the provisions of section 3186, Revised Statutes, as amended by section 613 of the revenue act of 1928, an income tax lien covers "all property and rights to property, whether real or personal," belonging to the delinquent taxpayer. This same provision was contained in section 3186 in its original form and also in its amended forms as appearing in the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 1016), and in the act of February 26, 1925 (43 Stat. 994), so that an outstanding income tax lien, whether notice thereof was filed before or after the enactment of the revenue act of 1928, must be regarded as covering all property and rights to property of the delinquent taxpayer.

The provisions of section 3186, Revised Statutes (in its original and its amended forms), have often received judicial construction, as, for example, in the following cases: Osterberg v. United Trust Co. (93 U. S. 424), United States v. Snyder (149 U. S. 210), United States v. Kaufman (267 U. S. 408), United States v. Allen (14 Fed. 263), United States v. Curry (201 Fed. 371), In re Wyley Co. (292 Fed. 900), Heyward v. United States (2 Fed. (2d) 467), In re Baltimore Pearl Hominy Co. (5 Fed. (2d) 553), and Sherwood v. Sherwood (5 Fed. (2d) 991).

The cited cases as a whole fully sustained the validity of the Government's lien for tax upon the property and rights to property of a delinquent taxpayer; and while those cases adjudicated since March 4, 1913 (when section 3186, Revised Statutes, was first amended to require the filing of a notice of the tax lien to make the same valid as against mortgagees, purchasers, and judgment creditors), do not specifically pass upon the question submitted, they recognize, by implication at least, the validity of tax liens, notices of which were filed in the manner prescribed by the statute.

It will be noted from a reading of section 3186, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 26, 1925 (in which amended form the phraseology of the 1913 form was preserved in totidem verbis, there being inserted in appropriate places in the second proviso thereof a designation of certain local officers of the States of Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Vermont as among those with whom notice of tax lien might be filed), that a collector was under no obligation to furnish a copy of the notice of lien to any bank or debtor of the delinquent taxpayer. The collector's duty under the law was performed fully when he filed the notice of the lien in the office of the public official authorized under the statute to receive the same for filing. The identical situation is existent with respect to notices of lien filed since the enactment of the revenue act of 1928. As an administrative policy based on a desire the better to protect the interests of the United States and to enable depositaries (such as banks, trust companies, and other holders of assets or credits of delinquent taxpayers) to become advised of the existence of tax liens, collectors have been permitted to furnish depositaries with copies of the notice in exceptional cases. These copies are not furnished in all cases. Indeed, they could not be, for in a great majority of cases where notices of lien are filed the exact location of the taxpayers' property is unknown to the collector filing the notices.

Neither is the copy, whenever furnished to a private person (whether corporate or individual, as distinguished from the public officer designated by law as the proper recipient of the original notice), furnished because of any legal right to receive the same. It is intended merely as an informative document respecting the claim of the United States upon the property and rights to property of the delinquent taxpayer. The question submitted for opinion must therefore be answered in the affirmative.

In this connection reference is made to another process in the internal-revenue practice which often is confused with the filing of notices of lien. The process of distraint authorized by section 3187, Revised Statutes, et seq., is one of the processes by which an existing lien for taxes may be enforced. Under section 3187, as amended by section 1016 of the revenue act of 1924, a bank account is subject to distraint. Collectors are directed when levying upon a simple contract debt, such as a bank or other deposit, to attach to the original notification form, addressed to the depositary, a copy of the warrant of distraint and of the notice of lien. Whenever distraint of a bank account is sought to be made, the depositor is entitled to a copy of the notice of lien. In connection with the process of distraint, attention is directed to section 1114(e) of the revenue act of 1926, which indicates clearly the duty of all holders of assets belonging to a delinquent taxpayer, or in which he has legal rights, to surrender the same to the collector upon the service of a distraint warrant in order to avoid the liability imposed by this section upon one who declines to honor the collector's levy.

C. M. CHAREST,
General Counsel, Bureau of Internal Revenue.

ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have gathered together some data with reference to prohibition and prohibition enforcement that I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

FOR THE BEST AND MOST PRACTICABLE PLAN FOR MAKING THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT EFFECTIVE

DURANT PRIZE CONTEST, 1928

[Progress report by Durant award office, January 5, 1929, New York]

THE DURANT PRIZE OFFERS

1. August 27, 1928, contest announced; $25,000 offered for the "best and most practicable plan for making the eighteenth amendment effective."

2. August 28, $5,000 offered for the best and most practicable plan from any high school or preparatory school.

3. Committee of award announced, as per page — herein.

4. December 1, contest closed, with 23,230 contributors from every State in the Union, every colonial possession, and a score of foreign countries.

5. December 4, committee of award organized.

6. Mr. Durant offered facilities and services for whatever study of plans the committee might direct.

7. December 4–20, all plans and supplementary letters and documents were studied; 64,000 proposals were checked and tallied in proper classifications; helpful comments, facts, or local color were crossed and noted on cards; special features were marked for later study; plans were grouped and regrouped, until 230 were left for intensive comparison, with all identifying marks removed.

8. December 20, the committee of award worked from 10 a. m. to 8.30 p. m., reading, grading, and comparing 20 plans; selected by number the 2 plans to receive the $25,000 and the $5,000 prizes; notified Mr. Durant that they preferred to adjourn without knowing the names of the two winners; and suggested that a "mosaic" of best suggestions from all plans be published.

9. December 25, the winners were announced and renewed public discussion of law enforcement began.

FOREWORD

By W. C. Durant

JANUARY 1, 1929.

Now that the award of the prize committee has been published in full throughout the country, with its aftermath of comment from Government officials, editorial writers, and others, it may not be amiss to disclose the idea which prompted the offer made by me last summer.

Before sailing for Europe it became necessary for me to renew my passport, and in making application therefor I was required to take the usual oath of allegiance by which I promised to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies—foreign and domestic.

On my way across my thought reverted to our country's greatest domestic enemy—the bootlegger. I knew that the bootlegger, our country's greatest enemy, was so systematically organized and protected that he could, with perfect confidence and with absolute security, traffic in death-dealing and health-destroying poisons. I knew that the bootlegger, our country's greatest enemy, recognized no law and would stop at nothing to gain his ends.

I knew that Government agents were subsidized and witnesses intimidated by the bootlegger, our country's greatest enemy, and that this great criminal class were being encouraged and supported by honest, decent men and women of America, otherwise law-abiding. I feared that unless something more were done the situation would get beyond control, and while I did not wish to pose as a reformer, I submitted the prize offer in the hope that public interest might be aroused and a great national movement inaugurated that would to some extent correct the distressing and dangerous conditions existing.

On my arrival in Paris I decided to offer a prize for the best and most practicable plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective, and appointed a committee of 15 men and women of prominence and unquestioned integrity to pass upon the plans submitted. The invitation to the several members of the committee reads as follows:

"As an advocate of law observance and for the purpose of attracting the attention of the best minds in our country, I am offering a prize of $25,000 for a practicable plan, if such can be suggested, for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. I am desirous of securing the cooperation of men of prominence, competent to deal with a subject of such national importance, and am appointing a committee of 15 to review the plans which are being submitted in response to my offer.

"The committee will organize itself and will have entire control of the work, determining policies and methods of procedure. If, in the judgment of the majority of the committee, no practicable and worthy plan is submitted, the prize will be paid to any charity designated by the committee. I extend a cordial invitation to you to become a member of the committee and will be greatly honored if you will accept. Please understand that I am not inviting a discussion of the merits of the eighteenth amendment, but expect the contest to be confined to the best plan to make the law effective."

Plans were submitted by Federal judges, district attorneys, ex-Cabinet officers, Senators, and Representatives suggesting changes in penalties and improvements in legal procedure. Plans were submitted by prohibition officers, with valuable suggestions for extending the work of prohibition agents and in raising the level of the personnel.

Plans were submitted by ex-governors, mayors, chiefs of police, sheriffs, coroners, and prison wardens based on the illicit-liquor conditions in their own localities and their reflections on the question. Plans were submitted by thousands of other eager men and women contributing their thought and effort to the cause of law observance. A total of 23,230 plans was submitted containing information of great value. Some of these plans will be published in full, others in part. A study of the plans submitted will bring the conviction that earnest and sincere thought and invaluable constructive suggestions have been given to the subject by thousands of people.

In his speech accepting the Republican nomination for President, August 11, Herbert Hoover, referring to the prohibition situation, said:

"Common sense compels us to realize that grave abuses have occurred, abuses which must be remedied. An organized, searching investigation of fact and causes can alone determine the wise method of correcting them."

In line with Candidate Hoover's declaration, why not a congressional fact-finding committee to discover and inform the country, President Coolidge, and President-elect Hoover as to why the eighteenth amendment has not been satisfactorily enforced? This fact-finding committee would gather much information that the President needs and that the people want.

To such a committee I would gladly turn over the rich material in the files of the prize contest, but if such a committee were appointed I would suggest an appropriation sufficient to defray the expenses of many hundreds of men and women who, as evidenced by our files, would be able to give such testimony as would awaken the sleeping conscience of millions of otherwise law-abiding citizens who are now thoughtlessly encouraging and supporting the country's greatest enemy—the bootlegger.

I am convinced more strongly than ever that the people upon whom our country depends for happiness and prosperity are determined that the bootlegger, our country's greatest enemy, must go. Telegrams, telephone messages, and letters from leading business men and other leaders of public thought leave no room for doubt that a nation reared on "Don't give up the ship," "We have just begun to fight," "Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute," will never yield to bootleggers, hijackers, and official lawbreakers.

This résumé of the contest's purpose and first results is a first move toward making available the veritable mine of material contributed to our contest. I hope it will prove helpful in learning what next steps our Government and all our educational forces might profitably take toward making the eighteenth amendment effective.

THE PRIZE OFFERS

NEW YORK, N. Y., August 27, 1928.

The first duty of a good citizen is to obey the law. The highest law of the land is the Constitution. Part of the Constitution is the eighteenth amendment. It was put into the Constitution by an overwhelming vote, passed by Congress, and ratified by the legislatures of 46 of the 48 States. Action contrary to the law is a crime and the offender is a criminal.

For the widespread disobedience to the liquor law as embodied in the Constitution the business leaders of the country are very largely responsible. Had our business leaders frowned upon instead of encouraging bootlegging, had they observed the law and encouraged its observance, had they raised their voices in protest of public and private violations, had they used their money and their influence to obtain a fair trial for one of the best measures ever adopted by this or any other country—in other words, if they had supported the Constitution of the United States—our public officials (including our judges), our children, our servants, our employees, and the thinking public generally would without question have caught the spirit of law observance—a very necessary requisite if we are to have a safe and permanent Government.

Bootleg liquor has become the most widely advertised factor in the social life of men whose names are synonymous with success, wealth, and power in their communities. The contagion of their lawlessness spreads through the entire population. This means impairment of the carefully built safeguards of personal and property rights. Business leaders, who have the largest stake in law observance, set the example of law defiance.

It is my belief that the majority of our people do not want the eighteenth amendment abandoned. It was made a part of the Constitution because there was need of it. People want it enforced and obeyed.

In order to give expression to the soundest thought in the country on the subject I offer a prize of $25,000 for the best and most practicable plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective.

The prize will be awarded by a committee of prominent men and women now being selected.

Competitive offerings must be typewritten and not exceed 2,000 words in length and must be submitted prior to December 1 to the prize committee on eighteenth amendment, Room 2401, Fisk Building, New York City.

Prize will be awarded and paid December 25.

W. C. DURANT.

TO PRINCIPALS AND HEADMASTERS OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS

The major issue in our country to-day is the problem of law enforcement and obedience to law. To paraphrase the words of Lincoln, it is a question whether our institutions can endure with a citizenship half lawless and half law-abiding.

It is my belief that the majority of our people do not want the eighteenth amendment abandoned. The legislatures of 46 of the 48 States voted the eighteenth amendment into the Federal Constitution because there was need of it. Naturally the people want it enforced and obeyed.

In order to give expression to the soundest thought of the country upon this subject, I have offered a prize of $25,000 for the best plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective. Herewith a copy of the $25,000 prize announcement.

I have now decided to offer a further prize of $5,000 for the best and most practicable plan submitted by a student in a high school or preparatory school. Of this sum, $1,000 will be awarded to the student submitting the prize-winning plan and $4,000 to the student's school.

Your institution is invited to submit a plan selected from among those prepared by your students, the successful contestant in your school to be chosen by an elimination contest conducted under your direction. Each school is entitled to present only one plan.

The prize award will be made by a committee of prominent men and women now being selected.

Competitive offerings must not exceed 2,000 words in length and must be submitted prior to December 1. Prizes will be awarded and paid December 25.

Plans received in the high school-preparatory school competition, if of sufficient merit, are likewise eligible to compete for the grand prize of $25,000.

Possibly some of your students may be interested. The work of preparation would be an education in the complexities of our greatest national problem which, after all, must be solved by the younger generation.

Plans must be typewritten and forwarded to prize committee on eighteenth amendment, room 2401, Fisk Building, New York City.

Very truly yours,

W. C. DURANT.

WHO CONTRIBUTED?

Answers poured in from every State and Territorial possession and from every type of locality and person. One reader, through whose hands only a small part of the plans passed, jotted down the following vocations:

Ex-Cabinet officers.
United States Senators and Representatives.
Federal judges.
United States district attorneys.
Officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.
American consuls.
Bureau chiefs.
Scientists in Government employ.
United States marshals.
Enforcement officers.
Secret-service men.
Postmasters and railway mail clerks.
Governors and ex-governors.
Judges of State supreme courts.
State attorney generals.
Judges of lower courts.
Prosecuting attorneys.
Clerks of courts.
Legislators and other State officials.
Sheriffs.
Coroners.
Mayors of large cities.
Chiefs of police.
Deputies, constables, and policemen.
Justices of the peace.
Wardens of prisons.
Presidents of universities.
Deans of colleges.
Professors.
School superintendents.
Principals of high schools.
Headmasters of private schools.
Instructors and teachers galore.
Bishops.
Clergymen of many denominations.
Officers of the Salvation Army.
Heads of hospitals.
Surgeons, physicians, and research men.
Captains of Infantry.
Bankers.
Manufacturers.
Merchants.
Salesmanagers.
Engineers.
Chemists.
Architects.
Electrical experts.
Lawyers.
Authors.
Editors, correspondents, and reporters.
Advertising men.
Publishers.
Psychologists.
Shipmasters.
Pharmacists.
Trainmasters, dispatchers, conductors.
Certified public accountants.
Bookkeepers.
Court reporters.
Executive secretaries.
Private secretaries and stenographers.
Clerks and floorwalkers.
Janitors.
Cigar makers.
Tailors.
Milliners.
Window dressers.
Trained nurses.
Dieticians.
Lumbermen.
Railroad employees.
Miners.
Farmers and stockmen.
Officers of farmers' organizations.
Officials of labor unions.

Leaders of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, Anti-Saloon League, and other organizations supporting prohibition.

People occupying high places in various secret, fraternal, and benevolent orders.

Officers or members of sororities and women's clubs and societies.

Officers of the Grand Army of the Republic, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion, and other patriotic organizations of ex-soldiers.

To the above list many more sources might be added, including humorists, "colyumists," and contributors to vox populi or readers' forum columns of newspapers.

Over a hundred plans were received from foreign countries, although only citizens were eligible to compete. One was from a general in the Brazilian Army. Another was written by an official in China. A number of Japanese competed. Paris and France were well represented. Other plans came from England, Germany, Italy, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Rumania, Australia, Austria, Bermuda, Brazil, Canada, Haiti, India, Mexico, Poland, Persia, and Spain. Many were written in foreign languages. Missionaries in Africa, Asia, and Oceania contributed.

A Cuban would have propaganda to show how foreigners ridicule the United States on account of its lawlessness.

A Bolivian would give rewards to those who tell of lawbreakers; take licenses away from ships and automobiles found to contain illicit liquor; give special prizes to policemen who detect citizen violators; and imprison bootleggers three years.

A Peruvian would recognize that the solution must start with the family; would hold parents responsible for minors' offenses; and have equal penalties for women.

A Frenchman would have citizens recognize that the best way to suppress is to replace and would have wine cultivated to replace liquor.

Two plans from Brazil agreed in recommending that photographs of lawbreakers be publicly displayed. Two agreed that offenders should lose their civil rights. One would treat medical alcohol chemically so as to make it undrinkable, imprison all those found under the influence of drink until they tell where they got it, confiscate all property of those found to manufacture not under the law, confiscate all machinery and accessories of law violation, have employers promise to discharge all drinkers, and deport foreigners found to be violating the law.

Another Brazilian plan would take licenses away from physicians found to violate the law, would send a person to jail for a third offense, take civil rights away from bootleggers, and broadcast posters for public education.

THE COMMITTEE OF AWARD

Fifteen accepted Mr. Durant's invitation to serve on the committee of award. Ten participated in the final reading of 20 plans and selecting two winners. They were:

Chairman, W. O. Thompson, president emeritus Ohio State University and moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, Columbus, Ohio.

Secretary, William H. Allen, director of the Institute for Public Service, New York.

George Gordon Battle, attorney, New York.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, minister, editor, radio teacher, Brooklyn (by proxy).

Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, president of the Radio Corporation of America, New York.

Robert L. Owen, former United States Senator from Oklahoma.

Owen Roberts, attorney and special United States counsel, Philadelphia.

Elmer Schlesinger, attorney, New York (by proxy).

G. P. Whaley, president of the Vacuum Oil Co., New York.

The following were unable to attend:

Jane Addams, Hull House Social Settlement, Chicago, because of illness; United States Senators BORAH and GLASS were detained in Washington by legislative duties; Bruce Barton, advertising specialist and author, New York, was unable to return to the city in time; William G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, had unavoidable appointments in California, but wrote principles which he felt should be followed; Dr. Stephen S. Wise, rabbi and lecturer, New York, was unexpectedly called to Europe.

HOW CONTRIBUTIONS WERE STUDIED

Every contribution was read by an editorial staff of over 50 editors, governmental researchers, social-science teachers, and school principals at least twice, the more valuable ones from 10 to 20 times or oftener.

Besides being read for the purpose of grouping plans and deciding which should have a more careful study, every contribution was read and marked for its specific proposals and for its notably useful facts, diagrams, local coloring, or comments. In all, 64,257 proposals were tallied and classified. Moreover, several thousand cards containing material for ready reference are in the permanent file, properly classified under the tally sheet headings.

Thus, besides two winning plans, the contest produced innumerable constructive suggestions that can be wrought into a mosaic or composite best plan for official and citizen use.

Thus plans which were repeatedly placed in group 1 by different readers were finally "denamed," so that future readers should not find the name, address, or any other distinguishing mark upon such a paper. There were 230 of these, which went through several elimination steps, until 20 plans were selected for submission to the committee of award as indubitably the best among 23,230.

On December 20 the committee of award met from 10 a. m. to 8.30 p. m. The plans before them bore no distinguishing marks. The names and addresses of the 20 contributors were in sealed envelopes which the committee never opened. Instead, it adjourned without knowing who the two winners were, preferring to learn, as the public would learn, from the newspapers the day after Christmas.

Many a plan contained so many separate suggestions and so many quotable phrases or otherwise usable data that the checks for suggestions and x's for words to be typed on cards made it look like the mottling of chicken pox.

Although 64,000 suggestions were made, it was difficult, in the hurry with which this work must be done, to convince readers that instructions meant literally what they said, namely, that every single suggestion should be checked. While, therefore, no suggestion appeals in the tally sheet which was not made one or more times, the figure 64,257 is an understatement of the total number of suggestions actually accounted for by the study which Mr. Durant made possible.

WHAT PLANS ARE PROPOSED

In all, 64,257 specific proposals were classified and counted. Many of the weightiest plans urged continuous fact finding as to the actual working of prohibition by all supervisors of enforcement officers; by local, State, and National bodies of citizens; and by the President, as the one individual upon whom final responsibility rests, for defending the Constitution, for enforcing the law, and for learning where, if at all, modification of law is needed in order to make the eighteenth amendment effective.

The prevalence of belief that there must be the "will to enforce" is shown by 16,108 separate suggestions for different phases of basic education and propaganda and 904 proposals for indirect preparedness toward making the eighteenth amendment effective.

Several types of forceful proposals with varying approaches and emphasis are included herewith. They illustrate the many-sided help which leaders of citizen thought and action are prepared to give if Congress, the President, and the President elect will invite it.

MASTER TALLY SHEET OF SPECIFIC PROPOSALS

The 64,257 steps accounted for in the tally related to eight different phases of making the eighteenth amendment effective, as follows:

To organization for enforcement	6,996
To modifying the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act	7,956
To State or local organization and administration for enforcing	2,569
To international relations	1,392
To education and propaganda	16,108
To procedure for enforcing	12,112
To penalties	15,520
To indirect and general resources for making the eighteenth amendment effective	904

The tally sheet is reproduced in detail with two reminders: It was a working sheet, and its order alphabetical rather than logical for speed's sake in tallying; and it is a photograph of proposals that poured in and carries neither approval nor disapproval by the Durant award office.

Belief in "cave-man" penalties and "hysterical" remedies are reported as forces deserving public study along with 400 proposals for light wines and beer, 1,536 proposals for Government manufacture and sale of liquors, an appeal to put red pants on bootleggers, 1,392 suggestions for winning other nations' cooperation in prohibition enforcement, and 736 for leadership by big business in making prohibition popular, etc.

	Number of persons suggesting
I. Organization for enforcement	6,996
A. Existing organizations	3,388
1. Army, Navy—use	1,171
2. Cabinet	129
3. Civil service—certify	62
4. Courts—more	436
5. Department of Justice, put under	669
6. Governors	116
7. President	337
8. Treasury—retain	134
9. Treasury—remove from	305
10. Other or variations of above: Department of Labor spread information	29
B. New organizations proposed	3,608
1. Bureau in an existing department	114
2. Business men's committee	208
3. Citizens' committee	299
4. Commission for investigation	326
5. Department of prohibition	551
6. Dictator	422
7. Federal commission	486
8. New national society	462
9. Spy system	679
10. Other or variations of above: Enough special Federal courts; dollar-a-year men as enforcers; draft medical profession; research bureau; a West Point for enforcement officers	61
II. United States modification	7,956
A. Eighteenth amendment	774
1. Amend amendment	418
2. Change name of amendment	22
3. Referendum	181
4. Repeal	150
5. Other or variations of above: State option	3
B. Volstead Act	5,340
1. Revise generally	634
2. Light wines and beer	400
3. Government manufacture and sale	1,050
4. Government dispensing centers	486
5. Government control of grain, fruit	460
6. Government control of machinery of manufacture	352
7. Government control of denaturing plants	211
8. No permits—sacramental	259
9. No permits—druggists and doctors	489
10. New padlock law	114
11. Bond alcohol users	115
12. Make home-brewing a crime	240
13. Make violation treason	131
14. Permittees to make reports	135
15. Other or variations of above: Allow home-brew; unlimited prescriptions from doctors and druggists; no injunctions; give profits of Government handling to the poor; make every citizen an enforcement agent; put poison in all industrial alcohol; let churches distribute liquor; require purchaser to register for drug prescriptions; bond hotels; ration families; higher tax on alcohol; prohibit alcohol in patent medicines; examine records of doctors and druggists; require duplicate prescriptions, one for prohibition office; scientifically define intoxication; forbid sale of jugs, glasses, shakers, stills; require search warrants; do not require search warrants; treat Volstead violators as counterfeiters are treated	264
C. Officeholders, employees	1,842
1. Fine the lax	245
2. Hard labor for the lax	109
3. Jail for nonenforcement	717
4. Lose position	743
5. Other or variations of above: Deprive of citizenship; impeach lax judges; do away with elective judges; have more women enforcers; expose heads who do not enforce law; engage only law supporters as enforcers; impeach violating Congressmen	28
III. State or local organization and administration for enforcing	2,569
1. Control dances	69
2. Control clubs and parties	173
3. Control transportation	260
4. Federal money to State	120
5. Federal officers in State	211
6. Police—service reports	91
7. Protect State right	135
8. State director	278
9. State officers—more	231
10. State law like Federal	553
11. State prohibition districts	331
12. Other or variations of above: Disbar attorneys who impede justice; disbar lawyers defending lawbreakers; make violation a felony; punish noninformers; only dry lawyers to try cases; only nondrinkers for jury; other enforcers than sheriffs in rural districts; State's attorney as chief enforcer; State enforcement acts; close night clubs; disarm citizens; uniform State laws; permit wife to testify against husband; impeach lax governors; Federal aid for State enforcement; register drinkers; central police bureaus; nonresidents for judges and jurors; tax towns as cooffenders; a women's committee to appoint and discharge agents	117
IV. Foreign relations	1,392
1. Embassies—no liquor privileges	128
2. Foreign ships—no liquor privileges	86
3. Treaties with other nations	416
4. "Unfriendly act"—smuggling liquor	95
5. Withdraw United States consuls from liquor sources	35
6. Watch boundaries	613
7. Other or variations of above: Extend 3-mile limit to 30 or 100 miles; joint court for international violators; world convention on prohibition; require foreign visitors to obey law	19

	Number of persons suggesting
V. Education and propaganda	16,108
A. Basic education	6,486
1. Church training	1,092
2. General education—constitution	2,629
3. Parents—home training	557
4. Schools—teach civics	586
5. Schools—teach prohibition	1,465
6. Other or variations of above: Americanize; no lady teachers; educate violators; use only drys as teachers; have prize essays; use profits from Government manufacture to educate school children on enforcement; moral suasion; no motion pictures of drinkers; speed up trials; use parent-teacher associations; psychological tests for parents; post office distribute prohibition facts	157
B. Propaganda	9,622
1. Anti-Saloon League	207
2. Big men—lend support	736
3. Federal publicity bureau	363
4. Federation of churches	388
5. Government control—press and speech	392
6. Health and temperance societies	558
7. "Minute men" speeches	264
8. Movies	729
9. National publicity campaign	1,852
10. Newspapers and magazines	1,342
11. Radio	788
12. Scientific research—publish reports	729
13. Woman's Christian Temperance Union	311
14. Slogans	528
15. Posters	130
16. Other or variations of above: Start a prohibition magazine; annual "Antiliquor day"; "Prohibition day"; "National temperance day"; pledge auto drivers; insurance company pamphlets on evils of alcohol; popular songs; omit moral and religious aspects; organize "Old Glory clubs"; cartoon, drama, and novel contests; scholarships; Young Men's Christian Association; Boy Scouts; do away with private dry organizations; good crook stories; tell women that use of liquor impairs their personal appearance; postage stamp with prohibition slogan; national dry workers' council; enlist aid of telegraph companies to refuse rum-runners' messages	305
VI. Procedure for enforcing	12,812
A. Enforcement officers	6,164
1. Larger appropriations and forces	1,004
2. Better type of men	1,646
3. Civil-service appointment	617
4. Drafted by President	124
5. Frequent shifting of fields	184
6. Higher pay	584
7. More raids	169
8. Nondrinkers	507
9. Publish names of personnel	60
10. Rewards for convictions	496
11. Rewards advertised	75
12. Recommended by citizens	56
13. Recommended by clubs	9
14. Recommended by Woman's Christian Temperance Union	18
15. Special training	229
16. Other or variations of above: Use adequate check-up system; only American-born officers; bond all officers; Federal police officers; World War veterans; regular reports by officers; clean up Washington, D. C.; discontinue snooping methods	386
B. Trial	1,230
1. Bondsmen—abolish	100
2. No jury	111
3. Pleading—abolish	65
4. Prohibition cases—precedence	49
5. Search warrants not necessary	385
6. Speedy trial	401
7. Other or variations of above: Only Federal courts; jurors from other counties; more women on juries	119
C. General	5,418
1. Arrest rich as well as poor	623
2. Elect drys to office	623
3. Life record of citizens	113
4. Listing of seizures	33
5. Oath of allegiance	220
6. Pledge officers	297
7. Politics out of prohibition, take	619
8. Police responsible for beats	179
9. Presidential proclamation	162
10. President and Cabinet in favor of law	100
11. Protestant administration	25
12. Recall of judges for nonenforcement	178
13. Reward for informers	1,293
14. Search airports	40
15. Select public officials pledged to law	354
16. Other or variations of above: Let President call governors in conference and governors appoint committees to study enforcement; fingerprint offenders; medal for model commissioner; substitutes for saloons; censor theaters; search automobiles and trucks	430

	Number of persons suggesting
VII. Penalties	15,520
A. Consumer	2,690
1. Equal punishment with seller	1,588
2. Fine	145
3. Intoxicated drivers—revoke license	241
4. Jail sentence	268
5. Jail sentence intoxicated drivers	127
6. Tell source—compel consumer to	299
7. Other or variations of above: Capital punishment for consumer and posterity to fourth generation; who's who consumers and blacklist offenders; flood country with poison liquor to scare people	22
B. Violators in general	12,830
1. Capital punishment	187
2. Convict gangs	87
3. Confiscate property	815
4. Close distributing centers	117
5. Disfranchise	477
6. Deport alien offenders	1,320
7. Fine	568
8. Jail sentence—all convictions	2,122
9. Jail sentence—aiding	326
10. Jail sentence and fine	872
11. Jail sentence and hard labor	505
12. Jail sentence—presence at place	80
13. Life imprisonment	188
14. Moral punishment—ostracize	152
15. Padlock	252
16. Penal farm	191
17. Quarantine	48
18. Publicity for violators	297
19. Reformatory for minors	52
20. Torture	60
21. Whipping	73
22. Women—punish	173
23. More severe penalties	1,856
24. Graduated penalties	1,241
25. No pardon or parole	490
26. Other or variations of above: Brand violators; destroy violators' equipment; extend Baumes law; Federal prisons for bootleggers; no passports for violators; also deport citizens for violation; deport bootleggers; train dogs to catch bootleggers; take children from convict mothers; sink ships carrying bootleg liquor; tatoo violators; if buyer dies, send bootlegger to electric chair; compel bootlegger to go to church every Sunday; fine enough to cover reward; deport those who speak against prohibition; forbid publication of violation; censor wet press; put violators in rogues galleries	272
VIII. Indirect and general	904
1. Abolish poverty	29
2. Christianize the nation	161
3. Deport all aliens	71
4. Pledge all people	300
5. Stricter immigration laws	164
6. Three-quarters jury verdict	24
7. Other or variations of above: Substitutes for drink; cure drinkers; eliminate desire for alcohol; drinking fountains on streets; dismiss students for drinking; no marriage for drinkers; have State referenda; no jokes in newspapers; no ridicule of amendment; compulsory voting; rest rooms for physically tired; pension people living a sober life up to 45 years; round up loiterers; exclude wets from churches; 48-hour week so that workers can enjoy their leisure; public liquor fountain, turned off at night; allow men no trouser pockets, and only one in coat 2 inches deep; destroy capitalism; further restrict immigration; remove curtains from soft-drink places; require every bootlegger to wear red pants and when caught without them to be put in prison	155

THIRTY-TWO SEPARATE ELEMENTS OF THE PRIZE-WINNING PLAN

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

1. Energetically push one plan to a definite conclusion.

2. Strictly observe the individual's personal rights in enforcing the law.

3. Show no leniency to the individual who enriches himself by willful disobedience of law, no matter what his political, social, or financial standing.

4–5. "Let reverence for the laws become the political religion of the Nation"; and expect presidential leadership.

6–7. Recognize that sources of illegal liquor are clearly determinable; fit the treatment of each district to local conditions.

PUBLICITY AND FACT BASES FOR PUBLICITY

8–9. Require agencies of enforcement to keep the public fully informed as to their policies and aims; and to conduct themselves so as to obtain and keep the respect of all classes.

10–15. Secure from each district a detailed account of all sources of its illegal liquor supply; require district officers to formulate a plan for suppressing these sources; require graphic exhibits to show the movement into consumption of all liquids containing alcohol from each source; have these statistics collected monthly to show what has been accomplished; require local publication of local sources for both the local and central authorities; and publish monthly statistics to enable law-enforcement committees to check their correctness and the accomplishments of enforcing agencies.

NONPOLITICAL INTERFERENCE

16. Expect the President to inform his subordinates, especially prohibition administrators, that patronage and political interference tending to influence the acts of the administrator in controlling the permissive phase must not be tolerated.

CONTROL OF GOVERNMENT PERMITS TO HANDLE ALCOHOL

17. Investigate applications for permits to handle alcohol as banks investigate when extending loan privileges, i. e., go into the business experience of applicants, their moral, social, and financial standing, the probability of a legitimate market for their goods, the soundness of the organization.

18–20. Require permittees to promise to inform the Government in writing as to the time and place of manufacture, so as to permit official supervision; automatically cancel permits where notification is not properly given, and give only temporary permits not longer than six months, until the applicant has proved himself responsible and legitimate.

21–22. Restrict permits solely to legitimate and responsible individuals and eradicate present illegitimate holders.

DECENTRALIZE ADMINISTRATION

23–24. Hold the local administrator responsible for issuing permits and revoking in cases of legitimate handling; and have the Federal Government recognize that in practice it can not become sufficiently familiar with local conditions to allow it to pass intelligently upon applications for permits.

25–28. Require all permittees to keep a strict accounting of their manufacture and distribution of industrial alcohol; strictly supervise manufacturing and distributing; administer or legislate the independent denaturing enterprise out of existence, on the ground that it has no economic place in business; and by administration or new legislation require manufacturers to show the distribution of their products, so that local administrators can trace these products to a legitimate dealer.

LOCATE AND STOP STILLS AND OTHER SOURCES

29. Apply similar principles of investigation, careful planning, supervision, publicity, and rigid enforcement to four other sources—wine, whisky, beer, and stills.

STOP SMUGGLING

30–31. Continue unceasing vigilance and patrol by the Coast Guard against smuggling and require closer cooperation among Coast Guard, customs forces, and prohibition forces.

DESTROY THE DEMAND

32. In a word, so raise the cost of the product that it will exceed the capacity of the consumer to pay, and thus destroy the demand.

THE WINNING PLAN BY MAJ. CHESTER P. MILLS[1]

Any plan logically carried out and energetically pushed to a definite conclusion is better than no plan at all. Unfortunately, except for the Coast Guard, the Federal agencies charged with enforcement have never adopted any one plan and carried it through.

There is no necessity for, nor can there be tolerated any violation of an individual's personal rights in enforcing the law, but there can be no leniency shown the individual regardless of his political, social, or financial standing who enriches himself by willful disobedience of law.

The agencies of enforcement must keep the public fully informed as to their policies and aims and so conduct themselves as to obtain and keep the respect of all classes.

THE VOLSTEAD ACT

The Volstead Act was well conceived and well written. Its provisions are capable of enforcement with few if any legislative changes.

The governmental agencies charged with carrying out the provisions of the act were not well organized originally and had little conception as to the scope of the work necessitated and the responsibility placed upon them. To this failure may be attributed most of the difficulty now being encountered in proper enforcement.

The act authorized a continuation of the use of commercial alcohol, redefining the statutes then in force.

Commercial alcohol was again divided into two classes, (1) completely denatured alcohol considered poisonous and not capable of redistillation, (2) specially denatured alcohol rendered unpalatable and unfit to drink but suitable for manufacture into many articles and capable of redistillation.

Manufacture of grain alcohol and its conversion into completely denatured and specially denatured alcohol; whisky for medicinal purposes and manufactured into tonics; wine for religious use and manufactured into vinegar and tonics; the manufacture of beer—all were to be controlled by permits or privileges issued to reliable persons by the Government.

In the rush to put the provisions of the act into effect these privileges were granted without proper caution; result, there are still large numbers of such permits in the hands of lawbreakers.

There is no necessity for, nor can there be tolerated, any violation of an individual's personal rights in enforcing the law, but there can be no leniency shown the individual regardless of his political, social, or financial standing who enriches himself by willful disobedience of law.

The agencies of enforcement must keep the public fully informed as to their policies and aims and so conduct themselves as to obtain and keep the respect of all classes.

OUTLINE OF PLAN

With the above in mind I submit a plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective and will discuss this plan under four headings: (1) Permissive, (2) enforcement, (3) political, (4) detailed method of controlling the diversion of industrial alcohol.

I. PERMISSIVE

The issuance of permits is a privilege conferred upon individuals or corporations by the Federal Government and it is not only the duty but the right of the Government to inquire thoroughly into the reliability of the individuals or corporations asking this privilege.

This inquiry should be conducted along lines similar to that conducted by a bank when extending loan privileges. Past business experience of the persons, their moral, social, and financial standing, the probability of a legitimate market for their goods, the soundness of their organization, must be thoroughly determined.

In addition, before a permit is issued to any person who desires to manufacture from liquids containing alcohol, there should be obtained a consent from him providing that he will, in writing, inform the Government through its local administrator the time and place where he proposes to manufacture. This notification must be in sufficient time to allow the local Federal administrator to send representatives to supervise the manufacture. Failure on the part of the permittee to give this notification should automatically stop future withdrawals.

Permits when issued should be temporary, not longer than six months' duration, so that local administrators may have further opportunity to determine the legitimacy of the business proposed and the responsibility of the individuals concerned. If such time proves the applicant responsible and legitimate, then a permanent permit may be issued.

The control of the permissive phase is a most important factor. If the issuance of permits is in future restricted solely to legitimate and responsible individuals, gradually the present illegitimate holders of Government permits can be eradicated.

LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

Local conditions make it imperative that the local administrator be responsible for the issuance of permits and for their revocation in case of illegitimate handling. It is impracticable for the central Government to become sufficiently familiar with local conditions to allow it to intelligently pass upon applications for permits.

II. ENFORCEMENT

Enforcement logically divides itself into two groups, (1) imports and (2) domestic supply.

1. After a bad start the Coast Guard has proved that the importation of alcoholic beverages can be suppressed. Statistics show that under 2 per cent of the liquor consumed is imported. I do not mean that this traffic has been eliminated. There are numerous instances along our borders and in the waters of Florida where importation exists. It can be overcome, as the Coast Guard has demonstrated, by unceasing vigilance and patrol.

Closer cooperation between the Coast Guard, customs, and prohibition forces is essential to eradicate this smuggling. The improvement in the last few years has been so marked that the policy of operation now exercised by the Coast Guard has vindicated itself and should be continued.

2. Domestic enforcement resolves itself into the suppression of stills and of diversion under permits. This domestic supply is the source of better than 98 per cent of liquor consumed, and is therefore the essential factor to control.

For control the country is organized into prohibition districts conforming to the judicial districts of the United States. This zoning is satisfactory and creates an organization capable of administration.

LOCAL SOURCES DETERMINABLE

Local conditions in each district vary. In one the supply of illegal liquor may be entirely derived from stills; in another the great source of supply may be diversion under cover of permits. In each district the source of supply of illegal liquor is clearly determinable. The plan of enforcement should recognize this and treat local conditions so as to insure the suppression of local sources.

The central Federal agency charged with enforcement should secure from each district a detailed account of the sources of illegal liquor supply for that district. It should have each district formulate a plan for the suppression of these sources. Statistics should be prepared for each district showing graphically and by figures the movement into consumption of all liquids containing alcohol from each of these sources. These statistics corrected monthly should show what has been accomplished toward control of each source.

[1] Major Mills was prohibition administrator for the metropolitan district of New York from 1925 to 1927, which fact was not known to the committee of award until they read the public announcements December 26.

LOCAL PUBLICITY

An essential is that the sources for each district be publicly made known by the central authorities and by the local administrators; this publicity must be as extensive as possible. In addition, the monthly statistics compiled must be given the same publicity so that various organizations now existing, such as the law enforcement committees, the Anti-Saloon League, and others interested in the law, can check their correctness and the accomplishments of the enforcing agencies.

III. POLITICAL

Lincoln said, "Let reverence for the laws become the political religion of the Nation." Let the President proclaim himself on the subject.

Let him also inform his subordinates, the prohibition administrators, that patronage and political interference tending to influence the acts of the administrator in controlling the permissive phase must not be tolerated. Such political interference is one of the serious handicaps to the effective control of the permissive phase.

IV. DETAILED METHOD OF CONTROLLING DIVERSION OF INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL

To more clearly define the above plan and to bring out its effectiveness, I will be concrete. The second Federal prohibition district comprises the southern and eastern judicial districts of New York State. The sources for this district are clearly defined as follows: Alcohol, whisky, wine, beer, and stills.

With respect to alcohol, we have to deal with (1) alcohol manufactured by distilleries and denatured at the distillery, (2) alcohol denatured at independent denaturing plants, (3) denatured alcohol diverted by organizations holding permits to use it for manufacture.

Diversions under the first class are comparatively small. The large distilleries which manufacture grain alcohol are, in the main, responsible corporations, highly financed and owning large quantities of valuable real estate. Their business is profitable and clearly defined. Their loss in case they are detected violating the law is so tremendous that it is a great deterrent and nearly insures ligitimacy. Strict supervision should be kept over those distilleries and a strict accounting kept of their manufacture and distribution of the manufactured product.

INDEPENDENT DENATURING PLANTS

The independent denaturing plant has no economic place in business, and here there may be necessity for legislative change in the Volstead Act. If a Treasury Department regulation can not eliminate the independent denaturing plant, then this result should be secured by legislative action.

The independent denaturing plant can secure grain alcohol from one source only and that is the distilleries authorized to manufacture grain alcohol. The independent denaturing plant has only two outlets for its manufactured products.

Completely denatured alcohol that it manufactures may be sold without permit, but is incapable of redistillation and absolutely unfit for human consumption. The present laws requiring this product to be labeled as "poison" are drastic enough to practically insure its legitimate use. The second outlet of the independent plants is supplying permit holders (manufacturers of perfumes, etc.) with specially denatured alcohol.

In both outlets the independent denaturing plant comes into direct competition with the distillery from which it purchases its initial supply of grain alcohol. These distilleries are required to maintain denaturing plants. It is a fact that the distilleries will not as a rule sell grain alcohol to a competitor at a price that will enable the competitor (the independent denaturing plant) to manufacture and compete with them. The independent denaturing plant has no economic reason for existence. Since the independent plant can not usually compete for legitimate business it is often driven to make a living by delivering unlawful supplies to the bootlegger.

DIVERSION VIA "COVER HOUSES"

We now come to the very serious evil of diversion under cover of permits authorizing firms to manufacture from specially denatured alcohol.

The principal method of diversion may be illustrated by an example. A perfume manufacturer as a permit holder receives specially denatured alcohol, for whose use he must account to the Government in records of perfume manufactured and on hand or shipped out.

The crooked permit holder pretends to ship his manufactured product to a wholesaler known as a "cover house." The wholesaler receipts for perfume but actually receives or diverts specially denatured alcohol for the bootlegger.

To disguise the transaction the "cover house" receives from the permit holder invoices and in many cases bills of lading. It acknowledges these invoices and even pays for them as well as acknowledging the bills of lading.

If the courts will not sustain the Government in requiring manufacturers who use industrial alcohol to show such disposition of their products as to enable the local administrator to trace these products to a legitimate dealer, then we need another legislative change.

However, I believe that strict supervision of the manufacturing activities of these permit holders (manufacturers using industrial alcohol) and the requirement that they notify the local administrator in sufficient time to enable him to supervise manufacture, will practically eliminate their opportunities to divert specially denatured alcohol to the bootlegger. The finished manufactured product (perfumes, etc.) is nearly incapable of redistillation and is not extensively used by the bootlegger.

In March, 1926, the withdrawals by such permit holders in the second Federal district were 660,000 gallons of specifically denatured alcohol a month. By unceasing vigilance and supervision of the activities of these permittees their number was materially decreased and this volume was reduced within a year to approximately 351,000 gallons a month, a reduction of 309,000 gallons a month, representing alcohol previously diverted into illegal channels. The remaining 351,000 gallons a month does not represent the legitimate use of this class of alcohol for the district, but it does show what can be accomplished by systematic supervision.

In March, 1926, the cost of this specially denatured alcohol to the bootlegger was approximately $1.10 a gallon. By June, 1927, the cost of this same class of alcohol to the bootlegger had risen to approximately $5.20 a gallon. As the source was suppressed, the cost of the product to the bootlegger rose.

It is not unwarranted to state that as the use of this alcohol approaches legitimate consumption its cost to the bootlegger will rise to such an extent as to make it unprofitable for him to operate, and when this point is reached the solution of alcohol diversion will also be reached.

The conditions of the Durrant prize contest limiting the words to 2,000 forbid further examples. I selected the hardest and most difficult source of diversion to control alcohol, but each of the other sources—wine, whisky, beer, and stills—may be as clearly defined and the method of control similarly illustrated.

This plan is predicated on the sound economic theory that when the cost of the product exceeds the capacity of the consumer to pay, the demand ceases.

Therefore this is the quickest and most economical way of suppressing the bootlegger and speakeasy.

WINNING HIGH-SCHOOL PLAN

By Malcolm D. Almack[1]

Three essentials are necessary to improve the effectiveness of the prohibition act. They are (1) Better knowledge of the law, (2) greater respect for the law, and (3) better administration of the law.

People must know what a law requires before they can obey it. Every day some well-meaning person is taken into court charged with breaking the traffic law. His excuse often is, "I didn't know I was violating the law. I don't want to do it. Why doesn't some one tell me what the law is?"

Many people do not know the exact provisions of the prohibition law. This statement can be tested by asking your neighbor a few simple questions such as—

"Does a citizen have the right, under the law, to make small quantities of liquor at home for his own use?

"Does he have the right to offer such liquor to his friends in his own home?

"How much alcohol must be present in drink to make it prohibitive?

"What is the penalty for violating the State law? The national law?"

Citizens need to know the law to know their own duty in its enforcement. You see some one serving wine. Is he violating the law? Should you report him? How can you tell what your duty is if you do not know the law?

Knowledge of the law keeps many people from violating it. As long as they are ignorant of the law, they keep their consciences quiet by saying, "I don't know whether this is wrong or not." As soon as they know positively that what they are doing is wrong, they usually quit, because they can not bear the idea of knowingly being a criminal.

The remedy for ignorance is education. The first step in this plan is to have the text of the law published in the newspapers, to have it explained over the radio, and to publish a little bulletin which would go to every citizen telling what the law is. These bulletins should be published by the Government, and distributed through churches, schools, service clubs, newspapers, and the patriotic and fraternal societies.

The law should also be taught in the schools. This can be done in classes in history and civics. The topic could be reported on in civic leagues, class meetings, and assemblies. A year's campaign would make everyone acquainted with the law. This might be a part of a larger campaign to teach people the new laws which affect their welfare closely.

[1] Junior, 15 years old, in Palo Alto Union High School, Palo Alto, Calif.

Knowledge of the law is not enough to insure its obedience. Therefore, the plan includes a method of creating respect for the prohibition measure and for laws in general.

People who do not obey laws seldom think how serious for themselves and for others their attitude is. If everyone took the notion that he would obey a law or not, just as he pleased, this country would soon be destroyed, and there would be no freedom or security for anyone. No man's life or property would be safe, and civilization would perish.

To build up respect for law requires (1) an understanding of the reasons for the law, (2) a spirit of loyalty and good sportsmanship, and (3) strict enforcement.

The second step in the plan is to teach the reasons back of the prohibition act. From the history, they can be led to see that liquor has always been a bad thing. It has been mixed up with the slave trade, with crime, poverty, disease, and everything that is injurious to men, women, and children. They can see that the liquor business has always defied regulation, and that the best thing is to put an end to it altogether.

People should be taught under this plan that prohibition is sound economic policy, because it prevents waste, makes labor more efficient, releases capital for productive enterprise, reduces the cost of government, and adds to savings. Money spent for liquor can not be spent for the necessities of life.

This plan includes teaching that prohibition is good for the health. It makes for longer life, prevents sickness, and insures better nourished and healthier children.

Prohibition is good socially. It reduces the worst kind of crime, decreases poverty, prevents accidents, and improves character.

In order to have facts to teach people, the third step in this plan is to provide a research department as a part of the enforcement bureau.

The means of teaching the facts are the same as are used in teaching the law—publications, radio, school instruction, and speeches.

Every State in the Union has a law requiring that the harmful effects of alcohol be taught in the schools. To carry out the spirit of these laws it is necessary to teach the beneficial effects of prohibition.

The economic values in prohibition should be taught in courses in history, civics, economics, and social problems. The health benefits should be taught in courses in physiology, physical education, biology, chemistry, home economics, business, and general science. The history of the movement should be taught as a part of regular American history.

The fourth step in the plan is to build up such a spirit among the people as will lead them to obey and support the law. This is like good sportsmanship and the spirit of fair play. In our school we have no long list of rules, no jail, no fines, and no punishment, because they are unnecessary. The spirit is to do right, stand by the principal and the teachers, and protect the good name of the school. People will respond to an appeal to loyalty and to honor of the country.

The method is the same as is used by an employer, an Army officer, or a school principal in building up what is called morale.

Particularly should leaders be enlisted. The young men and women in the colleges, normal schools, high schools, and commercial schools favor better conditions. The enforcement of prohibition will further advance America as an example to other nations. Intelligent men and women will join in a great movement for obedience to the laws of the land.

They can be appealed to through schools, newspapers, and magazines, radio, sermons, lectures, moving pictures, and by all means that reach the feelings and awaken the spirit of idealism.

Nothing is better than example in building morale. If the best class of people would band together and agree to observe the law; if they would insist upon others observing the law, their example would bring others into line. People who have any self-respect would refuse to patronize the bootlegger or have anything to do with those who do patronize him. Real law is the sentiment and justice of the people in action. Their awakening is a part of the program.

The fifth step is to be sure the enforcing officers are well organized and capable. The director should be a real leader and a friend of prohibition. The rank and file of the officers should be recruited largely from among young people. Unless unavoidable, no one should be accepted who has ever been connected with the liquor business. The officers should obtain their appointments through the director and not through Congressmen. They should pass a civil-service examination sufficiently strict to guarantee good health, at least average intelligence, and sound character.

Before entering upon their duties, they should take a special training course. This may be for only a month or two, somewhat like the summer camps of the National Guard. At these camps they would be taught the law, how to gather evidence, how to present evidence, and, in general, how to enforce the law.

Another purpose served by this training school would be to build up morale. The best recruits could be selected and given further training for promotion. The supervisors should also watch over the welfare of the men, and the honor of the force should be developed as it has been among the Canadian mounted police and State troops.

The sixth step in this plan is to improve the courts. While little can be done to change the system, an attempt can be made to specialize the duties and increase the number of judges, as was recently done under an amendment to the constitution of California. The people can be urged to cast their votes for judges who will punish violators of the law.

The seventh step in the plan is to try to induce all States to supplement the Federal prohibition act by State enforcement acts. The State bar associations, the American Legion, and all patriotic societies should be requested to lead in this movement.

This program for the improvement of the enforcement of the national prohibition act can be summarized under seven points as follows:

"1. Teach what the law is.

"2. Convince people that it is a good thing and persuade them to support it.

"3. Provide a research division to study the effect and administration of the law.

"4. Lead people to cooperate in the enforcement of the law.

"5. Provide an efficient and well-organized body of enforcement officers.

"6. Improve the courts through specializing duties, adding to the number of judges, and electing capable and honest persons.

"7. Adopt supplementary enforcing legislation in all the States."

The results will not only be better enforcement of prohibition, but greater respect for and obedience to all laws.

A CLOSE COMPETITOR FOR THE HIGH-SCHOOL PRIZE

By Charles Brown, Pawhuska, Okla.

The plan which I have drafted may not prove a panacea for all the evils associated with prohibition and its enforcement, but, if it were followed consistently, I believe that within a few years at the most America would be so dry that only an insignificant number would be able to find fault with the prohibition régime. The plan does not violate any constitutional or traditional rights; it is efficacious and simple with no radical changes from the present method; it will simplify somewhat the intricate order of to-day; and it will meet with the approval of a majority of law-abiding citizens.

As I see it, there are three vantage points from which to start improvement on the existing order of prohibition—(1) with the enforcement service and the activities of that organization by shifting the authority, curtailing the sources, and securing cooperation between State and national agents; (2) with the mode of judicial proceedings; and (3) with the American citizens themselves.

By the provisions of a reorganization law enacted March 3, 1927, many political evils due to corruption in the Prohibition Unit and to interdepartmental friction were noticeably decreased. The most important change inaugurated was the placing of enforcement offices on the civil-service competitive-examination basis. Now that the executive positions have ceased to be "political plunder" much of the graft and inefficiency which characterized the first eight years of prohibition have been eliminated, and the advantages growing out of this will become increasingly evident.

The second important change included the establishment of a Prohibition Unit as an entity, separating it from the Bureau of Internal Revenue and centralizing full authority in the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. It became his duty to coordinate the activities of the Bureau of Prohibition, the Bureau of Customs, and the Coast Guard, the latter two branches being charged with certain duties in connection with the enforcement of prohibition laws in addition to the work for which they were primarily intended.

With the organization of the 48 States into 22 districts corresponding with the Federal judicial areas and with the changes already mentioned, enforcement was expected to work more effectively. However, though it is a little early to judge accurately the success of the arrangement, the plan apparently has not improved conditions materially. The chief reason for this failure is that the work of prohibition enforcement has been placed in the wrong department. The intrusting to the Treasury Department the problem of enforcing liquor laws is a survival of the former relationship of the Government to the legalized liquor business. Now the Government is interested in suppressing the manufacture and sale of liquors, and the problem is clearly a matter for some other department. Then, too, the Treasury Department has so many bureaus that the departmental heads consider the work of the Prohibition Unit but one of their many duties, and they make no particular effort to crusade vigorously in the interest of any one of these.

The situation in America has reached the stage where disregard and defiance of liquor regulations have led to increased flouting of other criminal laws, and clearly it is time to try stronger measures. Never will prohibition be enforced in the United States by the lackadaisical methods that men who do not believe in it have had adopted in their departments. If the violators ever get such a handling as Hays gave the robbers of post offices, prohibition will be as well enforced and the principle as thoroughly respected as any other law. The militant mind and soldierly efficiency are needed to curb liquor law violations. Therefore, the best remedy for the evils under prohibition is to transfer the unit bodily to the Department of War, where these attributes flourish in abundance.

To delegate to the War Department the problem of handling the liquor situation is not an impractical suggestion; it is a plausible solution to the problem. On June 19, 1923, President Coolidge signed an Executive order transferring the administration of the national prohibition act in the Virgin Islands from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of the Navy, and evidently there could be no legitimate opposition to shifting the entire burden of prohibition administration to the War Department, which has an organization well adapted for enforcing the Volstead Act and which could easily work toward such a goal without neglecting its ordinary duties.

If a bill combining the features of the March 3, 1927, enactment and the removal of the Prohibition Unit from the Treasury Department to the War Department were passed, it would not necessitate any addition to the personnel of the enforcement service, but, on the other hand, would subtract from it by utilizing the United States Army. The bill would simply place responsible authority in the hands of those best fitted to have it and would give prohibition execution for the first time the advantages of properly geared machinery.

The second feature of the plan which I have to offer is to shut off the sources of supply. Much of the liquor retailed in the United States is smuggled across the Canadian and Mexican borders, while other contraband is brought to American shores via small boats from Cuba and the Canadian and Mexican coasts.

The first practice could be checked by establishing a border patrol which not only could guard against smuggling liquor but also against bringing in dutiable goods without regard for the tariff law and which could work in conjunction with the Department of Labor to apprehend aliens trying to enter the country in violation of immigration restrictions. Such an organization could be formed easily by the War Department, and the revenue gained would pay in part for the cost of the patrol.

Little can be done to prevent smuggling on the various "rum rows" of the coast except to increase the personnel, equipment, and powers of the Coast Guard. If this organization is to do effective work, it must be given the necessary number of men and boats to place blockades about the areas where smuggling is most rife. Airplanes would prove effective in guarding the coast, and a number of these craft should be added to the equipment of the organization.

In connection with the closing of illegitimate channels, it would be an excellent plan for the dry-law agents to place more emphasis on getting the big bootlegger rather than running from place to place in a futile attempt to nab the thousands of small offenders in America. Hundreds of liquor cases which now crowd the dockets can have little influence or effect on stopping the illicit liquor trade, but if the men who supply the demand were captured and speedily punished, the prohibition trouble would be reduced to a minimum.

My third point under the enforcement program is to get the State and National officers to have better cooperation and understanding of each other. It would be advisable for the national prohibition leaders, or, better still, the President, to call a conference of the heads of State enforcement organizations and the Federal officials to set limits for national and local enforcement and to discuss in general the prohibition situation. They could come to some understanding, and perhaps some one might be able to suggest a policy of cooperation. If no better program could be devised, they might decide that to the national authority would be delegated the task of drying up the sources of supply, and to the local agents would be turned over the work of checking the bootleggers in distributing the liquor. If this were done, the enforcement problem would be simplified somewhat. Also, there would be less duplication of endeavors.

In communities where local sentiment will not sustain a vigorous policy by sheriffs and county attorneys, the Federal enforcement agents should undertake the work of carrying out the dry laws by putting on more agents than in places where the State and municipal authorities are able to handle the situation.

The second phase of my general plan for prohibition enforcement, which is perhaps of even more importance than the reorganization of the machinery for carrying out the purposes of the eighteenth amendment, is the devising of a plan for securing more prompt and effective action in court cases involving violation of the Volstead law. One of the chief troubles with enforcement lies in the slowness and leniency of the courts in the prosecution of liquor cases. Enormous profits are made by violators who are financially able to fight legal proceedings, to secure bonds without the least difficulty, to protract cases unduly, and meanwhile to continue their practices. Bonds should increase in cost; trials should be more speedy; punishment should be more certain. Though the penalty is sufficiently severe, the maximum sentences are so rarely given that it has become necessary to raise the minimum judgment.

The solution of these difficulties is somewhat involved and difficult. To get the big bootlegger rather than the small offender, as I have recommended, would relieve the court congestion somewhat. The best solution to the problem, though it may be rather impractical due to the number of changes required, would be to establish a new class of Federal courts of police-court jurisdiction to relieve the district courts of prohibition enforcement cases.

An excellent way to limit the practice of letting bootleggers out on bond to continue their illicit business would be to do away with the professional bondsman by requiring him to schedule all his assets and liabilities and punishing him criminally if he should make false statements. This method would minimize his opportunities to accept bribes.

The third and final phase of prohibition enforcement, as I see it, is concerned with the American citizens themselves. The difficulty of enforcing an unpopular statute has been shown many times. A mere law-observance program will never make prohibition succeed if the people of the United States regard it as obnoxious. The results of the recent elections seemed to indicate that enforcement has become less distasteful. Therefore, it is an opportune time for the proponents of prohibition to begin anew a program of creating public sentiment or "moral suasion" to make people realize fully the good resulting from prohibition and the evil resulting from the use of alcohol. Law combined with education will stop the liquor traffic.

With the advent of prohibition many of the temperance societies which created popular sentiment against alcohol ceased to be active. When these organizations were most enthusiastic in their efforts, drinking declined, but now that they no longer fight strenuously for their principles, the use of intoxicants is increasing. These organizations should be reestablished and a nation-wide "war on booze" waged. The discoveries of recent research chemists showing irrefutably that alcoholic liquors have no essential medicinal qualities should be broadcast by all advertising agencies available—newspapers, magazines, radio, moving pictures, lectures. It has been shown, for example, that if the laboratory says "more vitamines" the demand for lettuce and cabbages increases. The demand for alcohol will decrease if the people are made acquainted with the fact that the scientist says "no alcohol."

In many schools the physiological results of alcohol are little stressed. The young people of to-day need scientific instruction along this line more than ever before, and the prohibitionists should see that such studies are resumed.

There is one group in particular to which "moral suasion," or perhaps more appropriately "mobilization of conscience," should be applied. It is composed of the wealthy pseudo fashionable who serve bootleg liquor in their homes. When it becomes bad form for the rich to partake of liquors openly and flagrantly, the vast majority of common people will cease to regard serving intoxicants as the correct thing. Education should control the dictates of fashion.

When all the difficulties which retarded the early work of enforcing the Volstead Act are considered, it is remarkable that so much progress has already been made, and if the threefold program which I have outlined were put into action the efficacy of the eighteenth amendment would become increasingly evident. The economic, social, physical, and mental benefits of prohibition would become correspondingly more familiar, and opposition would fall away until eventually most of it would come from the criminal class.

ANOTHER CLOSE COMPETITOR FOR THE HIGH SCHOOL PRIZE

By William Denmark, Senior High School, Springfield, Mo.

William Denmark, of the Senior High School, Springfield, Mo., was accredited by Principal J. D. Hall. His plan survived to the award committee and evoked its praise. Among its telling points were these:

In a large number of cases prohibition agents are men who have secured their appointments through political bosses who happen to be their friends or who are paying them for a political service by "getting them a job" as prohibition enforcement agents. At the present time the Prohibition Department is a dumping ground, as it were, for corrupt and petty politicians, ex-saloon keepers, and actual, if not convicted, criminals. Each prohibition chief, in order to keep his position, must acquiesce to the desired appointments of the political party in power. He is afraid to dismiss an inefficient or corrupt official who is befriended by big politicians. He can not with such a force hope to accomplish to any degree efficient enforcement.

Treaties with foreign nations must compose a part of effective enforcement. The treaty with Great Britain provides, in the main, that the United States will be allowed to board private vessels under the British flag (one hour) outside the limits of territorial waters for the purpose of inquiry and examination of the ship's papers.

Treaties with nations bordering on the United States are also necessary. The treaty with Canada in 1924 providing for the cooperation of both countries in an attempt to stop violation of smuggling laws was a great help, but treaties providing for greater efficiency must be enacted with both neighboring and distant countries.

The Department of Justice is one of the most deficient units in the enforcement of prohibition. At the present time "red tape" delays trials and protects the bootlegger.

The present inadequate punishment must be remedied. The judges must give jail sentences of maximum length instead of fines. It takes a bootlegger only a short time to repay himself for this fine, but imprisonment will cause him to fear arrest, and so hinder greatly his operations.

Measures must be enacted so that an offender may be brought to trial speedily and his release on technicalities made much less likely. *

The lack of cooperation of State officials with Federal authorities is another evil that can be remedied. The burden of enforcement against the smaller violators must fall to the State and local authorities. Their offices when appointive should be placed under civil-service restrictions. State legislatures should provide in a large measure for State enforcement and cooperation with Federal workers.

Each locality should also demand rigid enforcement from its own authorities. The Federal authorities can not be expected to do all the local enforcement.

State courts should see that the punishments administered are of such proportions as to discourage further violations. Until the State and local officials do their share the Federal authorities are under a great handicap.

Congress must make larger appropriations for the Coast Guard in order for them to maintain a high standard of effectiveness.

The greatest difficulty is, of course, the attitude of the people. There is a nation-wide indifference and many times open opposition to prohibition enforcement. The big business men and community leaders often think nothing of having a "drink" at their public banquet or dinner. They must be made to understand that they are lawbreakers and are influencing many younger men to violate the law. * * *

They denounce the evils of liquor in the open saloon and yet do not hesitate to aid in bringing the same damnable stumbling block where it may cause the downfall of their sons and young acquaintances whom they wish to carry on their businesses.

They must be made to understand that the liberty which they value so highly can be made possible only by strictly obeying and upholding each and every law. The feeling of responsibility and the natural interest in something of their own doing will cause more interest and energetic cooperation than a legion of paid lecturers.

The next step is the changing of the attitude of college and high-school students. Their violations are usually because they want to do something that is forbidden, just as when they were younger they wanted the jam in the pantry. Discussions led by able and respected men in which they may be shown the effect of what they thought were only harmless escapades would have a great influence. If they are made to feel a responsibility because it is pointed out that those younger than they are looking to them to find out what they should and should not do, it will cause a marked effect immediately.

If from the first till the last, from childhood to manhood, constant stress is laid on law obedience, a great work will have been accomplished for the benefit of national prohibition and national integrity.

OTHER STEPS SUGGESTED BY HIGH SCHOOL CONTRIBUTORS

Develop substitutes for the saloon, like recreation centers, gymnasiums, etc.

Cut the "red tape" out of enforcement procedure.

Provide insurance for enforcement officers.

Have the President call a conference to straighten out conflicts between State and Federal enforcement groups.

Prevent bootleggers from receiving tips of raids over telephone and telegraph systems.

Establish psychopathic clinics for treating alcoholics and make treatment compulsory.

Special classes to train immigrants in our laws and the reasons back of them, especially prohibition law.

Have the best people make prohibition fashionable.

Limit the prescriptions druggists may fill for one individual; and provide more careful regulation of restrictions on medicine containing alcohol.

Allow only Government-made liquor for religious and sacramental purposes.

Abolish "bargain day" in courts which grant small fines to offenders pleading guilty.

Use air forces.

Appoint no person as enforcement officer who has a record of conviction under Volstead or State-enforcement acts.

Have offenders put at work while in jail and devote proceeds of their labor to support of their families.

Have schools for all offenders with trades to make them self-sustaining, and send all offenders there, whether rich or poor.

Have artists draw posters favoring prohibition.

Let District police training schools correct the lack of general efficiency in local police departments and have a higher police training school at Washington.

Develop a morale among our police force like that of the Northwest Mounted Police of Canada.

TELLING PHRASES FROM OTHER HIGH-SCHOOL PLANS

There is not enough unity of action between the police forces of State and Nation.

I. ROGERS (Tennessee).

Temperance by force has turned out a poor substitute for temperance by choice.

EVELYN WILSON (California).

Human nature will not allow the majority of people to cooperate in making the eighteenth amendment effective.

R. WILLIAMSON (Massachusetts).

Education is the greatest tool that a foreseeing God has given a starving-for-knowledge mankind.

J. W. GUIMOND (Massachusetts).

In every age there has been something that has stood between the people and true democracy. Rome had its Cæsars, France its Napoleon, and now the United States has the eighteenth amendment.

J. COLLINS (Maryland).

If any considerable number of people so far fail to see the value of a law that they are indifferent to enforcement, those who are in favor of the enactment must take active measures to win a working majority of such opponents to the support of this measure.

PERSIS KRIENBRING (California).

No law can be enforced perfectly.

Liquor traffic submits to no regulation.

Punish the worst offender, the buyer.

The people must want the law in order to have the local officers really try to enforce the law.

The law-breaking agency pays high salaries and the law-enforcing agency must pay high salaries to compete with it.

It has been said that slovenly preparation of cases by prosecutors has been a great factor in perverting justice.

Low salaries encourage organized crime to fight back against the Government by corrupting its trusted servants.

A modification of the prohibition laws would not aid the cause of temperance, but would be a partial surrender to the forces of crime.

A mere law-observance program will never make prohibition succeed if the people of the United States regard it as obnoxious.

In the long space of time allowed between his arrest and trial the accused can find many ways of thwarting justice.

With the advent of prohibition many of the temperance societies which created popular sentiment against alcohol ceased to be active.

Our jury system was undoubtedly an advance step when introduced, and, in spite of the fact that it has been beneficial, it has grown to be an evil.

Another factor that makes justice uncertain is our archaic criminal procedure, which admits of delay. Justice must not delay if it is to be sure.

Money spent for enforcement is an investment that will be richly repaid in the future by a great decrease in crime and by vastly increased prosperity.

One of the greatest mistakes made in the enforcement of prohibition is the appointment of people to offices connected with enforcement who are out of sympathy with the law.

A man who has enough ability, loyalty, bravery, and industry to be a good prohibition agent could get a much larger salary in more pleasant and much less dangerous work.

The present inadequate enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act is not merely a disgrace to the Nation, it is also causing a growing disrespect for not only the eighteenth amendment but for all law and for the Constitution itself.

External force will never be effective alone.

R. D. WALROTH (New York).

Statistics, however, show a decrease in deaths from alcohol from pre-Volstead days.

F. A. SMITH (Connecticut).

Bootleg whisky can be found at almost all the social events of America's young men and women.

M. ROMAN (Pennsylvania).

The word "enforcement" is an unfortunate one because it arouses a certain amount of antagonism in many people.

BORGHILD BRAAFLAFT.

Justice must be meted out impartially regardless of the social standing of the violator or of any other consideration.

J. L. RANKIN (Louisiana).

If the newspapers praised the work of enforcing the prohibition law enough, the mass of the people would eventually become reconciled to the law.

R. VILLYARD (Texas).

Prohibition is young and like youth, it is weak and must be strengthened. Toward that end these suggestions are offered.

R. HAYES (Michigan).

Young women who would have been mortified to be found in an old-fashioned saloon now frequent the speakeasies and night clubs, flaunting themselves as if they were accomplishing a great feat.

W. MCCARTY (Michigan).

In most crimes the victim and the offender are at odds and the victim assists the police in every possible way, while in liquor violations they are accomplices and try to avoid police intervention.

J. B. HENDERSON (Massachusetts).

It should be remembered that this prohibition act and its origin did not occur in a day, a week, a year, or even a century, but was the culmination of American opinion molded in the mold of American ideals and economic interests.

F. W. ADAMS (Michigan).

Yet one may search and preach, study and investigate, and he will find that the cause upon which the ills revolve is the refusal of the people to cooperate with and treat the law of prohibition seriously.

A. ROBINSON (Michigan).

When we spend millions of dollars each year to hire policemen and other officers to enforce the laws, how is it that the laws are so unscrupulously disobeyed? There must be something wrong with our police force and courts.

SOCIOLOGY CLASS, ESCANABA HIGH SCHOOL (Michigan).

The prohibition enforcement problem is a problem of local cooperation. The Federal Government alone can not effectively enforce prohibition.

L. WELCH (Illinois).

The history of our country, and in fact the whole world, teaches us the important fact that when we want improvement in government the best way to secure lasting results is to teach the principles to youth.

B. ATWOOD (California).

In the town in which I live, a town of about 2,000 inhabitants, one can not get good whisky even with a doctor's prescription, and this situation is prevalent throughout the United States.

There are many who would begin making their own "booze" if the bootleggers were put out of business.

Human beings are much more easily led than driven.

Only a complete referendum can answer or tell what the people want done with the eighteenth amendment.

P. REILLY (New York).

Young people grow up without realizing the responsibility of obedience to law.

H. RAINE (Ohio).

Everyone knows who are violating the law in his vicinity and many would report them if they were encouraged to do so.

E. CARTER (Oklahoma).

It is true that dishonesty in a public servant can not be cured on a money basis but the scale of salaries of the prohibition agents, $1,800 to $2,300 a year, is so low as to invite irregularity.

L. GEORGE (Oregon).

It is my opinion that the public press has done more harm than any other agency in opposition to what the eighteenth amendment was supposed to accomplish.

G. U. RAPP (Pennsylvania).

It was the attempt to end the sale of liquor completely in short order that caused these private bootleggers and the breaking of the law.

W. MOLAR (Pennsylvania).

Neither moonshine nor bootlegger would exist commercially were it not for the consumer.

W. COX (Texas).

Finally, it is apparent that there is a shortage of special agents. The force is now inadequate.

H. LONG (Texas).

A plan to make this law effective must be favored by the majority of all the people of this country.

A. W. BRUNNER (Washington).

Pardons in some cases are beneficial, but their use should not become universal.

J. R. POPPE (New York).

Without the drinker there would be no bootlegger. Therefore the real key to the situation lies in convincing the consumer of his error.

H. M. AXTELL (Michigan).

The first known evidence of an effort to control liquor drinking was a law effected by a certain Chinese Emperor about 1116 B. C., who, deploring the evils attendant upon the presence of rum in the empire, decreed that all people partaking of it should be sentenced to instant death.

L. ROWE (New York).

The Chicago regiments of the National Guard were wont to parade with carnations in their guns. They failed utterly to cope with the situation. Scores of people were killed and nothing was accomplished. When, in accordance with President Cleveland's command, the Regular troops appeared on the scene a small boy said, "Them guys hain't got no flowers in their guns." Without a shot being fired the rioting ceased. They meant business, and the rioters knew it.

M. M. MCCULLOCH (Michigan).

There was a joke once which read thus:

"JIM. Our lights burned out on the way going home last night.

"DICK. What did you do?

"JIM. Oh, we just rode like fury, and the cops thought we were bootleggers."

Take that joke the way you will, but it would seem that the "cops" were in favor of the "bootleggers."

MR. DURANT'S TELEGRAMS ON W. R. HEARST'S PRIZE OFFER

January 3 W. R. Hearst telegraphed that he believed prohibition not only un-American but unenforceable and proposed to offer a prize of $25,000 for the "best plan for repealing the eighteenth amendment and substituting temperance for prohibition."

Mr. Durant answered as follows in a telegram to Mr. Hearst at San Simeon, Calif.:

First, let me congratulate you upon your prize offer of $25,000 for the best plan to repeal the eighteenth amendment.

Neither you nor any other giant publisher ever performed a more notable service than this contribution of yours to the question: Are the American people ready to give up and admit the failure of this, the greatest experiment ever undertaken by a free people?

Your prize contest furnishes the rallying point for those whe are ready to admit defeat and want the eighteenth amendment repealed.

My contest furnishes a rallying point for those who are not ready to admit defeat but want an honest attempt made to enforce the law.

You say that in offering a prize on how best to enforce the eighteenth amendment "Mr. Durant is really offering a prize on how best to put the Republican Party out of power."

It will be news to the Republican Party to learn that it will be put out of power by enforcing the highest law of the land—the Constitution.

The Republican Party, as a matter of fact, has just won an unprecedented political victory on a platform whose chief issue was enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

The principal appeal of the Democratic candidate was his promise to use his high office to urge a relaxation of the liquor laws. Against that appeal millions of votes were massed by men and women determined to suffer no concession to the liquor traffic.

You say that you believe that there is "an enormous middle class, which probably is a majority class, who believe in temperance and believe in personal liberty and realize that temperance can be secured without prohibition, and never can be secured with prohibition."

In a disgraceful situation such as now confronts this great country of ours we have the right to ask of every intelligent citizen an answer to the following: "Are you for the bootlegger, the speakeasy, and law defiance; or are you for the Government, the Constitution, and law observance?" With respect to the above, there can be no "middle class."

It seems to me that the sentiment of the people on this question is expressed by the voting of Representatives they send to Congress, where the liquor laws must be modified, if at all.

Each succeeding Congress is drier than the last. Out of 96 Members of the Senate, 80 are dry. Of the 435 Members of the House, 329 are dry. Among the cities in the last election which turned from the frank liquor appeal of the Democratic candidate and gave their votes to Herbert Hoover, were Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, Buffalo, and Cincinnati.

If the Republican Party was swept into power by its promise of law enforcement, how can it be "put out of power" by carrying out its pledge?

I can not believe that, pending repeal, you countenance nullification of part of the Constitution by nonobservance and nonenforcement, turning the country over to the organized bootleggers, hijackers, political corruptionists, and murder gangs now rampant.

I believe that great good will come out of the public interest and public discussion stimulated by your prize offer. In the strict sense of the word, the only possible "plan to repeal the eighteenth amendment" is already in existence, embedded in the Constitution of the United States.

Once an amendment to the Constitution has been solemnly enacted into law, it can only be repealed by a vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress, this vote to be ratified by the legislatures of 36 of the 48 States of the Union.

It is highly important to know what the people think. My contest brought out part of the answer. I am sure yours will bring more of it.

It is a striking fact that the eighteenth amendment was ratified by all but two States. No amendment to the Constitution ever had such a large vote in Congress, was ratified by so many State legislatures, or was ratified in so short a time. We have every reason to think that the American people meant business against the liquor evil and that they mean business still.

For the necessary changes in the enforcement laws we need facts, as President-elect Hoover says. Therefore, I have suggested a congressional committee to find out what is the matter with the working of our enforcement laws. I have offered to that committee the abundant material in our files, contributed by the 23,000 and odd contestants who wrote what they thought should be done. No doubt your contest will contribute a similar mine of material.

I hope that your great influence will be used to secure a congressional investigation.

I am no fanatical dry. I am for law enforcement. If we can't enforce this law, I will be with you for its repeal. But first I want an honest effort to induce the decent people to observe it and force the criminal class to obey it.

W. C. DURANT.

WAS HERBERT HOOVER RIGHT WHEN HE SAID PROHIBITION HAD HELPED MAKE US THE HAPPIEST AND MOST PROSPEROUS PEOPLE IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY?

To Mr. Hearst's lengthy telegraphed and widely published rejoinder that "all we held dear in our political system as well as in our individual independence has been sacrificed to a fetish (prohibition)," Mr. Durant replied by the following telegram January 3:

"The case for the abandonment of the eighteenth amendment will never be more effectively presented than in your message to me of January 2, published in the Hearst papers of January 3 and January 4. I only wish that your powerful pen and the great influence of your newspapers were arrayed, instead, on the side of liquor law enforcement.

"You offer a prize of $25,000 'for the best plan to repeal the eighteenth amendment and substitute in place of prohibition a more liberal and more American measure which will secure for the public more genuine temperance.' If, as a result of your prize contest, a plan having your approval is evolved and made a part of the Constitution and becomes a law you will, of course, expect that your law will be observed. Widespread violation of your law by a large percentage of the people would result in much confusion and disorder—exactly the condition which now concerns every intelligent, thoughtful citizen. I do not believe that a government can exist that does not enforce its laws, consequently, I am for law enforcement.

"Those who are opposed to prohibition have every right to agitate for the repeal of the amendment, just as every citizen has the inescapable obligation to obey that amendment and the laws for its enforcement, so long as it remains a part of the Constitution.

"I believe it is impossible to escape the logic of Herbert Hoover's statement in his acceptance speech:

"'Modification of the enforcement laws, which would permit that which the Constitution forbids, is nullification. This the American people will not countenance. Change in the Constitution can and must be brought about only by the straightforward methods provided in the Constitution itself.

"'There are those who do not believe in the purposes of several provisions of the Constitution. No one denies their right to seek to amend it. They are not subject to criticism for asserting that right. But the Republican Party does deny the right of anyone to seek to destroy the purposes of the Constitution by indirection.' * * *

"'Crime and disobedience of the law can not be permitted to break down the Constitution and laws of the United States.'

"It is idle to deny that, particularly on the part of the 'better classes,' there is to-day widespread disobedience of the liquor law as embodied in the Constitution. For that condition, I am ashamed to say, the business leaders of the country bear a heavy responsibility.

"Bootleg liquor has become the most widely advertised factor in the social life of men whose names are synonymous with success, wealth, and power in their communities. The contagion of their lawlessness spreads through the entire population. This means impairment of the carefully built safeguards of personal and property rights. Citizens who have the largest stake in law observance have taken the lead in law defiance.

"I believe that this is a phase that is already passing. I believe that our business leaders are ready to rally behind the leadership of Herbert Hoover for the law. I believe they are going to stop teaching criminals that the 'best people' obey the law when it suits them, and not otherwise.

"I am confident that Mr. Hoover is going to give this kind of leadership. I believe that, for the first time, we are going to see the Government proceed against the bootleg industry with a wholly honest and effective enforcement service in all departments whose duty it is to deal with the liquor evil. In other words, I think that the law is at last going to have a fair trial.

"I am unable to agree with you that prohibition is a failure as a temperance measure.

"I myself, as a manufacturer, know the vast difference in the efficiency of workmen since the eighteenth amendment. That efficiency has been passed on to them in the rewards of higher money wages. Nobody can measure the increase in happiness in American homes due to the abolition of the saloon and the legalized liquor traffic.

"The mass of the American people, who do not get into newspaper headlines, have become the most sober, contented, and prosperous people on earth. No less an authority than Herbert Hoover says that a good part of the country's prosperity is due to prohibition. In his speech to the Y. M. C. A. in Washington he said:

"'Our country is in the midst of an astonishing increase in wealth and of its wide diffusion among the whole people. The application of the many discoveries in the physical sciences, the increase in efficiency both in workers and executives, the elimination of industrial waste, and the advent of prohibition, have raised our standards of living and material comforts to a height unparalleled in our history and therefore the history of the world.'

"Mr. Hoover has been quoted as saying that 10 per cent of our national efficiency is due to prohibition. We have a national income of $90,000,000,000 a year. If prohibition is responsible for nine billions of this, it is hardly a 'failure.'

"Both of us desire a sober nation, since our prosperity and happiness depend fundamentally upon sobriety. While we differ concerning means of realizing that end, I am quite convinced that out of the discussions of the thousands of plans submitted in the Durant prize contest and the thousands that will unquestionably be entered in the Hearst contest, there will come a volume of information that will do more toward educating the people of the Nation on this great question than any other single campaign of which I have knowledge.

"W. C. DURANT."

CONSIDER EXISTING CONDITIONS

By L. H. Hampton, assistant chief counsel, Bureau of Prohibition

"Practicable: Capable of being put into practice, done, or accomplished—That is practicable which may be accomplished by available means."—(Webster's Collegiate Diction.)

To be practicable, any plan for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment must consider existing conditions and must contemplate the means available for its execution; legislation proposed must be constitutional and reasonably hopeful of enactment; action and policy suggested must be lawful and reasonably possible of performance. To be effective, it must be practicable and also sufficiently comprehensive to provide the legislation, organization, appropriations, and policies necessary for its successful accomplishment.

On that basis the following suggestions, with their respective supporting reasons, are submitted as a practicable plan for the effective enforcement of the eighteenth amendment:

LEGISLATION

1. Retain existing enforcement legislation, except for certain amendments hereinafter suggested.

Reasons: No legislation could be devised more comprehensively describing and denouncing as crimes the various acts and activities incident to the unlawful manufacture of and traffic in intoxicating liquors, nor establishing a more complete system of control of the legitimate manufacture and use of such liquors, than as now provided by law.

2. Repeal that portion of section 25, Title II, of the national prohibition act, which forbids the issuance of a search warrant for a private dwelling "unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors."

Reason: The effect of the present provision has been to afford legal asylum for illicit distilling, manufacture of wine and beer, and storage of stocks of liquors for illegal sale. No similar special protection to criminal activities within a dwelling exists in relation to any other Federal offense. The requirement that "probable cause" be established for the issuance of search warrants in connection with other offenses always has been held a sufficient observance of the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches. Illicit distillers and vendors of liquors have seized the advantage given by this provision and are using "private dwellings" for the operation of small stills and the storage of stocks of liquor, secure from search as long as they abstain from making sales within or directly from the "dwelling." Repeal of the portion of the section above suggested would permit search warrants to be issued for such places upon proof of circumstances, legally constituting "probable cause," coming to the knowledge of the investigating officer by means of his natural senses, as commonly practiced and upheld by the courts as to places other than dwellings.

3. Amend the first paragraph of section 29, Title II, of the national prohibition act to read as follows:

"Any person who manufactures, possesses, transports, or sells liquor in violation of this title shall for a first offense be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 and be imprisoned not less than 60 days nor more than five years, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $250 nor more than $5,000 and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than five years."

Reasons: (a) Possession and transportation are not as easily veiled in secrecy as manufacture and sale, but are necessary complements to the effectiveness of those offenses and deserve the same penalties. Enforcement has been hindered by the present provision fixing lighter penalties for the more easily detected offenses, which permits a general practice of dismissing charges of manufacture or sale in consideration of pleas of guilty to possession and transportation.

(b) Fixing a maximum penalty of $5,000 fine and five years imprisonment on first and subsequent convictions makes all offenses felonies and enables the courts to impose adequate punishment on first conviction in flagrant cases.

(c) Experience has demonstrated that penalties are not being imposed to adequately punish offenders and deter others from committing violations: Of 58,813 persons convicted for violation of Federal prohibition laws in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1928, only 28.5 per cent were sentenced to imprisonment, the average sentence being 120.7 days; 71.5 per cent were sentenced only to pay fines, averaging $120 each. The relation of penalties to enforcement conditions is easily demonstrated by comparison of known conditions with statistics showing percentage of violators imprisoned or fined, the average imprisonment, and average fine, in various Federal court districts for the last fiscal year:

	Per cent imprisoned	Average term (days)	Per cent fined	Average fine
New York: Southern district (New York City)	1.6	43.3	98.4	$26.03
Pennsylvania:
Eastern district (Philadelphia)	28.9	88	71.1	124.75
Western district (Pittsburgh)	7.3	109.3	92.7	135.12
Indiana	69.8	77.1	30.2	117.16
Michigan: Eastern district (Detroit)	32.1	175.4	67.9	481.16
Colorado	67.5	159.7	32.5	225.72
Idaho	67.7	152	32.3	295.94
California:
Northern district (San Francisco)	11.6	89	88.4	304.17
Southern district (Los Angeles)	22.1	104.5	77.9	276.26

Punishment consisting only of a fine, in any amount, does not deter violators; imprisonment does. Provision for minimum sentence and mandatory imprisonment on conviction would lessen the number of violators, relieve the courts of congested dockets, and aid effective enforcement.

ORGANIZATION

"1. Transfer the Bureau of Prohibition from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice."

Reasons: (a) An error was made in committing the enforcement of national prohibition to an executive department which the public mind does not associate with law enforcement. The American people have traditional respect for established law-enforcing agencies and officers, but very generally have refused to accord that respect to agents of the Treasury; Department of Justice, including in its organization a bureau of investigation, popularly known as the secret service, United States marshals, and United States attorneys in every Federal judicial district, has long been established in the law and in the public mind as the law-enforcing department of the Federal Government. As such, it has the support of a respectful public sentiment. Transferring enforcement of the prohibition law to that department will gain the advantage of that support to efforts for effective enforcement.

(b) The present arrangement divides authority and responsibility for enforcement between two departments, neither being able to require the other to give effective cooperation: Prohibition officers make investigations and report violations to United States attorneys, but can not compel the institution of prosecutions. In several districts where United States attorneys are negative to enforcement this situation results in friction and "buck-passing" instead of coordinated effort. Placing entire authority and responsibility in one department will remedy this condition.

(c) In the enforcement organization of the Treasury Department there has been lack of competent and authoritative legal counsel and direction of enforcement officers. Attorneys there employed are chiefly engaged in permit matters, and in any event can not give authoritative legal direction. The absence of this essential factor in law enforcement resulted in so many violations of the constitutional rights of citizens by unlawful searches and seizures that Congress imposed heavy penalties on agents for such excesses. Innumerable cases reported to United States Attorneys for prosecution are rejected on the ground of insufficient competent evidence. Hundreds of cases have been dismissed upon suppression of evidence illegally obtained. Authoritative legal direction of investigating officers will be provided by committing entire responsibility for enforcement to the Department of Justice.

"2. Separate the enforcement of the criminal provisions of the law from the administration of the permit system."

Reasons: Enforcement of the national prohibition act requires two distinct types of official functions: (a) Enforcement of its criminal provisions, and (b) administration of its permit system. These functions are distinctly different in the service and policy required. A man who has the type of ability and temperament to judiciously administer the permit provisions of the law ordinarily does not possess the genius for investigation and vigor of action essential for successful direction of criminal investigations. Experience has demonstrated that officers having supervision of both functions and who have undertaken vigorous enforcement of the criminal provisions have caused serious complaints of their arbitrary or injudicious actions in connection with matters arising under the "permissive" provisions; but the general public feels little direct concern in the permit system and believes the vigorous, effective enforcement of the law against criminals to be paramount. The result is that where we have administration satisfactory to the business and industrial concerns affected by the permit system conditions are wholly unsatisfactory to the general public. As long as these two incongruous functions are committed to one organization, consideration for legitimate business interests concerned in the administration of the permit system will continue to be a major factor in the selection and removal of supervising officials, to the disadvantage of effective enforcement of the criminal provisions of the law.

There should be separate organizations of personnel engaged in these two distinct functions so as to permit placing at the head of each a man whose past experience and natural ability peculiarly qualify him for his particular responsibility. At the head of the organization for enforcement of the criminal provisions of the law there should be placed a man of thorough experience and demonstrated ability in the investigation and prosecution of crime.

APPROPRIATIONS

"1. Substantial increases in appropriations are essential. Congress should determine by exhaustive inquiry and hearings the amount reasonably needed for effective enforcement."

Reasons: Under policies of economy and retrenchment, effectively applied through the budget system, no annual appropriation so far made by Congress has provided means for an effective effort toward enforcement. For this reason the number of officers actually engaged in the investigation of violations has not exceeded 2,500. Under the eighteenth amendment the Federal Government is having its first experience in the exercise of the police power, yet it has provided for that purpose a force of officers for the entire country that equals only a small percentage of the number of police officers employed by any one of our several large cities. It is just as futile to hope for effective enforcement with appropriations inadequate to maintain a sufficient number of officers to accomplish that purpose as it would be to expect success at arms under like conditions. The "enemy" in this case is well organized, well financed, and directed by shrewd minds; the Government must match him in all three respects if it is to prevail.

POLICY

1. Affirmative action should be taken by the Government, through capable officials of high position, to develop an active and sympathetic cooperation between dry States and the Federal Government in enforcement of the law; thus allowing concentration of Federal officers in wet States refusing cooperation.

2. Faith in the ability of our Government to enforce obedience to its Constitution and laws should be the only spirit, and an earnest purpose to perform its obligation in that respect should be the only policy, of all officers bearing responsibility for law enforcement. None should be commissioned or retained in service who can not prosecute that policy in that spirit.

PRESIDENTIAL SURVEYS PROPOSED

By Irving Fisher and associates

The most practical plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective should be fitted, as nearly as possible, to the policy and methods of the incoming President. That policy, as Mr. Hoover has declared it, is primarily opposed to coercion, bureaucratic extensions, and centralization. Instead, it is a policy of—

(1) Informing the Nation, scientifically and from unbiased sources, of defects and abuses in the application of the eighteenth amendment; and

(2) Invoking the power of informed leadership to remedy the abuses and through organized, voluntary effort to secure general observance of the law.

In his administrative work the President elect has invariably offered cooperation to representative groups of men and women in States and local communities. By employing the principles of decentralized organization, leaving the execution of details to local autonomy, and of cooperation through volunteer committees of leading citizens, Mr. Hoover succeeded largely in regulating the food supply of scores of millions of people in Europe during and after the war; in forming and conducting the United States Food Administration, and in reorganizing the Federal Department of Commerce. He has announced these principles as the heart of his policy during the next four years.

It is inherently improbable, therefore, that any plan to make the amendment effective will be practicable if it fails to embody the principles whereby Mr. Hoover habitually centralizes ideas and decentralizes their execution through organized leadership among States and local communities.

Accordingly, the present plan proposes the establishment of a President's conference on effectuating the eighteenth amendment, composed of a standing committee and subordinate committees of the type of President Harding's Conference on Unemployment, of which Mr. Hoover was appointed chairman.

The proposed conference would organize (1) a survey of defects and abuses in applying the eighteenth amendment, and (2) a concerted appeal for leadership, through all appropriate agencies of the Nation, in correction of abuses and in general observance of the amendment.

PERSONNEL OF CONFERENCE AND SURVEY

For the proposed survey, the conference should create a staff in large part from such organizations as the National Bureau of Economic Research, the Russell Sage Foundation, American Engineering Council, and Government departments. Committees of the conference and collaborating editors under legislative, administrative, and judicial headings should be drawn from bar associations and Government; those under heads of social derelictions and observance, from universities, educational associations, faculties of medical schools and hospitals, federations of women's clubs, social settlements, religious and ethical bodies; and those under business and industrial headings from business men's associations and foundations for economic research.

Organization to effectuate the eighteenth amendment according to this principle should win cooperation of certain leaders in business, education, and law who oppose bureaucratic force in administering the amendment. Appointment of such leaders to conference committees would tend to harmonize all leadership, including that of the press, motion-picture chains, and radio networks, in support of the expressed will of the people and in aid of their elected executives. If by such cooperation the habit of abstinence can be inculcated among the rank and file of the people, the spirit of the amendment will be subserved, and legislative, executive, and judicial problems under it will be vastly simplified.

I. A SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RECONNAISSANCE SURVEY

METHODS OF PROPOSED SURVEY

Mr. Hoover defines national prohibition under the amendment as a "great social and economic experiment"; he urges, as the first step toward its constructive working out, an "organized, searching investigation of facts and causes" of well-recognized abuses.

His methods in conduct of social and economic investigations, successfully applied in cases enumerated in his speech at St. Louis on November 2, 1928, are not those of political committee hearings; they are methods of engineering management. The methods required for the proposed survey are those described by Edward Eyre Hunt of the Department of Commerce, in the paper and accompanying discussion entitled "Notes on Economic and Social Surveys." Taylor Society Bulletin, February, 1928. Inclusive of raising necessary funds and organizing personnel, they are of the kind embodied in the current Survey of Recent Economic Changes in the United States undertaken by request of Mr. Hoover as continuing head of President Harding's Unemployment Conference, by the National Bureau of Economic Research.

TIME AND SCOPE OF PROPOSED SURVEY

The survey would be designed to bring into sharp focus knowledge about defects and abuses in application of the amendment; to appraise them, and with all reasonable expedition to present the findings as a basis for public and private policy making. The survey should be arranged according to a time schedule as recommended by the conference.

In the interest of dispatch such a survey can not undertake although it will suggest detailed new investigations and research, which should be prolonged under a continuing organization. But this should not be allowed to postpone preparation of the report on the basis of existing knowledge, its publication, and action thereon with all convenient speed.

MAIN SUBDIVISIONS OF PROPOSED SURVEY

Preliminary survey of conditions, 1900–1929; State prohibition, local option, Government dispensaries (South Carolina), and licensed saloon, 1900–1916; war-time restrictions of liquor traffic, 1917–1919; eighteenth amendment and concurrent State laws, 1920–1929. Contrast should be drawn between courses adopted toward liquor traffic in United States and other countries, especially Canada.

1. Legislative, administrative, judicial:

(a) Legislative: Defects in Volstead Act as to minimum and maximum penalties; arrests, search, and seizure; legal rights to seized liquors; "double jeopardy"; injunction and abatement; tenure and removal of enforcement officers; control of industrial alcohol distilleries and warehouses; permits to manufacture articles containing alcohol, forfeiture; use of United States marshals and their deputies as enforcement officers; courts of inquiry respecting violations of law; summoning of witnesses; contempt; evidence relating to sales, manufacture, transportation, possession of intoxicating liquor; evidence of instruments or materials for making same; permits for nonalcoholic malt beverages; alcoholic liquors "fit for use" as a beverage.

Inadequacy of appropriations and salary schedules, State and Federal. Comparison of Volstead Act with body of Federal statutes formerly controlling liquor manufacture, possession, transportation, and sale made inoperative by Volstead Act under section 9, title 3. Regulations "in addition to existing law" under executive discretion of Treasury Department. Relation of Prohibition Unit to Treasury Department; practicability of making unit dependent bureau or placing it under Department of Justice.

Comparison of Volstead Act and existing State enforcement laws. Consequences of repeal or omission to enact State codes—New York, Maryland, Nevada, Montana; lack of sufficient judges, prosecutors, enforcement officials, and agents. Practicability of adopting each State code as Federal law in lieu of Volstead Act within State bounds, leaving Volstead Act to apply only within States and possessions lacking enforcement codes. Possibility of Federal Government cooperating rather than competing with States and assisting them financially, with main reliance on administrative machinery of local government.

Treaties with foreign nations for cooperation; infringement of 12-mile limit.

(b) Administrative: Corruption, crimes of prohibition agents. Wire tapping. "Undercover" agents. Agents provocateurs. Civil-service regulations; examinations. Personnel selection, training, experience among agents and officials. Cooperation of Department of Justice with Prohibition Unit; instructing, training agents. Morale contrasted with that of Secret Service. Concentrating forces in wet districts. Cooperation with local officials.

(c) Judicial: Inadequate courts, State, Federal, handling cases. Jury trials. Lack of verbatim reports of Federal grand juries. Abuses of judicial discretion: Inadequate penalties; overemphasis on technicalities; abuse or insufficient use of injunction clauses. Delays. Insufficient bail bonds. Connivance at perjury and conspiracy by lawyers for defense; tampering with Government witnesses. Lack of rules governing disbarment proceedings for offenses against Federal courts. Election, appointment, impeachment of judges, State and Federal.

2. Social derelictions of habit and observance; health; education:

Attitude of ethical and religious leaders and organizations, social settlements, men's and women's clubs and organizations toward eighteenth amendment; of associations against amendment; of physicians toward restricting prescriptions. Drinking in colleges, high schools, at private tables, social gatherings. Social clubs. Speak-easies. Bootlegging, home brewing, home distilling. Smuggling. Illegal diversion: Sacramental wines, industrial and medicinal alcohol. Public education in light of scientific findings regarding effects of alcohol in (a) wines, (b) malt, and (c) spirituous beverages. Tests of efficiency among drinkers and abstainers in athletic sports and industrial occupations. Accidents from (a) moderate, (b) heavy drinking by motor-car drivers. Effects of moderate drinking in a high-powered age. Findings of insurance companies, other agencies, and individuals on life expectancy of (a) abstainers; (b) moderate drinkers; (c) heavy drinkers. "Bootleg" beverages; toxicity. Diseases and deaths of men, women, and workers as affected by alcoholism (a) before and (b) after adoption of amendment; (c) compared with other countries. Poverty, dependency, crime, industrial accidents.

3. Deficiencies of law observance in business and economic practice as to:

Contract relation between employers and employees regarding abstinence. Concerns requiring abstinence: Transportation, public utilities, manufacturing, mining industries; shops, department, and chain stores. Rules governing personal habits of employers and managers. Moral, material support of amendment by organizations specially benefiting by abolition of liquor traffic—mining, transportation, motor car, radio, motion picture, electric appliances, soft drinks, food and dairy products, confectionery, ice-cream industries; chain and department stores; installment finance companies. Labor unions, company and mutual benefit associations (a) requiring abstinance, (b) supporting amendment. Brewers and distillers; attitude toward companies requiring abstinence; blacklisting. Salvaging of plants of brewers and distillers, and of crops formerly devoted to producing alcoholic beverages.

Conclusion: Chief elements of problem under above headings appraised and interrelated.

II. CONCERTED APPEAL FOR LAW OBSERVANCE AND REMEDY OF ABUSES

The conference recommendations on the survey, as approved, should be carried out by the central committee, its subcommittees, and coordinate committees working through all appropriate existing agencies throughout the States and their subdivisions.

For example, the legislative, executive, and judicial committees should bring the conference recommendations before their respective municipal and State legislatures and Congress for appropriate action; and before municipal, State, and Federal administrations and the local and Federal judiciary. They should cooperate with commercial, industrial, scientific, educational, moral, and religious bodies in organizing public sentiment favorable to needed measures.

Committees on social derelictions, health, and education should employ conference funds in behalf of general abstinence from intoxicants and law observance by means of newspaper and magazine advertisements, posters, motion pictures, speeches, and communications to the press; arranging cooperative meetings with editors and publishers; and by addresses of leaders and experts transmitted over radio networks and by "sound pictures." Educational committees should urge systematic scientific instruction regarding physiological and psychological effects of alcohol in public and private schools and colleges. Committees of women's social organizations should reach their membership by thorough canvasses for pledges or agreements by social leaders (not necessarily personal abstinence pledges) to discontinue serving intoxicants at private tables and social gatherings.

The committees of business and industrial associations, cooperating with labor committees, should urge universal use of employment contracts requiring abstinence by employers and employees alike, and through employees' mutual benefit associations set forth the advantages of increased health and lower insurance rates among abstinent workers.

Such activities will benefit from the experience of emergency organizations during the war—especially of the Liberty loan campaigns and popular canvasses for conserving foodstuffs and materials needed at the front, which through public appeals brought about rapid changes in the habits of the people. Conditions are ripe for such a movement, in which the enthusiasm of organizations of men and women throughout the country awaits the kindling of concerted action and leadership.

In leading this movement the President will have the aid of corps of men and women who under him became veterans in executing plans that have affected the voluntary action of entire peoples, including our own people. The carrying out of the proposed plan would furnish another signal instance in which the cooperation of the Nation's leadership will have "reinforced our individualism" (to use once more the words of Mr. Hoover) "by reducing and not increasing Government interference in business and the life of our citizens"; cooperation that assists "in the cure of abuses by the voluntary establishment of a higher code of ethics and a stricter standard in the conduct of business."

ECONOMIC AND SALESMANSHIP RESEARCH

By Robert W. Davis, advisory editor, McGraw Hill Publishing Co., New York City

The future enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution is basically a business problem. As a business problem it must be approached from a practical business standpoint and solved in accordance with the recognized rules of good business procedure. Such has not been the approach to the question up to the present time. It has been treated almost entirely as a "great moral experiment" in a materialistic age where independence of action has dominated all human thought. The amendment was passed as a moral issue against the violent protest of a large minority, a minority sufficient in power, wealth, and strength to render complete enforcement almost impossible. Millions of good Americans feel that the law is a violent intrusion into the sphere of private morals and that it is no crime to disregard it or actively seek to bring about its nullification if repeal can not be obtained. So long as such a conviction abides and increases in this country it is idle to resort to strong-arm methods in the effort to extinguish it. Enforcement can be completely successful only if the normally law-abiding citizenship acknowledge the value of the law. Enforcement through force against the sentiment of a large minority of the law-abiding citizens soon becomes tyranny and can not be permanent in character.

As a business proposition, however, the question enters into an entirely new sphere of human thought and action. To-day even the partially educated readily comprehend the terms "increased efficiency," "increased production," "lower production costs," "larger net profits," "higher wages," "lower cost of living." Such phrases mean "more dollars," "increased purchasing power," "more comforts," "more leisure"—phrases of human well-being which appeal and are readily acceptable to all members of all strata of society. It is as the "great business experiment" and as the "great business asset" that the American people must approach the eighteenth amendment if it is to be ultimately and completely enforced in this Nation. The moral side must be made subservient to the practical business side, and all of the American people must be sold to the fact that in the rigid enforcement of this amendment lie continued future comforts and material pleasures through increased consumer purchasing power.

THE SOLUTION

As a business problem the successful enforcement of the eighteenth amendment falls under four distinct divisions of recognized business procedure:

(Plan 20142)

First. Economic research (practical research into the commodity being sold): A detail and throughly scientific study of the economic assets and liabilities resulting from the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment since its adoption.

Second. Education (an advertising campaign of a superproduct): A nation-wide educational program selling to the American people the economic benefits of prohibition as determined by the economic research studies.

Third. Methods of enforcement (salesmanship research): A study to ascertain the deficiencies of present enforcement methods with a view toward evolving enforcement methods which, if applied, will enforce but not offend.

Fourth. Effective enforcement (sales achievement): Rigid enforcement of the eighteenth amendment among all classes and grades of society in all localities and without partiality.

A NATIONAL PROHIBITION COMMISSION

(Chart 1)

To insure proper coordination as well as to give authority to the economic studies, education and final enforcement, the problem and its solution should be placed under the direction of a special governmental commission. This commission should be designated as the "national prohibition commission," and should consist of the Secretary of the Treasury (under whose direction the eighteenth amendment must be enforced), the Secretary of Commerce (whose function is the upbuilding of American business and industry), and a private citizen appointed by the President of the United States with the approval of the Congress. Such a commission should be established by act of Congress, its functions specifically designated, and appropriations made to carry on its work as outlined in the following paragraphs:

ECONOMIC RESEARCH

The first step in the solution of a business problem is to establish a background, to ascertain the exact situation, and to establish factors which will determine the assets and deficiencies of, as in this case, the product or proposition to be sold to the public. The eighteenth amendment has now been in force for about 10 years. It has been without question an economic asset to the business and industry of the Nation. But what are these assets? How has it affected wages, labor turnover, labor efficiency, production efficiency, production costs, transportation, distribution, retail trade, savings-bank deposits, life insurance sales, financial investments, cost of living, as well as the social side—housing, education, and recreation? These facts are unknown to-day, although they are available and are essential to a convincing sales argument as to the value to be placed by the American people upon the superproduct—the economic advances to be gained by the effective enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

These miscellaneous economic facts should be ascertained by the national prohibition commission through the operation of especially appointed committees of citizens, expert in the various lines of research. In order that definite and rapid work shall be accomplished by the various committees, such committees should properly come under the immediate direction of the Secretary of Commerce or of the private citizen on the national prohibition commission, dependent upon the type of study to be undertaken by the specific committee. These committees would render a complete report to the member of the national prohibition commission who is directing this work, and these reports would be used by the national prohibition commission as a foundation for the next step—education.

The following committees should be appointed by the national prohibition commission to make these economic studies:

(Chart 2)

Committee of executives, engineers, and economists to study the industrial economic advances resulting from past prohibition enforcement—

(a) Labor efficiency in the factory.
(b) Increased production.
(c) Decreased production costs.
(d) Labor disturbances.
(e) Decreased turnover.
(f) Decreased absenteeism.
(g) Increased cooperation.
(h) Increased wages.
(i) Increased operating suggestions.
(j) Increased interest through stock ownership.
(k) Comparison with foreign labor.

(Chart 3)

Committee of legal minds to study the various sides of the prohibition question—

(a) State enforcement laws.
(b) Relationship between Federal and State enforcement laws.
(c) Eighteenth amendment and Volstead Act relationships.
(d) Canadian prohibition system.
(e) European prohibition systems.
(f) State liquor distribution.
(g) Interstate legal complications.
(h) Federal and State court coordination.

(Chart 4)

Committee of scientists, physicians, etc., to study alcoholic limitation—

(a) Physiological effects of present alcoholic content.
(b) Physiological effects of preprohibition alcoholic content.
(c) Determination of proper alcoholic limit.
(d) Alcoholic limit of foreign countries.
(e) Physiological effects of beer.
(f) Physiological effects of light wines.
(g) Distribution for medical purposes.
(h) Prohibition and general public health.

(Chart 5)

Committee of labor leaders, economists, and social-welfare workers to study the influence of prihibition enforcement upon labor—

(a) Home life.
(b) Recreation.
(c) Education.
(d) Employment.
(e) Strikes and lockouts.
(f) Wages.
(g) Increased efficiency.
(h) Civic responsibilities.
(i) Savings.
(j) Psychological outlook.

(Chart 6)

Committee of ministers of the gospel representing all faiths to study effects of prohibition upon the general religious life of the Nation—

(a) Church attendance.
(b) Membership increases.
(c) Donation increases.
(d) Increased interest.
(e) Increase in number of children in Bible schools.
(f) Increased use of the Bible.

(Chart 7)

Committee of educators to study the effect of prohibition upon the public-school system and upon college education—

(a) Attendance.
(b) Reflection of better home environment.
(c) Increased attention.
(d) Higher marks.
(e) Elevation in general outlook.
(f) Increased interest in colleges in practical subjects.
(g) Increased interest in colleges in cultural subjects.
(h) Influence upon athletics.
(i) Influence on college social life.

(Chart 8)

Committee of welfare workers, economists, sociologists, and psychologists to study social effects of prohibition enforcement upon all classes of the American population—

(a) In the home.
(b) Recreation.
(c) Education.
(d) Civic pride and responsibility.
(e) Savings and investments.
(f) Home ownership.
(g) Comforts.
(h) Freedom from worry.
(i) Elevated marriage relations.
(j) Decreased social evils.
(k) Effect on crime.
(l) Effect on general psychological attitude of the Nation.

(Chart 9)

Committee of economists to study the effect of prohibition upon general economic trends—

(a) Cost of living.
(b) Consumer purchasing power.
(c) Commodity prices.
(d) Cost of living and income, by industrial groups.
(e) Foreign consumer purchasing power.
(f) Cost studies.
(g) General trade.
(h) Foreign commerce.

(Chart 10)

Committee of bankers, executives, and general students of finance to study effect of prohibition enforcement on general finance—

(a) Net corporation profits.
(b) Savings-bank deposits.
(c) Building and real estate.
(d) Security sales.
(e) Stock market transactions.
(f) Corporation investments.
(g) Money rates.
(h) Business failures.
(i) Bank debits.
(j) Taxes.
(k) Federal, State, and city income.

EDUCATIONAL

Having ascertained the facts, having through research established the economic results of prohibition and their place in the present industrial, business, and social structure of the Nation, the next step in the solution of this business problem is to educate the American people to these facts. This phase of the study constitutes the mainspring of the successful enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. The mental attitude of a large minority of the Nation must be changed, not by preaching nor dissertations upon morals but by the presentation of economic facts which will prove to each man and each woman that the enforcement of the prohibition law means increased consumer purchasing power. Adult education based upon the humanly inherent principle of egotism and paternalism is in line with present-day pedagogic thinking. When the American citizen—the business and industrial executive and also the man of the street—realizes that each dollar spent for intoxicating liquor results indirectly in decreased material profits to himself, to his family, to his business, and to his country, then and not until then is he going to back the officers of the law in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

Education is a function of the American Government. The education of the American people by the Federal Government upon this constitutional question, therefore, is not a radical step, but is just as natural a Federal governmental procedure as is the extensive campaign on waste elimination now being waged so successfully by the Department of Commerce. Such education should be in direct charge of the Secretary of Commerce or the presidential appointee as members of the National Prohibition Commission, should be amply financed by congressional appropriations, and should be based upon the following methods of procedure:

1. A weekly publication stating the economic facts of the various surveys.
2. A publicity bureau.
3. Billboards.
4. Radio talks.
5. Lectures in public schools.
6. Discussions before churches, service clubs, etc.
7. Lectures with movie charts.
8. Active indorsement of economic findings by industrial, business, trade, and labor organizations.
9. Cooperation of industrial executives in employee education.

METHODS OF ENFORCEMENT

Having ascertained the true facts relative to the economic benefits of prohibition, having educated the American mind to these facts, and having won the sentiment for the prohibition laws through the weight of economic argument, efficient enforcement becomes the next phase of the problem. This requires first a study of present enforcement methods by committees under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury:

1. A committee of legal minds to study the present Federal and State enforcement laws with special consideration to revising the laws to make them more effective and more fully coordinated.
2. A mixed committee of legal minds, executives, and welfare workers to study present abuses in the administration of prohibition enforcement.
3. A committee of executives to study enforcement methods best suited to industrial workers.
4. A committee of Government officials to study more efficient methods of prohibiting smuggling and bootlegging.

RIGID ENFORCEMENT

Enforcement agencies:

1. Federal prohibition land force.
2. Federal prohibition water force.
3. State constabulary.
4. County and municipal police force.

As an integral part of the American Constitution the eighteenth amendment should be rigidly enforced. As an economic detriment to the national wellbeing, the importation, manufacture, distribution, and sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited as effectively as is the importation and sale of narcotics. If the economic facts are ascertained, the people educated to believe and have faith in these facts, and the enforcement laws revised to eliminate present existing abuses, the rigid and complete enforcement of the eighteenth amendment should be as easy as is the enforcement of laws against narcotics, general smuggling, and other crimes against the national commonwealth.

JUDGE EWING COCKRELL, CIRCUIT COURT, WARRENSBURG, MO.

(President United States Federation of Justice)

THE PLAN'S FOUNDATIONS

1. The eighteenth amendment is effective—to an extent.

Notwithstanding its failures, it successes have been many, its blessings are great.

The problem essentially is to make it more effective—to multiply these successes and extend these blessings.

The plan here submitted is to utilize all the actual achieved successes of the eighteenth amendment. It presents concrete means of extending the definite methods and practices by which all these successes have been and are being won.

2. Eighteenth amendment effectiveness consists of two halves: (1) Obedience—getting everybody possible to obey it; (2) enforcement—punishing those disobeying it.

This plan covers both halves.

3. Eighteenth amendment enforcement is literally nobody's business. It is the business of many independent bodies.

The violator of the amendment fights 19 soldiers of the law. If he whips any one of these 19, he wins the whole battle. These 19 are: (1) Police; (2) prosecutor; (3) trial judge; (4) authority selecting the jury panel; (5 to 16) 12 jurors, any one of whom may block a verdict; (17) appellate court; (18) jailor; (19) pardoning authority.

If the police don't catch a bootlegger, all the other officials are helpless to convict him. If the jailor does not hold him, all the others have been futile in convicting him.

Hence the effective enforcement comes only from all these groups being effective. It requires not one but many "plans."

This plan provides all the "best" enforcement plans for all officials and brings such plans to all officials.

4. Complete obedience must come not from one group of citizens but from all groups.

This plan reaches all groups.

5. The best plans are worthless if not followed.

Officials and people follow their leaders. This plan is, in essence, indorsed by the Nation's leaders—Chief Justice Taft, Vice President Dawes, Speaker LONGWORTH, Majority Leader CURTIS, and Minority Leader ROBINSON, of the United States Senate, and Majority Leader TILSON and Minority Leader GARRETT, of the House of Representatives—and by the greatest force of other leaders ever cooperating in any movement for better law enforcement in this country in this generation.

6. To-day, many officials and individuals are doing finely in part of the work of making the eighteenth amendment effective. But with millions of people interested in making it effective, no official, no organization, no body exists to-day whose job is to get done the parts of the work that are not done.

This plan makes eighteenth amendment effectiveness the definite business of a definite somebody who is able to do effectively the definite things that need to be done.

7. Making the eighteenth amendment effective is a job primarly not of law but of administration.

Our officials normally are taught the principles of what is the law but not the practices of enforcing the law.

There exist no colleges, law schools, or other institutions that systematically teach law administration. And here are our breakdowns.

This plan provides for teaching officials and people the concrete practices that actually are successful in bringing eighteenth amendment enforcement and obedience.

THE MACHINERY AND STEPS OF THE PLAN

Let any individual or organization provide a specific organization (or individual) with the specific job of promoting all the "best and most practicable plans" or parts thereof that are submitted to this award committee or that may hereafter be found.

This organization may work in any State or the whole country.

It can start very simply. For directors, a few leaders of the country (or State). For active staff, one capable executive and a stenographer. Call the organization national (or any State) temperance alliance or other desired name. (Called alliance in this paper.)

Let the alliance through this executive then do any of these things—

1. Investigate all plans submitted in this contest. Outline an investigation through existing literature and among officials, organizations, and others most successful in getting the eighteenth amendment enforced and obeyed of the specific methods and conditions securing such successes and of how they can be established.

2. (a) Notify all enforcement officials and every chief organization of this investigation.

(b) Offer to bring to them free of charge its results in reports, manuals, etc., containing the methods, practices, and principles that have actually proved successful in each department of officials and in each kind of organization, and specifically adapted to use by each department or organization.

(c) Invite leaders of such officials and organizations to approve in advance the plan and steps of this investigation. Offer to modify any proposed steps to meet their approval. Invite them, few or many as desired, to become active or advisory members of the alliance. (Enlist especially "wets" who advocate law obedience.)

This creates an undertaking really by the officials and organizations themselves. This is extremely important.

The national alliance could start quickly with this committee of award as initial directors or members. (Senators BORAH and GLASS would be specially valuable nationally and with officials.) It could quickly be enlarged to the most valuable organization ever formed in this country in this day to support any one law.

3. Make the investigation as planned, approved by the alliance's members.

Compile for each department and each interested organization condensed reports of the successes actually achieved in such department or kind of organization and of the concrete methods, practices, and principles that achieved them. Alliance members first approve these reports.

This could be well done in six months. Striking successes are already known.

4. Get these reports to the officials and organizations through their own committees and meetings, which would explain the reports and urge their use.

This procedure secures the maximum practical use of any plan.

5. Compile and offer to the law schools brief courses and texts that teach the successful principles and practices of eighteenth amendment enforcement.

Compile and offer to the colleges and high schools courses and texts that teach the successful methods and means by which citizens and committees secure both enforcement and obedience.

Assist all schools, organizations, and individuals to establish such courses.

6. Continue and enlarge this work and the "alliances" in every State and community.

7. Offer to organizations and individuals to assist them in any way and to serve as a clearing house on successful methods of making the eighteenth amendment effective.

No such institution now exists. This alone would be an immense, permanent contribution to the country.

8. Publish a small periodical containing accounts of the alliance's work, interesting news, and successes by officials, organization, and communities, short descriptions of methods and plans for enforcement and obedience, and many other helpful things.

Distribute free to all newspapers and interested organizations' heads. Send copies to newspapers in advance with permission to use any material desired.

Secure advertising.

Secure additional paid circulation.

It apparently could be made self-sustaining or better.

It would do a great deal of the work of the alliance already outlined.

No such periodical now exists.

None of the foregoing eight things is now being done.

All of the great results accomplished would be clear gain.

OUTLINE OF PROVED SUCCESSFUL PLANS THAT MAY BE INAUGURATED IMMEDIATELY

I. ENFORCEMENT—OFFICIALS

Police

1. Appointment everywhere of many capable part-time assistant police sheriffs and prohibition agents paid from fines from convictions. This will efficiently multiply police force many times at no cost.

2. Efficient police and agents' schools. Multiplies effectiveness many times. (No new laws or expense.)

Prosecution

1. "Pile-up" (true) charges in number and severity till defendant pleads guilty.

2. File perjury charges where perjury committed.

(No new laws or expense.)

Trial

1. Established "unified" business court organization and procedure. Revolutionizes courts in efficiency and economy.

(By new legislation.)

2. Select only good jurors for all panels.

(No new laws or expense.)

Can revolutionize "jury system."

Judgment

1. Imposition of heavy sentences. Parole after serving part. State control and guidance till reformation proved.

Punishment is a medicine for deterrance and reformation. Don't give it all in one dose.

2. Payments by violators of this law that will pay for all its enforcement.

(No new laws or expense.)

Punishment

Prisons.

1. Employment of prisoners whereby each one earns wages and also supports his family.

2. Training for citizenship.

3. No prisoner released except under State control and guided back to law-abiding life.

Deterrence

Newspaper emphasis lessened on the success of criminals and increased on their convictions, punishments, and miseries.

Personnel

Definite systems of reports and inspection that reveal the honest and corrupt officials and the efficient and inefficient.

(Usually no new laws needed.)

I. SUCCESSFUL PRACTICES BY CITIZENS

1. Organizations asking candidates before election to follow specific effective practices. Much publicity.

2. Citizens' commissions, etc.—

(a) To learn facts.

(b) To assist in criminal law administration.

(c) To promote best legislation.

(d) To educate people on law enforcement.

A citizens' organization is valuable in every county and community.

II. OBEDIENCE

Schools

1. Practical, modern course on evils of liquor drinking.

2. Prizes for best compositions on appropriate topics; sponsored by leaders, especially the rich and "successful."

3. Course on law obedience, advantages, or disadvantages of obedience.

Picture shows

Stories promoting obedience and enforcement.

Newspapers

1. News and other stories of same type as picture shows.

2. Publicity correlating all other steps in enforcement and obedience program.

Organizations, business, social, civic, religious, and other

1. Resolutions that encourage obedience.

2. Joining in appropriate movements, already outlined; furnishing funds where necessary.

3. Organization of special groups, e. g., business houses publicly barring employees who drink—hosts and hostesses not serving liquor, etc.

All the foregoing are established successes; most of those in police, prosecution, trial, and judgment in the writer's own courts. Full reports exist of all.

They show enormous possibilities that can be made realties.

Anybody, the alliance, especially, can promote their establishment everywhere.

This plan put into a specific simple program for the President

An actual part of his job as enforcement official and national leader. Executed with use of but two officials and with little time on his part.

I. ENFORCEMENT

A. Let him have capable officials.

1. Have made this survey of successes of enforcement;

2. Compile manuals of these and of the practices and principles by which secured.

3. Have department (bureau) heads explain the manuals, adapt them to varying conditions and direct their use;

4. Prescribe reports from officials of their use and results;

5. Provide much publicity and encouragement to this successful use; possibly competition and awards.

Above is simply Federal enforcement.

B. 1. Later, or at once, offer these manuals to all State officials;

2. Offer to pay expenses of officials attending conferences where manuals are explained.

In all this, public opinion and officials generally would overwhelmingly follow the President's lead.

Thus, the present achieved, but scattered successes of enforcement would be multiplied enormously over the Nation.

II. OBEDIENCE

A. Let the President have the Commissioner of Education or other official—

1. Investigate the successes of prohibition obedience and means whereby secured.

2. From this investigation compile into reports and manuals—

(a) The best school courses that teach obedience;

(b) The best means for organizations and groups to promote such obedience;

(c) The best family training for such obedience;

(d) How all these are best established.

B. 1. Offer these reports and manuals to all organizations and groups.

2. Offer educational and organization heads capable men to explain and adapt these reports.

Millions of people would gladly follow the President's invitation, and everybody would know what to do.

Now, millions have nobody to follow and know not what to do.

The cost of the essential parts of this presidential program (part A) would be nothing. Existing officials and appropriations would be ample.

Its great extension (part B) would cost only a small sum. Where millions have been spent by the Government to promote the raising of good hogs, thousands would suffice to promote the rearing of obedient children.

Any President can do this, in whole or in part, at any time. Any alliance at any time can help him do it.

OPERATION OF THE PLAN

This plan is for—

1. The suggested "alliance";
2. Any other organization;
3. The President;
4. Any governor;
5. Any group of officials;
6. Any group of people;
7. Any single authority who enforces the law or teaches or promotes obedience to it.

It is usable:

1. In the Nation, any State or group of States;
2. In whole or any part.

We talk much about the failures of this law, but do little about its successes.

Its successes exist and are easy to find.

Let's find them and use them.

ORGANIZE COMMUNITY ACTIVITY

By E. J. Davis, of the Better Government Association of Chicago and Cook County, Chicago

Any practical system to make the eighteenth amendment effective must start with conditions as they are, with the law as it is, and with the men who at present have the power to enforce it.

It also must take into consideration the fact that there can be no thorough enforcement without intelligent local cooperation between the citizens and both Federal and State officials.

Therefore for the best results a system must be adopted which the citizens of any or all communities may use.

The law should be and is comparatively easy to enforce where there is the will to enforce it, because the liquor traffic can not hide itself.

The chief causes for failure in enforcement of the eighteenth amendment in any community are:

First. Lack of accurately informed public opinion.

Second. Lack of reliable information regarding the character and record of public officials.

Third. Lack of organized nonpartisan support for honest public officials.

Fourth. Lack of punishment in the courts and at the polls of dishonest public officials.

With money, the illicit liquor traffic buys political protection and where the traffic flourishes it may be assumed that large sums are used in corrupting public officials and in building a political machine. The corrupting power of such machines, in some States, reaches into influential political quarters.

Organized crime in such communities is powerful because the illicit liquor traffic needs criminals to fraudulently elect public officers who will wink at law enforcement. Officials who will sell protection to the liquor traffic will also sell protection to vice and all forms of organized crime, and will graft upon the public treasury; therefore every law-abiding, patriotic citizen should help enforce the eighteenth amendment.

The present situation will not correct itself. But if there is well-directed, organized community interest and activity the political power of the traffic can be defeated and the traffic destroyed.

Let the community, as a first step to enforcement, form a local group which may be called a better-government association or federation. This may begin with some individual calling a conference of representatives from business, professional, and other nonpolitical groups and organizing under a State charter.

Let such organization begin with the assumption that the officials want to do their duty and that they want the cooperation of the public.

At the very outset have a frank and friendly conference with the officers, assuring them of a desire to cooperate with them.

Study conditions, collect the facts, and if sufficient data is found showing official culpability, invite the officer who seems to be principally responsible to meet with the officers of the association and go over with him the facts that seem to point to him as the man responsible for the breakdown in law enforcement. Do not gloss things over but fact him with all the facts in a fair and considerate spirit. If the facts are in the nature of court-proof evidence, give them at once to the grand jury. If the evidence is circumstantial only, do not yet go to the grand jury. Sometimes perfectly true and logical explanations may be produced. Give no publicity to your proceedings thus far.

If the official does not respond to this treatment, then the next step is to take the facts to his superior.

Let us assume that the responsibility is located upon a United States deputy marshal; take the facts to the United States marshal, and if he fails to act give no publicity to the proceedings, but file the record for future use and begin on the next case.

If the trouble should be with an assistant United States district attorney, proceed as above, and if necessary take the facts to the United States district attorney. If a prohibition agent is involved, follow the same procedure, finally going to the prohibition director for the district; but still no publicity.

After several cases have been carried through in this way, review the facts in all of them with the United States marshal, the United States district attorney, or the prohibition director and ask what should be done with the facts—shall they be submitted to the United States Senators, or Representatives, to the Attorney General, or to the newspapers? It may be necessary to appeal to the voting constituency of the political sponsor of some of the officers involved, but this should be done only after careful preparation of the field.

The most powerful weapon to secure the enforcement of the law is publicity of the facts, but the publicity needs to be handled carefully or the agency responsible for the publicity soon degenerates, in the public mind, into the status of a common scold and loses its influence.

The more patience used in developing and following the cases through, the more carefully the facts are safeguarded, and the fairer the organization has been in affording opportunity for the officials to buckle down to real law enforcement without exposure, the more convincing the evidence is should it finally be necessary to appeal to the public, and the more destructive it is to the influence of the officeholder who is responsible for the delinquency.

Firm, patient, unprejudiced, considerate, but relentless following of the facts will improve the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment in any community, and will finally triumph in complete enforcement.

In States which have enacted prohibition legislation in harmony with Federal law the same procedure should be followed with the police captains, sheriffs, State's or prosecuting attorneys, and other local officials as outlined in the foregoing procedure with Federal officials, the ultimate recourse resting with the public in both instances.

There should be State and national units formed of representatives from the local organizations. Annual conventions should be held, both State and national, for strengthening State and national administrations when necessary, for the exchange of ideas, and improving the programs of the local units.

In populous communities it is particularly difficult for the public to get accurate, reliable information regarding candidates, and in consequence the voters become discouraged. Unscrupulous politicians know this. They build a machine on the money of the bootleggers—plus the other spoils of corrupt politics, and then set out to deceive the general public. They make fine gestures of interest in social service to the women's clubs and social-service groups—talk soft to the church folks and make fair promises which they laugh about afterwards. The joke must be taken out of such promises.

In any community it is not good public policy to carelessly elect officials and then forget about them until the next election. This is particularly true of communities where underworld leaders are willing and eager to pay for protection. Under such conditions the temptation is doubly severe because the officials think, and too often rightly, that the public is paying no attention, and the bootleggers do not ask them to do anything aggressively dishonest but merely to turn their heads while the law is violated.

It also is not good policy to let honest officials fight their political battles alone—neither is it good policy to let dishonest and crafty ones deceive the public by fair promises and crooked reports of their work.

To feel that an intelligent public eye is upon them all the time is an encouragement to honest officials and a deterrent to the dishonest.

If the better-government organization has functioned properly, it will be in the best position of any civic group to furnish nonpartisan and impartial information to the voters. It should prepare informative bulletins giving the concrete facts regarding officials and candidates as far in advance of primaries and elections as possible. These bulletins should be mailed to the leaders in all nonpolitical groups such as churches, clubs, improvement associations, parent-teacher organizations, etc. It should hold meetings all the time with the leaders to inform them and through them the members and their associates developing an informed public sentiment regarding the worth of the candidates. This builds a clear, discriminating, nonpartisan and powerful public sentiment which becomes irresistible by election time.

Such better-government groups should not degenerate into mere "law and order leagues," hiring detectives and taking the enforcement of law into their own hands. They should work with the duly constituted public officials, holding them to strict accountability.

Coincident with the foregoing, an educational program should be carried on to solidify public sentiment in support of the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. In such effort it is not necessary for the better-government group to discuss the merits of prohibition itself. Such educational campaigns can and are being carried on by other groups. Possibly the better way is to base the arguments solely upon the duty to enforce any law as long as it is upon the statute books and the damage which nonenforcement inflicts upon the community and particularly upon local government.

The illicit-liquor traffic furnishes most of the money for corrupting local politics. It creats a corrupt tax-wasting political machine. It encourages and protects organized crime. It blights moral standards. It makes the community less desirable for legitimate business. It encourages the organization of gangsters in politics and promotes their success in the control of local offices.

Nonenforcement of the eighteenth amendment in any community creates a condition of lawlessness which tends toward anarchy.

Each community must be educated to see that it must choose between enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and chaos in its local government.

Few, if any, American communities deliberately choose lawless ways. They drift into lawless ways. Most of them want the laws faithfully and honestly enforced, and will so express themselves if compelled to make a choice and if the facts, and nothing but the facts, have been carefully and intelligently placed before them.

The foregoing is largely a record of actual experience in Chicago during the past two years, when in two general elections and one primary election the public defeated overwhelmingly in each election a political machine that was counted unbeatable.

In the struggle to enforce the eighteenth amendment an entire new organization of the political life of America may be brought about.

The home, the business men, all those who want nothing from the Government except that it function honestly, competently, and scientifically, may supersede in any community the political power of the underworld, but they must organize and work intelligently and continuously.

Forces which hitherto have been too largely indifferent to politics and government may now assert themselves with some hope of success, and this new stream of influence in every community as it becomes better educated politically and better organized, will make the eighteenth amendment effective. In the process it will make clean and strong the most inefficient, wasteful, and corrupt of American institutions—municipal government—and thereby strengthen all agencies and departments of governments.

REACH THE STILLS AND EXPECT MORE OF LOCAL OFFICERS

By Mrs. C. P. Mills, New York

To adopt a practical plan to enforce the eighteenth amendment it is necessary to realize how, where, when, and why the law is not now being enforced. There has been no one plan followed for any length of time in all prohibition districts.

There are six sources of supply for the leaks of alcoholic beverages into the market. The proportions of these sources differ in the various prohibition districts; the details of each can be taken care of as separate problems, but there are several fundamental principles that if applied to all will help in enforcing the Volstead Act.

1. Education of communities to the necessity of local cooperation.

Teach respect of the law and awaken the interest and pride of a community in enforcing the law by publishing the results of nonenforcement of the eighteenth amendment, such as moral conditions in speak-easies and general disrespect of all other laws, besides the health and fire risks.

Each community should realize that the Federal Prohibition Department can not be taxed entirely with the closing down of many of the seats of the leaks. Local agencies should be held responsible for enforcing respective laws. The speak-easies can often be closed for breaking the health department laws—physical examination of personnel serving food, the quality and manner of serving and preparing this food, also ventilation of rooms and kitchens. The fire departments can close these speak-easies for improper fire escapes and exits and can close factories for the enormous risk from stills and plants when alcoholic mixtures are manufactured with untrained workers (legally these places are termed nuisances, but a stronger word might be used). The police can often close the speak-easies on moral grounds.

2. There should be more judges appointed and better court facilities for promptly trying prohibition cases. Now, through lack of judges and courts there are innumerable delays and the suspected or accused lawbreaker can continue his business until his case is tried. This delay is often from six months to two years, and his business has not been stopped in any way.

3. Prohibition agents should be honest, but are they? Consider their small pay and great temptations and often risks and the moral contamination surrounding them and the large and frequent bribes offered and the small material reward for being honest. Remove the chance of temptation coming from a dishonest person within the ranks and try to guard against the chance of bribes being offered from outside by having constantly shifting assignments and seldom the same two inspectors together and require written reports to be sent in to headquarters as soon as an inspection is completed. These reports should, of course, be checked up and the orders given only in the morning of the day the inspection is to be made. Agents often have no knowledge of exactly what kind of evidence would be considered enough to bring a lawbreaker to trial with hopes of having him found guilty. So all agents should be taught in a school the legal requirements, also should have a knowledge of a chemical test for ingredients used to denature alcohol and a test for the articles manufactured from denatured alcohol which they might have to inspect during the course of manufacture, also knowledge of how to use the apparatus for testing beer. If this is too difficult for the average agent, then samples should be taken of each stage of manufacture and sent to Government chemists for analysis. There should be no political appointments to the Prohibition Department. Let the agent detecting and reporting a lawbreaker share in the fine imposed by the Government, as is done in California by counties.

4. All manufacturers should be required to post a bond to a large value of their business assets, and this bond should be forfeited if they are accused by the Government of breaking the law. This bond should be returnable on acquittal. The bond should also be forfeited by a manufacturer if he sells to a customer who uses his product to illegally manufacture into alcohol. There are large and well-known corporations whose earnings have enormously increased by the large price now obtained for their by-products. If they could be required to make their deliveries under high forfeitable bond to customers manufacturing reputable commodities, this evil would cease.

5. Require prohibition administrators to publicly announce and post their reports (monthly or quarterly) of results accomplished in their district so interested individuals or communities can check up and the community know what is being accomplished.

The six sources of supply of illegal alcohol to the market are (A) imports, (B) beer, (C) wine, (D) legally distilled and bonded liquor, (E) alcohol, and (F) stills.

A. Imports: Government analysis of seized bootleg liquor from all over the country show that only about 2 per cent of all illegal beverages are smuggled into the country. So the Coast Guard has a well worked out system and should continue their vigilance as they have done in the recent past. The treaties with foreign countries are a great help toward curtailing this leak, which was probably the greatest when the Volstead Act was first enforced and is now the least.

B. Beer: Frequent and nonperiodical inspection of breweries with written reports of amount of mash on hand, the amount fermenting, and the amount already fermented or the finished product on hand. Again emphasize shifting inspectors and carefully check up written reports of all stages of this supply.

C. Wine is used for the manufacture into vinegar. This wine is withdrawn from bonded warehouses. If acetic acid is added to the wine a certain time before delivery to the manufacturer, the acid can not be neutralized or withdrawn and nothing but vinegar can be made of this product. Wine is also allowed for sacramental uses. (The Christians require only a small amount for this purpose, and, if there is a leak here, it is so small as to be negligible.) Unfortunately much dishonesty was uncovered through persons selling permits to distribute wine to the Jews for sacramental purposes. In one year, in New York City alone, 6,000,000 gallons of sacramental wine were withdrawn and sold through hundreds of wine shops; the persons for whom it was withdrawn often did not receive their allotment or were forced to pay a large profit to the illegal wine dealer.

In the year and a half by a careful check-up of needs, these withdrawals were cut down to 40,000 gallons a year. Sacramental wine for home use should only be issued to an adult member of a congregation, whose signature and needs are approved by the rabbi and the rabbi's synagogue and authority in turn approved by the president and secretary of the congregation. Then the receipt for this wine should be signed and sent to the administrator by the authorized person receiving it. These receipts should be carefully checked up and the president, secretary, and rabbi should be held responsible for the just and legal demands of members of their congregations.

D. Legally distilled and spirituous liquors in Government bonded warehouses: A careful check up should be made as to quantity and chemical purity of bonded liquors now on hand, because it has been proven that some of these bonded liquors have been stolen or diluted or otherwise tampered with. Change the Government guards frequently and again test liquor before it is withdrawn by permits issued for small amounts for the monthly allotments of reputable druggists and hospitals for the needs they can show by previous records of business.

E. The diversion of commercial alcohol is the basis of about 90 per cent of the bootleg liquor. This leak must be dammed. Curtail or revoke as many old permits as possible, as these were issued wholesale without proper investigation when the Volstead Act was a new law. Then issue no new permits for the manufacture of denatured alcohol or the manufacture of denatured alcohol into commodities without a thorough investigation of persons seeking permits. This investigation should go into their integrity and moral character, past and present association with any other alcoholic permittee (and his record); also the business prospects and market for goods to be manufactured. On granting permit have permittee sign agreement to notify local administrator in advance of manufacture, so this process can be witnessed by prohibition agents. Again emphasize the fact that different agents should go for this inspection from time to time and not always the same two together, and immediate written reports of these agents should be carefully checked up and filed by the prohibition administrative department.

This same supervision should apply to the manufacture of bonded whiskies and brandies into tonics. Also a check up should be made of alcohol leaving a large wholesaler and received by a smaller manufacturing plant. Too much care can not be taken by check-ups of all stages of transportation, manufacture, and ultimate disposal of finished product. All commodities having (reasonably large) alcoholic content should be stored in warehouses under Government control and should be withdrawn only on orders from customers. This would entirely eliminate the diversion through cover houses and the possible refining of a manufactured commodity to extract the alcoholic content, as now a dealer can denature alcohol or say he has denatured it and claim shipment to any customer and the Government follows it no further. By careful supervision of the manufacture and disposition of denatured alcohol in one Federal district—i. e., the second—the withdrawals of denatured alcohol per month were reduced in one year from approximately 900,000 gallons a month to 400,000 gallons. This reduction of 500,000 had all been previously diverted to illegal uses. The average price of denatured alcohol to the bootlegger rose from $1.10 a gallon to over $5 a gallon, and with greater control exercised this price would rise much further and become prohibitive to the bootlegger. This close supervision lasted for a year. There was a let down later and the price of denatured alcohol to the bootlegger immediately dropped from $5 to around $2 a gallon, where it is at the present time.

F. The last source of alcohol into the bootleg market is through illegal stills. These are used for two purposes—one, to refine or clean denatured alcohol, and, two, to extract the alcohol by distilling a fermented product. Both of these processes are exceedingly dangerous when done on a large scale, and stills large enough to supply the demands for alcohol when the other illegal sources are cut down would have to be so large (covering thousands of square feet) that their presence could not escape the knowledge of the community, and when the people of a locality and the local authorities are taught their responsibility these stills could not be allowed to run. Some interested person would spot their existence, the fire department for fire risk, the police department for unregistered and illegal stills, and the people for lawlessness in their neighborhood. The Government should watch the disposal of products capable of fermentation and distillation and the large corporations selling their by-products for conversion into alcohol should lose the bond the Government would require them to post.

A plan adopted along these lines and carefully and consistently followed in all prohibition districts would be practical and would succeed in enforcing the prohibition amendment.

The President Can Enforce

By Ex-Governor Gifford Pinchot, Milford, Pa.

I

Because the problem of enforcing the eighteenth amendment is as wide as our system of Government, the head of that system is the man to deal with it. The President of the United States can control all branches of law enforcement by the Nation, and can effectively influence enforcement by all smaller political divisions, such as cities and States. No one else can.

Bootlegging is formidable to-day mainly because most of the law-enforcing agencies in America have had, and still have, no serious intention to enforce the law. The bootleggers know that the will to enforce is lacking. This is the first essential of the situation.

We have laws enough, regulations enough, money enough, and men enough to enforce the law, if they had strong purpose behind them. Only determination is wanting.

There is but one man who can supply the will to enforce on a nation-wide scale. That is the President of the United States.

Enforcement is hamstrung by politics. This is the second essential fact. The President alone is strong enough to break the alliance between corrupt politics and the organized business of bootlegging.

In law enforcement, public sentiment is vital. The detail of machinery is not. Only the President can awaken and lead a nation-wide insistence that the law shall actually be enforced.

Law enforcement involves city, county, State, interstate, national, and international questions. All of these matters can come together only in the President.

Through its permit system, the Government exercises exclusive jurisdiction over the manufacture, storage, and transportation of alcohol in any form. Here is the heart of the problem. Only the President can dominate it.

The Constitution is under attack at the point of the eighteenth amendment. The President has taken oath to "preserve, protect, and defend" it. The laws are disregarded. It is his constitutional duty to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

II

The President can enforce the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act up to the level of other laws by following in substance the course outlined below, every item of which has been tried out in corresponding situations by lesser executives and has been found to work:

First. By declaring publicly his determination to compel respect for the eighteenth amendment.

Second. By announcing that he will refuse to offer an appointment to his Cabinet or to any other office subject to his authority to anyone who has not before the offer given the President his or her word to obey the Constitution of the United States, including the eighteenth amendment and all laws enacted to give it effect.

Third. By giving public notice that, so long as he is President, violation of the eighteenth amendment by any public servant subject to his authority (including officers of the Army and Navy) will carry with it immediate dismissal.

Fourth. By announcing that all Federal enforcement services will hereafter be conducted wholly without regard to politics, on the basis of merit and efficiency alone, and that officials guilty of political manipulation of enforcement agents or of shielding influential lawbreakers will forthwith be dismissed.

III

Having thus notified the people that the Government takes the Constitution seriously, let the President proceed to:

Call together in the White House the heads of the Bureau of Prohibition, Customs Service, Bureau of Internal Revenue, Coast Guard, special intelligence agents, and any other Federal services concerned in law enforcement and notify them in open meeting that they must cooperate instead of acting independently, as at present; that they and their subordinates must be dry (and not only dry but efficient); and that they must begin producing results within three months or make way for better men.

Select as coordinating enforcement officer a man with large executive experience genuinely interested in enforcing the law, set him over these services as representing the President, and direct him to organize them for cooperation among themselves and with State and local enforcing authorities.

Instruct him to attack the flow of illegal drink at the source, and therefore to concentrate on the great producers of illegal drink, which are the alcohol distilleries and denaturing plants, the breweries, and on importation from Canada, and to throw the strength of coordinated forces especially against the largest offenders, many or most of whom have hitherto been protected by politics.

Call together in the White House (with the Attorney General and the Assistant Attorney General in charge of enforcement both present) all United States district attorneys, point out in open meeting that some of them have been active in enforcement and some not, give notice that all of them will be required within 30 days to give proof of activity and within three months to produce results, and make it clear that those who fail will be promptly removed. Direct the Attorney General to report the facts at the end of the 30 days, and thereafter every three months until further orders.

The known failure of enforcement in the city of Washington has immensely encouraged lawlessness throughout the country. Let the President give the Commissioners for the District of Columbia one week within which to report to him the names and addresses of all speakeasies in the District, including hotels, restaurants, and social clubs, all of which are or should be well known to the police. Let him then direct the commissioners, under penalty of dismissal, to clean up, and to report to him weekly in detail the progress made. Reports of conditions in the District should be checked for completeness and reports of results for accuracy by members of the United States Secret Service in whom the President has confidence.

IV

Let the President also—

Invite the governors of the several States to meet him in the White House, lay before them their duty under their oaths of office, remind them that the Volstead Act runs in every State, offer close cooperation from the Nation with the States in enforcing the law, and ask them to join with the President in putting public sentiment behind law enforcement.

Suggest to such of the governors as have it the use of their power to remove from office unfaithful or lawbreaking sheriffs, mayors, and district attorneys, and urge them to exercise their influence over all enforcement officials in their States, whether or not directly subject to their orders.

Invite the mayors of the hundred greatest cities to meet with him and lay before them in detail why the law is violated, how much it is violated, and how and by whom (all of which is already well known to officials of the Federal Bureau of Prohibition). Then call their attention to their individual responsibility under their oaths of office, offer them Federal cooperation in cleaning up, and ask for their cooperation in return.

Call in the leaders of the great professions, industries, and corporations, lay the situation before them, suggest to them, and ask them to suggest, methods by which they could assist not only in enforcing the law but more especially in creating public sentiment for law enforcement.

Call into conference the leaders of the churches, the dry organizations, the service clubs, the nation-wide public, semipublic, and fraternal organizations or associations, and ask for their help in arousing public support for the law.

V

Voluntary assistance of this kind has been, and can be again, extremely valuable in arousing public interest and in combating the growing false assumption that the law can not be enforced. This assumption is damaging. It needs to be destroyed.

The methods above suggested for the President in no case require action by Congress. They add nothing to the cost of enforcement, which, in fact, is far less than is generally supposed. They are legal, practical, appropriate, and within the President's constitutional duty. Part of them derive exceptional efficiency from the very great importance attached under our system to the holding of public office. Every one of them has already in similar situations been shown to be effective by the test of actual trial.

These methods reach Federal enforcement directly and at once. They reach State and local enforcement less directly and less promptly, but effectively nevertheless. Many local governments, it is true, are so corrupt that no immediate transformation is possible. Certain judges encourage lawbreaking by the mildness of their sentences. But even situations like these are affected within a reasonable time by a general awakening of public sentiment such as would follow the course here outlined. That also has been proved by experience.

VI

The eighteenth amendment can be enforced with the statute law we have. Nevertheless certain improvements are desirable. Congress, which is overwhelmingly dry, would eagerly follow the recommendations of a President determined to enforce the law. For example, an amendment to the Volstead Act is needed to make a search warrant issue on proof of manufacture of illegal liquor as well as on proof of sale, to meet the recent practice of bootleggers in putting numerous small stills in private homes instead of fewer and larger one in business buildings easier to enter under the law. Or an amendment to make it a felony to distill liquor in private houses, in which case a search warrant would not be required.

The buyer of bootleg liquor is morally as guilty as the seller. A President determined to enforce would press, when public sentiment permitted, for the passage of a law to apply the same penalties to both. When enacted, he would take care that this law also was vigorously enforced.

The Prohibition Bureau should be taken out of the Treasury Department. Whether it should be made responsible to the President directly or through the Department of Justice is less important than that the President himself should be determined to enforce the law.

If the President were determined to make the eighteenth amendment effective, many changes in the regulations under the Volstead Act would inevitably follow. Among them would be a revision of the formulae for denaturing alcohol to make denaturing less easy, and better control of so-called "completely denatured" alcohol.

The Federal permit is the key to the control of bootleg liquor at its source. About two-thirds of the hundred million gallons of industrial alcohol made under Government permit in 1927 was diverted to bootleggers. A survey to determine how much denatured alcohol is actually necessary for various industrial uses would supply knowledge which, applied by a man with a will to enforce, would go far to dry up the largest source of illegal drink.

Still other ways of reaching the situation are open to the President. For example, the free and unlimited importation of liquors by diplomatic representatives is a chief cause of the wetness of Washington. If the President, following the far stronger precedent set by the British Government years ago in the matter of slaves, should suggest to all foreign governments that he would regard it as a friendly act if they would instruct their representatives to import no more alcoholic liquors, but conform instead to the law of the country to which they are accredited, the atmosphere and attitude of official Washington respecting the eighteenth amendment would change overnight.

VII

It will be objected that the President is already too heavily burdened to undertake new tasks. The answer is that the President has no duty more essential than to defend the Constitution and to enforce the law. If something else must wait, then let it wait.

But in fact nothing need wait. For it is confidently asserted, on the basis of practical experience, that everything here outlined, and much more, can be done without absorbing 5 per cent of the President's working time. Once it were known that the President was thoroughly determined to enforce the law, the rest would follow almost as a matter of course.

When a President of the United States makes it his personal business to see that the eighteenth amendment is enforced, and sticks to it, it will be enforced. And not before.

PLAN OF JAMES E. DAVIS, CHIEF OF POLICE, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

All persons engaged in law enforcement activities to-day must of necessity, if they indulge in any serious thought, be deeply disturbed by the spirit of lawlessness everywhere encountered. In no direction is this defiance of law so prevalent or so bold as in the contempt shown for one of our most sacred institutions, the Constitution of the United States. This contempt for the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution is not confined to social outlaws. It extends into all branches of our national, social, and economic structure.

Persons prominent in our social life and holding positions of leadership in our professional, business, and industrial worlds seem to have no conception of the contagiously disastrous effect of their own support of an outlaw "industry." Their money gives it power, their known sympathy and patronage give it prestige in places where it should be shown no quarter.

Human psychology is such that contempt for any law, openly indulged in with impunity, breaks down respect for other laws. Defiance of the liquor statutes is menacing the very foundations of government—destroying respect for law and for the agencies charged, not only with liquor law enforcement, but with the administration of all criminal justice.

To one intimately acquainted with conditions as they now exist, the situation is sufficiently grave to demand drastic action. So long as the eighteenth amendment remains a part of the Constitution, it is imperative that its enforcement be made vastly more effective than it now is. To a practical-minded police executive that can be accomplished through the following reorganization and extension of the Federal machinery, with a consequent branching out into new lines, particularly in the direction of deliberate seeking of cooperation from State, city, and county enforcement agencies, and from the citizens at large, in groups and as individuals. It is, therefore, proposed that the Federal Government organize its activities for enforcement of the eighteenth amendment along the general lines outlined:

I. Centralization of authority in a single head, working under an interdepartmental board or in the Department of Justice.

II. Organization of the field activities by States instead of the present geographical districts, with a Federal prohibition administrator for each State, responsible directly to the general director. This State administrator would be held responsible for enforcement within his territory. One of his most important duties would be to see that cordial, cooperative, practical working arrangements are established with all local law-enforcement agencies in his territory. He would likewise be expected to have established and maintained contact with all men's and women's organizations, church groups, business associations, public-health agencies, and with individuals genuinely interested in liquor-law enforcement—working out with them a program of cooperation whereby they might act as allies by furnishing valuable information, being instructed by the Federal agents as to what is helpful and valuable and what is comparatively unimportant and wasteful of time and energy.

III. Employment of a much larger Federal force, at a higher rate of pay, with higher personnel standards.

IV. General organization: The service should comprise the following general functional divisions, each headed by an assistant director, responsible directly to the general director.

1. DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION—DUTIES

(a) To maintain a force of Federal agents whose whole time would be devoted to the detection and apprehension of persons violating the Federal statutes designed to carry out the provisions of the eighteenth amendment.

(b) To assign these agents to the State directors who would supervise their work while so assigned.

(c) To assign agents to all border and coast States for special coast and border patrols to apprehend persons engaged in importing liquor.

(d) To maintain a special picked group of undercover operators at national headquarters to be used as a highly mobile unit, subject to assignment by the general director to any section of the country.

(e) To cooperate closely with State police, sheriffs' offices, and police departments on liquor-law enforcement.

(f) To conduct training classes for new agents, giving intensive instruction in laws, rules of evidence, court procedure, etc.

(g) To hold regional conferences with local enforcement executives where mutual problems could be discussed and effective cooperative action mapped out.

2. DIVISION OF IDENTIFICATION—DUTIES

(a) To maintain at national and State headquarters record offices, where identifying data (including fingerprints) on all arrested persons shall be received.

(b) To record fingerprints and other identifying data on all persons arrested for violation of liquor laws, copies to be filed in both local and national headquarters.

(c) To exchange records on liquor law cases with State bureaus of identification, with the national bureau, with Federal and State prisons, and with local peace officers.

(d) To search files and make return to arresting officers immediately upon receipt of new records, so that they may have full information for prosecuting attorney and court of all prior arrests. (This is a very vital piece of work, entirely lacking at present, so that the heavy penalties attaching to "priors" are rendered ineffective for lack of identifying evidence.)

3. DIVISION OF PROSECUTION—DUTIES

(a) To exercise general supervision over the prosecution of all liquor law cases in Federal courts, to the end that such prosecution shall be certain, speedy, and uniform throughout the country.

(b) To assist in the prosecution of all Federal liquor law cases when in the opinion of the Attorney General such assistance is necessary.

(c) To make constant observations and report to the general director when Federal court calendars are so crowded as to cause considerable delay in the trial of liquor cases.

(d) To make constant study and analyses of the existing liquor laws and of court decisions based thereon, and to recommend to the director general such new statutes or amendments as may be required to bring about better observance of the eighteenth amendment.

4. DIVISION OF RESEARCH AND PUBLIC RELATIONS—DUTIES

(a) To secure from all State headquarters, United States district attorneys' offices, and the Federal courts statistics relative to the number of arrests for violations of the liquor law, exact disposition of each case, property confiscated, premises padlocked, cases appealed and final decision in each, etc.

(b) To secure from State, county, and city authorities similar statistics relative to arrests and disposition of cases for violations of State enforcement laws.

(c) To tabulate these figures in such a manner as to provide reliable and conclusive information as to the functioning of all parts of the machinery for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

(d) To prepare and print monthly and annual statistical reports making these figures available for all interested groups.

(e) To serve as an information source for organizations and individual citizens desirous of knowing the facts about prohibition enforcement.

(f) To organize speakers' bureaus, national and State, registering persons properly qualified to speak on the subject of prohibition.

(g) To prepare and release items and articles for publication.

(h) To carry on continuously a stimulative, constructive, educational program having as its object the changing of the public attitude toward law observance through revealing the dangers to the Nation inherent in contempt for law, and

(i) To maintain a close liaison with all national organizations working in any phase of social or economic welfare.

To put the above plan into effect requires but two things, considerably increased appropriations, and securing of properly qualified persons to do the work. Both can be brought about, if persons of influence have the Nation's welfare sufficiently at heart to set to work to do so.

PRIMARILY A HEALTH MATTER

By William J. Flynn, deceased, former chief, United States Secret Service

To bring about a better enforcement of the Volstead Act, I suggest the following:

First. Since the manufacturing and dispensing of alcohol is more or less a pathological matter, I suggest that the same be taken from the prohibition department and put under the supervision of the United States Department of Health.

Second. Disband the present enforcement unit of the prohibition department and transfer the duties of the same to the Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice. This will eliminate a great deal of graft and bring about better efficiency.

Third. Empower the United States commissioners to deal with and dispose of minor infractions of the Volstead Act. This will, to a great extent, prevent the clogging of Federal court with prohibition cases.

In addition, this proposition will bring about a saving of several million dollars to the Government in the enforcement of the prohibition laws.

RESEARCH, EDUCATE, ENFORCE

By Dean C. E. Carpenter and Fowler V. Harper, University of Oregon Law School, Eugene, Oreg.

The plan herein submitted proceeds upon the assumption that no sudden and radical changes in the prohibition law or in its methods of enforcement should be undertaken until after a careful survey of the situation is made and proper foundations for such changes are laid; that a scientific and statesmanlike solution of the problem requires the cultivation of an intelligent and enlightened public opinion and the careful evolution (not the hasty enactment) of laws and of methods of enforcement which will more nearly cope with the actual need. The plan we submit lays emphasis upon three matters, namely, research, education, and enforcement.

RESEARCH

Research should be undertaken by the Federal Government which will determine facts so carefully and scientifically that they will be invulnerable under the attacks of opponents of the prohibition movement.

1. PHYSIOLOGICAL AND ECONOMIC

These facts should embrace—

The physical and moral effects of alcohol.

How far the present prohibition movement in those phases of it where it has been most successful, has proved beneficial to industry.

How it has affected the laboring man and his family and how far it is responsible for the improved general welfare and prosperity of the United States.

Such information is essential as the basis for creating a sincere, widespread, and effective desire and sentiment for a more thorough enforcement of the prohibition law.

2. SOCIOLOGICAL

This research, too, must develop fearlessly the facts with respect to the relation which prohibition has to crime:

Has drunkenness increased or diminished under the prohibition law?

How has the consumption of liquor been affected?

Has there been an increase of drinking among the young?

Has it increased or diminished crime other than those crimes involved in the violation of the prohibition act?

Does it tend or does it not tend to conduce to growing disregard of law generally, especially among young people?

Have habitual criminals drifted into bootlegging as an easier and more profitable occupation?

Is bootlegging used to finance other crimes?

What are the sources of the illegal liquor; how far imported; at what particular points and by what methods is this importation effected?

How far is liquor diverted from legal channels and by what methods?

How far is it illegally manufactured?

Where are the tools and instruments for this manufacturing made?

3. ADMINISTRATIVE

What phases of the enforcement of the prohibition law have been weakest?

At what points is there a lack of sufficient number of enforcement officers?

Which officers have been inefficient?

How far have faulty methods of detection been responsible for inefficiency?

How far and just where have the crowded dockets of the courts been responsible for delays in prosecuting offenders of the liquor law?

How far has there been miscarriage of justice?

How far will an increase in the number of judges be desirable?

Should the jurisdiction of the added judges extend beyond liquor cases?

How far can the elimination of cumbersome procedure help the situation?

4. EXPERIMENTAL

In this connection several courts should be set up, operating under the various procedural reforms which have received the sanction of the more enlightened and progressive members of the bar. These should function alongside other courts having the usual procedure. Conditions in the two courts should in other respects be parallel, so that the result will be that of a controlled experiment. To illustrate, alongside a court with enlarged powers of control over the course of the trial vested in the judge as, for example, the power of examining witnesses, juries, and commenting on the evidence, or alongside a court without a jury, or with a public defender, a court could operate with the ordinary procedure—jury trial and with the usual defense attorney. A number of experiments of this sort could be concocted which would give information when the results in the two courts were carefully compared and tabulated that would be reliable and invaluable to law enforcement generally and be of especial aid in the enforcement of the prohibition law.

Without information which the proposed research would reveal, all changes in the laws and in enforcement methods will be haphazard and merely guesswork. With such information the proper ground is laid for the creation of a desire for law enforcement and a basis established for engineering and enforcement of the law and of adapting the law and enforcement methods more adequately to the actual situation.

Education

The Federal Government should publish these findings in Government bulletins similar to those now issued by the Government in other fields, and this information should be widely disseminated from teachers' journals, popular periodical magazines, the daily press, the movies, the radio, and lectures. The greatest care should be exercised to secure accuracy in all these representations made to the public. It is especially desirable that this information should be available to educational institutions, scholars, and research organizations in every part of the country and disseminated among public men and the leisure class, which class seems so largely responsible for the sentiment against the prohibition act.

Enforcement

While this research is going on and this information is being disseminated greater effort should be made to enforce the prohibition law, particularly with respect to its importation, diversion, manufacture, and distribution.

1. The Federal Government should increase very extensively its forces devoted to the enforcement of the law, both in the police and judicial departments.

2. Greater care should be exercised in the selection of the enforcement officers. It would seem desirable not to select persons merely on the basis that they want the job and can pass the civil-service examination, as is now required, but the Government should go out and get men who are absolutely honest, able, and zealous for the enforcement of the law, although they have to pay larger salaries for such men.

3. These men should be subject to the civil-service examination, and after they have been once selected they should be brought together and given careful and special training for their work of enforcing the law.

4. In States like Montana and New York, where the States have no enforcement act, the Federal Government should increase its force far beyond that which it now has and should pay particular emphasis to enforcement of the law with respect to importation, diversion, manufacture, and distribution, and use every other method which it has found feasible and effective in its experience during the last 10 years.

5. Without waiting for the results of the research outlined above, several methods for avoiding delay in the handling of cases in courts could be adopted. Criminal matters should be given preference in the trial of cases and hearings and appeals should be advanced to the earliest possible moment.

6. It is obvious from the experience of the past 10 years that the Federal Government can not possibly administer criminal laws which affect so great a number of people all over the United States without the earnest and honest cooperation of the enforcement officers of the States. We, therefore, suggest the following machinery of cooperation.

(a) Congress should give concurrent jurisdiction to State courts and authorities to administer the Federal criminal law pertaining to prohibition. It now excludes such jurisdiction. The States, on the other hand, after Congress signifies its willingness to permit such concurrent jurisdiction, should make the same mandatory. The best technical thought is unanimous that there is no "inherent impossibility" involved in establishing such concurrent jurisdiction.

(b) All States should then follow the example of Oregon in making it the duty of local authorities to issue search warrants in liquor cases and warrants for arrest of persons accused to Federal enforcement officers. (Session Laws, 1923, ch. 180.)

(c) The Federal Government should, if the States are endowed with power to enforce Federal laws, render financial assistance to the State in enforcing the Federal (and State) prohibition laws. This might be done by the Federal Government's paying two-thirds of the salary of an assistant State prosecutor in such counties as should provide the balance of the official's salary. This officer would be a State and not a Federal authority. He would be concerned exclusively with prosecuting violators of the prohibition laws, both State and national, for under such a system the States would be charged with the enforcement of the law of the land in the same measure as the Federal Government.

PLAN OF THOMAS H. NOONAN, SUPREME COURT JUSTICE, BUFFALO, N. Y.

In the competition for the prize of $25,000 offered by Mr. C. W. Durant for the best and most practical plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective I submit the following:

By this amendment "the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, is hereby prohibtied." The second section provides that "the Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

To make this amendment effective Congress passed the national prohibition act (Volstead law), and both the amendment and the enforcement act became effective January 16, 1920. The first section of the amendment is operative throughout the entire territorial limits of the United States, binds all legislative bodies, courts, public officers, and individuals within those limits, and of its own force invalidates every legislative act—whether by Congress, by a State legislature, or by a Territorial assembly—which authorizes or sanctions what the section prohibits. (National Prohibition Cases, 254 U. S. 350.) By this amendment Congress acquired the same police powers to stamp out the manufacture, sale, and transportation of liquor in both interstate and intrastate commerce that the States had before the amendment. (U. S. v. Cohen, 268 Fed. 420, 425.) In other words, by the amendment Congress acquired a police power to enforce prohibition by all reasonable laws and regulations which only the States had before the amendment. (Schnitzler v. Yellowley, 290 Fed. 855.) Where this amendment conflicts with an older provision of the Constitution the older must yield. So that the eighteenth amendment, in part, supersedes the fifth amendment. (Corneli v. Moore, 267 Fed. 456.)

Primarily, two things are necessary for the proper enforcement of any law. First, the law must be so clearly drawn that it can be effectively applied to suppress the crime; and second, it must be enforced by honest and capable officials.

By the clear language of the second section of the eighteenth amendment Congress and the individual State have the same power to make the eighteenth amendment effective, and it is just as much the duty of the one as the other to enact the necessary legislation to make the amendment effective.

Without doubt the most effective means of law enforcement lies within the State itself, because it is already organized to enforce all laws. There exists in every county in every State the machinery for such enforcement, and most localities there are already sufficient police officers to properly secure the necessary evidence for successful prosecution. Furthermore, the law can be enforced in the county where the crime is committed without compelling witnesses and the prosecuting officials to travel great distances, and it enables the public opinion of the county to impress itself upon the enforcement officials; and the State law can prevent double jeopardy by providing that there shall be no State prosecution after a prosecution under the national prohibition act.

To get satisfactory results in the enforcement of any law there must be quick prosecution and sure punishment. The dissatisfaction that has arisen in some parts of the country over the apparent failure of the national prohibition act to produce results is due not to any defects in the statute, which was carefully drawn and is adequate for its purpose, but to the glaring lack of proper machinery for its enforcement.

First. There are not enough Federal enforcement officers to gather the evidence and attend to the prosecution of the offenders arrested.

Second. There are nowhere nearly enough judicial officers to dispose of the business that even the present number of Federal agents are able to bring in.

Third. The United States district attorneys do not have the proper number of assistants to adequately enforce the law, and the salary provided for these assistants is not such as to attract young men of the right caliber.

Fourth. Antiquated methods of procedure are still relied upon. Methods of criminal procedure that were adequate for the days of the oxcart and blazed the trail are being relied upon in the age of the automobile and flying machine. Outgrown rules of evidence that are no longer followed in the States are in effect in the United States courts, and enforcement officers and prosecuting attorneys are forced to travel long distances from the place of the crime to reach a tribunal that can properly dispose of their cases. Other defects could be mentioned, but these are the most important ones.

The remedy is obvious.

First. Provide a sufficient number of enforcement officers to properly cover the territory, especially in States that have large cities, and in those States that have no enforcement act of their own.

Second. Provide a sufficient number of tribunals for the trial of cases so they can be speedily tried and disposed of. This can be done by providing enough judges to hold courts not only in the larger centers of population but in the rural counties, and the United States commissioners might be empowered to try and dispose of all first offenders at the option of the United States district attorney. One or more could be appointed in every county and thus be within easy reach of the enforcement of the officers.

Third. A sufficient number of assistants should be given each United States district attorney to enable him to prosecute effectively the cases arising in his district, and the salary of such assistants should be such as to attract able and ambitious young lawyers.

Fourth, use all competent evidence, no matter how obtained. This is the long-standing rule in New York (Peo. v. Chiagles, 207 N. Y. 193, 198) and also in most of the other States, and was once the doctrine in the United States courts (Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585). As far as possible, make all acts of the defendant prima facie evidence of guilt. Make the enforcement procedure as simple as possible. Grant no bail to second offenders when the previous offense is undisposed of through no fault of the prosecuting attorney. Interpret the Constitution so as to aid in the prosecution of all offenders. It was never intended as a shield behind which evildoers could find protection; in brief, simplify and strengthen procedure for enforcement.

In judging the efficiency of the efforts to enforce the eighteenth amendment, we should bear in mind that there are very many violations of all criminal statutes that remain undetected and unpunished. So perfection can not be had in the prosecution of prohibition cases.

Remember, also, that those who violate certain United States statutes, such as the Dyer Act relating to stolen automobiles, the Cormack Act relating to stealing from interstate freight trains, and the Harrison Act to control the sale of narcotics, can also be prosecuted under State laws and are thus subject to double jeopardy.

To sum it all up: The eighteenth amendment can be made as effective as any other law, when all the States and Congress provide suitable laws and procedure and honest and competent officials to enforce the same.

Pledge All Executives for Observance and Enforcement

By C. O. Sherrill, city manager, Cincinnati, Ohio

THE SITUATION

The eighteenth amendment became effective on January 16, 1920. It provides as follows: "The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited. The Congress and the several States shall have the concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

The national prohibition act (the Volstead Act), passed October 28, 1919, became effective on January 16, 1920. This act defines "liquor" as "alcohol, brandy, whisky, rum, gin, beer, ale, porter, and wine, or other beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol or more." All persons are by this act forbidden to "manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish, or possess any intoxicating liquor" except as authorized by the act itself. It is made unlawful to ship liquor without notifying the carrier; or for the carrier to accept same for shipment unless certain requirements named in the act are carried out. Nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices may be manufactured for use exclusively in the home. The law also permits denatured alcohol and medicines not fit for beverages purposes using alcohol as a solvent. Since the passage of the Volstead Act all the States, except five—New York, Maryland, New Mexico, Nevada, and Montana—have passed enforcement acts under the concurrent authority of the eighteenth amendment.

The amendment has been operative for almost nine years and notwithstanding the open or veiled opposition to prohibition by a large part of the press and many leaders of public thought, there has been a considerable measure of success in decreasing the drinking of liquors, as indicated by the almost total absence of drunken persons on the streets of our cities, and by the tremendous decrease in withdrawals of liquor from bond since the amendment went into effect. While there is a great deal of surreptitious drinking, particularly by the young of the wealthier classes, it must be conceded even by the enemies of prohibition that on the whole, the drinking habit has been greatly reduced, with a resultant raising of the standard of living of the American laboring classes.

The evil resulting from inefficient enforcement is not so much the amount of drinking being done (except in several large cities where local authorities make no effort to enforce the law) as in the contempt for all the laws of the land by part of the press, by a small percentage of the public, particularly the young of the well-to-do classes, and by bootleggers. It is this contempt of law that must be replaced by enforcement and observance of the prohibition laws and the eighteenth amendment.

THE PLAN

The plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective in order to be practicable must use to the best advantage all existing facilities and suggest such feasible additions and modifications as necessary to carry out the full intent of the amendment.

The plan must include a program centering in the President of the United States (a) of enforcement and (b) of observance.

ENFORCEMENT

This must be a coordination of (a) national and (b) State (including county and municipal) enforcement agencies and methods.

NATIONAL ENFORCEMENT

This must operate under the direct control of the President, using all resources of the Government necessary to make it completely effective. The principal existing agencies are (a) the Bureau of Prohibition Enforcement, Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey; United States Secret Service; the Public Health Service (quarantine); and (b) in the Attorney General's Office, the prohibition enforcement branch directing and coordinating the activities of all the United States district attorneys relating to the enforcement of prohibition throughout the United States, so as to present the enforcement cases in harmony with policies of the President.

The major policies of enforcement should be enunciated by the President himself to give the greatest prestige and backing before the courts and before the country, and to make it definitely known that the Government is determined fully to enforce the eighteenth amendment and the laws passed pursuant thereto.

The President should make full use of the Diplomatic and Consular Services in extending agreements with foreign powers in order more effectively to prevent all smuggling of liquor into the United States over any of its borders. He should also use the resources of the Immigration Service and the Customs Service to aid the Consular Service in detecting all the sources and stopping shipments made from foreign countries with or without the sanction of their respective governments into the United States.

The President should, by negotiation with foreign powers, if possible, and if not by legislative authority, stop the importation of liquors into the United States for use at diplomatic missions and consulates. This is a vitally necessary step not only to stop a serious leak in the preventive measures against smuggling, but absolutely essential to prevent the serving of liquors by diplomatic officials which now sets such a demoralizing example to the American social world.

It is assumed that the President will use the existing organizations and facilities to the fullest extent, and that in view of the results of the recent election he will be given by Congress, on request, such additional means and facilities as he may require effectively to carry out the Government's enforcement program, and to carry out such local, State, and county enforcement as is not in any case being properly handled by these respective authorities.

SCOPE

The national program of prohibition enforcement will be aimed at—

(1) The complete stoppage of smuggling liquors into the United States and its possessions, using all the necessary means and methods and services as outlined above. This work will include a more effective protection of our coasts and will be carried into foreign countries to the source of shipments into the United States.

(2) The second division of the national enforcement program will be devoted to the stoppage of all interstate shipment or carriage of liquors by rail, vehicle, aircraft, water craft, or individuals through the requirement of manifests of all goods transported between the States, by adequate inspection and supervision of all such shipments, and by adequate criminal and civil penalties for violations.

(3) The third division of the national enforcement program will be devoted to the stoppage of intrastate shipments of liquor between cities and towns by train, vehicle, aircraft, or other carriers, where such activity is not effectively controlled by the respective States. The penalties for the violation of the laws relating to smuggling, to interstate shipments, and to intrastate shipments of liquor should include confiscation of equipment used in such traffic and heavy fines and imprisonment of those guilty of such illegal transportation.

(4) The next division of the national enforcement program will be devoted to the prevention of the sale of liquors and the furnishing of "set-ups" in restaurants, hotels, inns, road houses, clubs, and homes, or the carrying of liquors into public places on penalty of having them padlocked, through actions of the United States courts, to enjoin and abate such as nuisances. These actions to be in addition to criminal trials of all offenders against the laws.

(5) The next division of the national enforcement program will be devoted to the more effective control and supervision of the source of supply of liquors and surveillance of permits and permittees, and of all liquors released from bond from the time they leave the Government warehouse or Government licensed manufactory until they are distributed to the ultimate consumer. The failure to keep a record of liquor issued on permit until it reaches the final consumer has been a great cause of abuse. This can be prevented by a complete chain of receipts similar to those used by the Post Office Department for registered letters. The use of doctors' prescriptions has been greatly abused. These should be carefully supervised from doctor to patient.

(6) The next division of the national enforcement program will be directed to a more perfect control and greater restrictions on the use of alcohol in medicinal preparations, under the Volstead Act forbidding these "unless unfit for beverages," and limiting them rigidly to the "minimum required for solution and preservation of the medicinal elements in articles." There are now on the market many medicinal articles supposedly unfit for use as beverages but which have not been rendered so unpalatable or nauseating as to prevent them from being largely used as beverages. These should be rendered practically impossible to drink in such quantity as to be intoxicating, and their sale should be so controlled as to assure that they will not be so used. This division should do extensive research work to discover more perfect methods of making solvents without the necessity of using intoxicating liquors or alcoholic compounds, and to discover more effective methods of making medicinal preparations unfitted and unpalatable for beverage purposes.

(7) The next division of the national enforcement program will be directed to the amendment of the Volstead Act, to prevent the nullification of the eighteenth amendment now caused by the act in allowing "nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices in the home." This provision of the Volstead Act, put in at the demand of the apple and grape growers, allows extensive evasion of the plain intent of the eighteenth amendment. This authority causes abuses by serving as a cloak for traffic in liquor, in and from private homes, and also arouses hostility at the invasion of the home by officials endeavoring to prevent the traffic in liquors which are legally possessed under the act.

The abuse of this right to make cider and fruit juices is so flagrant that manufacturers of these articles are now putting on a widespread campaign of advertising, saying that they sell and deliver the nonalcoholic beverages allowed by the law which, under a simple treatment, will, in a short time, become "fine intoxicating wine and cider."

STATE, MUNICIPAL, AND COUNTY ENFORCEMENT

This branch of the enforcement program should handle all local violations of State, local, and national laws, and conspiracies to violate them, through the manufacture, sale, possession, and transportation of liquors by small groups and individuals. With effective enforcement of the national laws designed to carry out the intent of the eighteenth amendment and with the control of the large organized violations by the Government as outlined above, the State and local enforcement can readily be accomplished, since the local violations will be by the small groups and individuals.

The effective enforcement of State and local laws requires that all executives, beginning with the governor and extending through county and municipal executives, sheriffs, police, judges, particularly municipal judges, shall be pledged in advance of appointment or election to the program of enforcement. As in the national program of enforcement, the President is the center and heart of the plan; so in State and local enforcement, the governor is the head and controlling element. He should be pledged faithfully to enforce the prohibition laws and to see that they are enforced by all executives and courts in his State This power is now in the hands of the governors and only requires the impetus that can be given by the President to secure its general application. The national program is absolutely in the hands of the President through his power of appointment and removal of executive officials and his power of appointing judges pledged to enforcement and observance. Political patronage should have no hand in the appointments of executive officials, judges, or employees engaged in prohibition enforcement in National, State, or local enforcement. Merit and, above all, integrity, should be the sole determining factors.

OBSERVANCE

In this branch of the effort to secure compliance with the eighteenth amendment there has been a deplorable lack of initiative and leadership; in fact, there has been practically no effort made by those in authority within or without the Government to build up a willingness and a desire to observe the amendment on the part of the individual citizen. No appeal to the public has ever been made by the President for all good citizens to join in observing this law.

Every effort put forth has been limited to enforcement that is compulsion. A tremendous mistake has been made in this failure of leadership in not securing the backing of the public at large and the press to make of this experiment in social betterment a complete success. So little attention has been paid to observance by high officials, by leaders of civic business thought in each community, and by the press that it is the exception rather than the rule for individuals to refuse to drink or to serve liquors. Practically no effort has been made by the press to influence public opinion in the vitally important matter of personal observance; in fact, the majority of editors have expressed an open contempt for the enforcement and even more for the observance of the law on this subject. The recognized leaders of the civic and business world, and high Government officials, who have everything to gain by strict enforcement and observance on account of the destructive effect of their failure on the Nation's stability, have done nothing toward observance, but, on the contrary, in most cases, have in private at least flagrantly violated the intent of the law. In this branch, as in enforcement, the leadership must be taken by the President in molding public opinion in favor not only of enforcement but also, and more especially, of observance—that is, personal compliance with the spirit and intent of the law and the eighteenth amendment by refusing to serve or drink intoxicating liquors at any time and by exerting strong personal influence to build up a spirit of law observance. In view of the recent mandate of the people of the United States given in no uncertain terms, that they are determined to have the eighteenth amendment observed, the President is more than ever before called upon to take the aggressive leadership in this vitally important matter.

METHOD OF SECURING OBSERVANCE

To set in operation this movement for nation-wide observance, the President should call together a group of the leaders of the country in business, political, and civic life and initiate through this group a national organization, with branches in every State, pledged to observance and to the securing of observance by the mass of decent citizens of every community, with the same enthusiasm employed by the Anti-Saloon League in supporting enforcement. The governors of each State should be the natural leaders of this organization in their respective States.

Under inspiring leadership for observance and enforcement, the eighteenth amendment can be made complete effective; and the present undermining of the foundations of our American institutions can and will be replaced by an aggressive rebuilding of the damaged bulwarks of our national respect for law and order.

EDUCATE PARTY LEADERS

By Henry O. Evans, Pittsburgh

Abraham Lincoln once said, "No law is stronger than the public sentiment where it is to be enforced." Our entire history since Colonial days is abundant proof of the fundamental correctness of this axiom. Any plan, therefore, to make effective the eighteenth amendment rests upon the sanction of public sentiment and opinion with respect to the amendment.

The prime necessity of sound planning in every aspect of life and as to any problem is, always, accurate knowledge and impartial marshaling of all the facts governing the case. We have had too much opinion and too little fact-finding on both sides of this very controversial question. The reliable evidence—the dry laws of 33 States before the approval of the amendment; the ratification of the amendment by all but two States; the votes upon such State referendums as have been taken; the progressive increases in dry majorities in both Houses of Congress; the results in the recent election of President and Vice President, Members of the Congress, and State offices—all goes to show the existence of considerably more than a majority of our voters in favor of the amendment.

In spite, however, of this weight of the evidence, it is generally said and by many believed that public sentiment is not now favorable to the amendment. Since, as Lincoln also said, "A universal feeling, whether well or ill founded, can not be safely disregarded," positive and unequivocal demonstration of the present existence of public sentiment in the minds and actions of more than a majority of our voters in favor of the amendment is the first step in any practical plan for its effective enforcement. Our first proposal is, therefore, the holding of referendum votes in each of the States, by congressional districts, with ballots sufficiently detailed in the questions submitted to register every shade of public opinion. It goes without saying that the question must be fairly framed, without leaning toward either side, so as not only to answer the doubt already raised as to the conclusiveness of some of the referendums heretofore held but also to elicit the fullest possible participation by the voters.

But more is needed than the more demonstration of the existence of the favorable majority which the evidence before referred to leads us to believe already exists. Those who were active in support of the passage either of State dry laws or of the amendment itself must be brought to realize that their active cooperation is just as necessary now as before. The danger which lies in systematic, widespread, law-breaking must be enforced upon those who, while themselves total abstainers, have been passive and indifferent to the actions of others. No law which alters so radically as this the habit of years is self-enforcing, and its friends must be as positively for it as its opponents are against it.

The practices of those who are still users of intoxicating liquors must be changed to personal observance of the law in spirit and letter. Some of these have been rationalizing their breach of the law by claiming that the amendment does not have that consent of the governed which is necessary in practice under our theory of law. The proof we have before outlined will demolish this defense.

In times past total abstinence was not essential, it was enough if the individual was temperate; but the passage of the amendment has converted failure by any citizen to practice total abstinence into his personal attack upon the foundations of good government. Since the majority of our citizens are, as they must be at heart, law abiding, it follows that they can be awakened to the danger which lies in their failure to observe the law if the proper methods are used. Public sentiment can best and most effectively be aroused by persuasion to general willing cooperation in personal observance of the law as a rule of individual conduct. During and since the great war we have had striking proof of the wisdom and efficacy of persuasion as contrasted with force.

The movement must embrace, to be effective, every sort and condition of our people so that the common reproach that those who have the greatest incentives to law observance are the greatest offenders may be removed. The question must be presented from every angle; on moral grounds, from the standpoint of social and economic welfare, the danger to our form of government. The facts, developed and set forth by agencies so impartial and inclusive as to be divorced, in the public mind, from any suspicion of desire or necessity to bolster up a theory, must be put into the hands of everyone.

The older generation has had personal experience of the gross abuses of free sale of intoxicating liquors and of the failure of regulation. The present and coming generation are less likely to admit the danger of that which they have not seen and experienced and their education is especially necessary both as to the facts of former times and by comparison with present conditions.

The plan, as so far outlined, is directed toward demonstration and mobilization of willing, voluntary, cooperation acting positively for personal, individual support and observance of the law. The methods suggested are those of persuasion and education, based upon fact-finding, addressed to the vast majority who, when the conscience is aroused, desire to do the right. But there remain outside of these two great classes of active opponents, those who prefer the gratification of selfish appetite to the general will and good and those who are willing to pander to these selfish instincts for one or another reason. As to both of these classes force is the only practical method.

As to the first of these classes, the present practice is weak in that it treats the buyer as less guilty than the seller. This is illogical because, as a rule, the majority of buyers, by education, background, and standing in the community, know the right, and because of that fact should be charged with a greater responsibility and treated with greater severity than now obtains. A change, both in legislation and practice, which would make the buyer equally guilty and vulnerable with the seller would automatically bring about elimination of most of the law breaking. After the lapse of eight years, in but few cases is liquor lawfully in the hands of the individual citizen. The burden of showing that his possession is lawful should be cast upon him. Changes in the law and practice on these two points would eliminate one of the greatest hindrances to enforcement of the amendment.

Perhaps the greatest hindrance to enforcement is the alliance widely existing between the local police officials and the bootlegger. It is a common theory of party politics that the party "machine" can not be maintained except by the expenditure of large amounts of money. It is, unfortunately, too common for those in high command of party politics to wink at payment by the bootlegger to those who are doing the routine work of the "machine." No more valuable and effective work can be done by a mobilized and aroused public sentiment than the education of party leaders who believe in or yield to such false premises. They must be convinced that such a price paid for party success is too great and too damaging both to the party and to the general good. Again, education and persuasion are the indicated methods. If education and persuasion, backed by public sentiment, do not succeed in ending this alliance, public sentiment for expulsion from power of those who persist in such a ruinous policy must, finally, be the plan.

With respect to those who make a business of breaking the law for profit, no plan but rigid, unrelenting prosecution is of any use. The demonstration of an active, positive, virile public opinion backing enforcement, as already outlined, will be of great help to those charged with the duty. Since, as Benjamin Franklin said in another connection, "A poor system of government with good administration is preferable to a better system with weaker administration," coordination of all the instrumentalities and agencies dealing with the enforcement of the amendment under the Department of Justice is proposed. Many reasons can be urged for this change. As the department ultimately charged with prosecution, concentration of responsibility is in line with all modern practice. In addition, our whole experience has trained us to yield to law officers. Not the least of these reasons is the fact that lawyers are trained to give no thought to arguments concerning the wisdom, expediency, or merit, in themselves, of the laws which they are called upon to administer, and, therefore, we should have less of a temporizing questioning policy in administration than has been sometimes shown. We should have, also, the advantage of the incentive arising from professional pride in work well done.

Along with this coordination of agencies should go acceleration of the trial of cases. Arousing public opinion favorable to the amendment would lead in most States to renewed activity among the State and municipal officers for fulfilling their concurrent responsibility and greater use of State courts so that increase in the Federal judiciary would, to that extent, not be required. But if required, additional judges and ample funds for all additional necessary, competent personnel should be quickly granted. We have put our hands to the plough and the experience of England with speedy trials leaves no ground for argument as to our necessity for improvement in this regard.

Concretely, it is proposed that the plans herein outlined shall be carried out by and through a national society or organization in support of the amendment, the members to be enrolled from every element of our diversified population without distinction as to race, color, religion, or station in the community. The platform or purpose of this organization should be broad enough to enlist the support of all who favor law observance for any and all reasons, whether moral, social, economic, or governmental. Membership should involve a personal obligation, not only to a strict individual observance of the amendment, but, also, militant support of all dignified methods evolved by the officers of the organization for aiding law enforcement.

As outlined, the primary method should be education and persuasion in all their many forms, since public opinion and sentiment can only be led and not driven—with force, however, as a last resort. Having enlisted the support of those who now contend that the amendment was rushed through without due consideration; of those who were always convinced of its wisdom but indifferent in its support; of those selfishly preferring appetite to observance but now awakened to the damage caused by law breaking, mobilized public sentiment, bringing about or forcing a divorce of politics from bootlegging, will, behind more efficient legal methods and organization, result in making effective that "noble experiment," the eighteenth amendment.

PLAN BY WILLIAM H. SAWTELLE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, TUCSON, ARIZ.

As is well known, the national prohibition act was enacted in pursuance of the eighteenth amendment. Under the provisions of that act the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice are charged with the duty of enforcing the same. It has been suggested that the Treasury Department be relieved of all responsibility for its enforcement and that the entire responsibility be placed upon the Department of Justice. Those who make this suggestion overlook the fact that the act in many respects is a revenue measure, and that that feature of the act, at least, properly belongs under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department.

Section 2 of the national prohibition act provides: "The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors, shall investigate and report violations of this act to the United States attorney for the district in which committed, who is hereby charged with the duty of prosecuting the offenders, subject to the directions of the Attorney General."

The best and most practicable plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective would be for all State and municipal officials to cooperate whole-heartedly with the Federal Government in the enforcement of the national prohibition law. The time will come when the law-abiding citizens of the various States will demand of its officials such cooperation. Until such time much can be done to make the amendment effective.

To that end I recommend:

First. That only such State and municipal officials who are concerned with the enforcement of the criminal laws be selected as are whole-heartedly in sympathy with the spirit of the eighteenth amendment.

Second. That the first paragraph of the national prohibition act be amended so as to read as follows: "Any person who manufactures or sells liquor in violation of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $2,000 and be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than five years."

The penalty now prescribed for the first offense of sale and manufacture of liquor is, in many cases, wholly inadequate. The penalty for a second or subsequent offense is ample.

Third. That the second paragraph of said section be amended so as to read as follows: "Any person violating the provisions of any permit, or who makes any false record, report, or affidavit required by this title, or violates any of the provisions of this title, for which offense a special penalty is not prescribed, shall be fined for the first offense not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding one year or both; for a second or subsequent offense not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than five years, or both."

The punishment now prescribed for the first and second offenses of transportation and importation is also inadequate. One may unlawfully import, possess, and transport, as often occurs, truck loads of liquors. For the first offense the maximum penalty is a fine; for the second offense the maximum penalty is a fine or imprisonment for not more than 90 days. Such light penalties do not serve as a deterrent. They are by the lawless element considered as a license to continue in the liquor business. Experience has demonstrated that, if this law is to be enforced, more severe punishment must be meted out to the offenders thereof.

Fourth. That the Attorney General appoint in each judicial district at least two additional assistants to the district attorney, whose sole business shall be to consult with and advise the agents of the Treasury Department and the United States commissioners as to their respective duties, and to prosecute all violations of the national prohibition law. Such special assistants should be able and experienced lawyers and residents of the district for which they are appointed. They should be given absolute control of all such prosecutions, subject only to the Attorney General. The agents should be required to consult such special assistants before obtaining a search warrant, thus guarding against unlawful searches and seizures, which have tended to bring the law into disrepute.

Only those who really believe in the eighteenth amendment should be employed for the purposes mentioned. The fact that they believe in the enforcement of all laws should not suffice. We have too many prosecutors of the latter type. It is impossible for the district attorney himself to prosecute all violations committed and triable within his district, and of necessity he must rely upon his assistants, many of whom are young, inexperienced lawyers who accept the office temporarily merely for the opportunities afforded them of acquiring experience at the bar. With rare exceptions, they are wholly unprepared to cope with experienced lawyers representing the accused, and the result is what might be expected. These inexperienced, poorly paid young men are not capable of properly representing the Government. They do not know when they have a strong case or how to present it in court. It is my opinion, in trying prohibition cases in my own and other districts in the ninth judicial circuit, this failure to have the Government represented by experienced prosecutors, together with the failure of the State and municipal authorities to cooperate with the Federal Government, is the outstanding cause of the failure of the national prohibition act and the eighteenth amendment. With experienced counsel in charge of the prosecution, a greater number of convictions would be secured, and the law-abiding element would learn to respect, and the lawless element to obey, this law.

Competent prosecutors would, of course, command a salary larger than that paid the regular assistants, but the results would more than justify the extra expenditure. Doubtless Congress would willingly make the necessary appropriation to enable the Attorney General to carry out this plan.

Both the amendment and the prohibition act are fundamentally sound. The trouble is they have not been given a fair trial.

Fifth. That while these direct efforts are being made to enforce the eighteenth amendment, a nation-wide campaign, carefully planned and directed, be carried on through the newspapers, periodicals, schools, pulpits, and homes to build up a sentiment for obedience to and respect for the laws of our country. Or, as the immortal Lincoln has expressed it: "Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpits, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice and, in short, let it become the political religion of the Nation, and let the old and young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay, of all the sexes and tongues and colors and conditions sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars."

FOSTER THE WILL TO ENFORCE

By Orville S. Poland, Counsel New York Anti-Saloon League

The enforcement of prohibition can never be a matter of mere mechanics. It is essentially one of spirit. The morale which is the basis of the efficient, successful handling of any other administrative problem must underlie the enforcement of prohibition. This spiritual impetus will furnish the dynamics and the mechanics will follow as a matter of course. Law is never self-operative. It functions only when translated into human activity. This translation can come only as an expression of human will represented in the courage, devotion, and resourcefulness of those charged with the duty of enforcement, and the loyalty and good citizenship of the citizens to whom the law applies.

The necessity of statutory and regulatory machinery as tools in attaining the principal end of a legislative and administrative policy is undeniable. But, assuming fairly adequate machinery, the prime essential is one of spirit. It might be argued, for example, that, inasmuch as the diversion of denatured alcohol is the chief sources of illicit liquor, all denaturants should be added at the time of distillation instead of facilitating diversion by permitting the transportation of alcohol to a number of denaturing plants with attendant increased difficulty of supervision. The answer is that this is a matter of administrative detail.

This matter of morale is bilateral. It has two phases—the one active, the other passive; the one represented by the officers of the law, the Government; the other by the great mass of our citizenry, the people. These phases in many cases overlap and perhaps can never be completely separated. Their influence is nearly always to some degree reciprocal. When officers fail to enforce the law, it is because they have not the support of public opinion. This support is denied because of a belief that the officers are inefficient or venal. With a due recognition of these reciprocal influences it is possible and desirable to consider the two phases separately in the confidence that an improvement in either phase of the problem produces a corresponding improvement in the other.

The second passive phase relates to the acceptance of the law and is outside the scope of this paper. But before considering the first phase mention should be made of the relation of the responsibility of the Federal Government and the States. The eighteenth amendment did not make the Federal Government solely responsible for enforcement. The amendment reserves enforcing power to the States. Various contentions have been advanced as to whether the States have any obligation—legal or moral—to enforce prohibition. For the purpose of this discussion these distinctions are largely academic. We must not fall into the error of believing prohibition a purely Federal matter. The States did not vacate their power to act in the premises when they delegated power to Congress to pass enforcing legislation. They reserved full power to act, limited only by the provisions of the fifth article. No discussion of this subject which treats of Federal functions to the exclusion or neglect of the power of the States can properly cover the ground. It is impossible here always to differentiate but this discussion is intended to be flexible enough to apply indifferently to Federal and State officials.

Can any one doubt the immediate salutary effect on enforcement if the Executive chiefs—President, governors, mayors—entertained the same attitude of determination toward enforcement that they might as executives in an industrial organization toward their peculiar industrial problems? Imagine the electric effect if the President should tell the Secretary of the Treasury that his tenure depended on his ability to show results; if the mayor should tell the police commissioner that the continued existence of speakeasies would mean a new commissioner. Such an attitude would be contrary to political traditions and it would probably be necessary to establish the sincerity of the executives by rather drastic and perhaps somewhat sensational means. If a few officials were publicly humiliated by removal for derelictions openly announced and condemned, few of their successors would be guilty of a similar neglect of duty. The inevitable result would be that the executives would require efficiency and honesty from those under them equal to that exacted from them. Concretely, a police commissioner or similar executive would call in those immediately under him and say, "I want you to stop liquor violations and I'll support you. But if my plain-clothes men find a speakeasy or a still in your precinct you will have to have some convincing excuse. If the violation continues no excuse goes but you do." The executive would have to prove his sincerity and determination, but with executive pressure manifested violations would practically cease.

Enforcement officers and policemen are extraordinarily resourceful when it becomes desirable or profitable, and that desirability is generally determined by the attitude of their superiors. Their resourcefulness is such that they solve many problems without making any arrests and without violence. (Disavowal is made of any advocacy of illegal, extralegal, or oppressive methods.) A small city official recently boasted that a gypsy caravan had not stayed an hour in his city. The gypsies had committed no crime; the officer took pride in the fact that he did not let them stay long enough for that. Yet the same man, in the same conversation, petulantly plead that he could do nothing to rid the community of the four speakeasies that had been operating there for three years. The absurdity of it! No officer is in a quandary to know what to do if a hold-up man idles on the street corner about the time a pay roll is due. No officer is perplexed to know what to do about a speakeasy or bootlegger on his beat when he knows his superiors will uphold him. And every officer knows of the existence of every situs of law violation in his immediate jurisdiction. It is idle to argue that minor officers protect law violators for graft. No major or general protection is possible without the collusive acquiescence of superior officers.

Where there is the official will the way treads on its heels. A few years ago the police were protecting 14 houses of ill-fame on one street in a large city. The captain, the sergeant, the officer, each got a share of the graft. There came a disagreement and the order was issued to close the houses. The officer began faithfully to patrol that part of his beat. Intoxicated persons were taken to the station house, vagrants were admonished, loiterers were told to move on. Not a raid nor arrest was made in any of the houses but within 30 days every one was closed. There were no patrons.

But, someone says, this talk about the will to enforce is just an ethereal abstraction. The prohibition law is flagrantly violated. We have the officials, but how can the essential but elusive actuating impulse be attained? There should be some plan to enforce the law. Precisely. A plan that has to do chiefly with matters immaterial and psychological can hardly be submitted with blue prints and working specifications, but it can have some very definite working details.

In the first place, the plan relates to enforcement, not to defeasance. We are not concerned, in this connection, with whether the law is popular or just. We have before us an actual condition which does not here admit of theorizing on substantive matters of law. Ours is the adjective problem of attaining the principle end of the eighteenth amendment.

If this adjective problem may be largely solved by the will to enforce, how, then, is that will to be obtained? Must it be evolved from within or may it be the result of objective stimuli? That the latter is true may be answered with a decided affirmative. Official inanition, laziness, complacence, or even corruption can never long withstand the continued focus of informed public attention. No outlaw business can stand the light. Bootlegging is an outlaw business, and it is an established fact of mass psychology that the great inarticulate majority of any community becomes vocal whenever informed public opinion is directed toward such an object. It is also a fact that those on the fence take a position with the majority and some even climb over from the other side. Call it a phenomenon of the mob mind or ascribe it to the innate righteous feelings of the American citizenry, but the fact remains that this irresistible force operates upon officials to produce the will to enforce.

Whenever an exposé of bootlegging, or gambling, or prostitution is made, the lid goes on and stays on just so long as the agitation keeps up. There is thus raised the question of how to secure a sustained exercise of the will to enforce. This can be secured by an exemplification of the fact that the focus of public attention is not discontinuous and disjunctive but continuous and unbroken. Complacent officials consider reform movements as—like angel visits—"few and far between." They must be made to cry with Macbeth: "What! will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?"

This demands a commission of experts to gather information and make it available to the public. Such a commission could never represent the political minority because partisan considerations must always be excluded. It would have to have a personnel removed from the possibility of any just or fair adverse criticism. These experts might be named, for example, by the American Political Science Association and financed either by subscription or as some of the great foundations. The commission principle is flexible enough to be adaptable to the needs of any political unit as the occasion may arise. This commission must never be maneuvered into a position of assuming the rôle of prosecutor. To take this position is to accept failure in advance and to foredoom the project to the scorn of corrupt or unwilling officials and the ultimate disapproval of the general citizenry. Such an agency ought never to be unfriendly to honest and willing officials. While to the unworthy official the focus of public attention might seem a searchlight upon his embarrassment and the findings a philippic, to the willing and conscientious official they would be a beacon light and an encomium.

How would such an agency operate?

It would obtain exact information about law violations, including names, dates, and places. It would be informed on all matters in which the public has a legitimate interest. That means everything which may serve as an index to the degree of law enforcement obtaining at a given place and time. The essence of this information should be sympathetically presented to the officials. If they are in earnest they will remedy the situation in so far as it needs remedy. If the officials fail to take cognizance of lawless conditions, the information should be given to the public in the same open way, although perhaps more dispassionately than the findings of a Senate investigating committee.

The commission collecting this material need be no obnoxious interloper. It need be offensive only to unworthy and dishonest officials. Its interest in the honest administration of the law should be as unimpeachable as that of an antituberculosis association.

This method of securing enforcement by giving the Executive will to enforce has never failed when it has been consistently applied. No recalcitrant official can withstand it. Thus there may be obtained that essential spirit which is manifest in the will to enforce.

Joint Action by Government and People

By Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary World League Against Alcohol, Westerville, Ohio

The foundations of the plan

Recognizing conditions: The purpose of the eighteenth amendment is directly to prohibit the traffic in, and indirectly to prohibit the use of, beverage alcohol. This plan proposed for making that amendment effective involves recognizing that constitutions do not enforce themselves; that laws live by action of officials; and that public opinion is the dynamic force back of government.

Facing the facts: This plan requires facing the fact that while American public sentiment has been shown to be emphatically favorable to the eighteenth amendment as a standard of conduct, nevertheless there is as yet no such degree of sanction for enforcement and observance; and that there is widespread and flagrant disregard of that amendment and the laws pursuant thereto.

Fundamentals: This plan, moreover, is constituted upon the assumption that free government can effectuate itself; that the perpetuation of democratic institutions requires observance of laws by the classes as well as by the masses; that the rights of the people of the Nation as a whole are paramount to those of a single individual, community, or State; that time is an essential factor in making effective prohibitions against great social evils, as evidenced by such cases as those of piracy, the slave trade, dueling, the public lottery, and narcotic drugs; that any effective plan must evolve from experience, and that its final test must be, not whether it is expedient but whether it is right.

This plan, therefore, naturally divides itself into two general subdivisions, namely: (1) The functioning of the Government, and (2) the functioning of the people.

I. The functioning of the government

Concurrent and coordinate action: The Government's part of the plan for making the prohibition amendment effective requires not only concurrent action of the States and Congress under the specific concurrent provision of the amendment but also coordinate action of the judicial, legislative, and executive departments of Government and subdepartments thereof.

While there is no limitation on the Federal Government to deal with all classes of violations, nevertheless experience and practical considerations indicate the wisdom of coordinate action whereby the local and State governments will deal with local violations, thus leaving the Federal Government to deal with sources of supply, interstate traffic, diversion, large sales operations, smuggling, and conspiracy cases.

The judiciary

One of the most vital essentials for the success of this plan is that all courts, through which enforcement registers, shall be kept independent and free of undue influence; shall assess penalties commensurate with the crime, within the limitations of the law; shall insure speedy and sure punishment for violations; and shall see that juries are chosen by such methods as will assist justice.

Nevertheless, the courts should be held strictly to account. There is no department of government where malfeasance or nonfeasance should be dealt with more promptly and definitely, for what happens in the courts will not only affect the eighteenth amendment but will go far toward demonstrating the degree of efficacy and integrity of the American court system.

The executive

Local, State, and Federal action: Under the plan proposed, adequate enforcement of the law involves coordinate action upon the part of Federal, State, and local executive officials, who stand immediately behind the courts.

There is divided responsibility in the States, where the maximum of police power is held. Not only the governor but the attorney general, the sheriffs, the mayors, and the prosecutors, are elected by the people. The only Federal enforcement official elected by the people is the President, who alone is specifically charged under the Constitution with the faithful execution of the laws, together with the preservation, protection, and defense of the Constitution.

Power of the President: By virtue of his appointive power, his relation to the judicial and executive departments of the Government, his influence with Congress, and his connection with foreign treaty making, the Chief Executive of the Nation becomes the most important single factor in the machinery of government for making the eighteenth amendment effective.

Presidential responsibility: The fact that the eighteenth amendment is more seriously challenged than other parts of the Constitution lays upon the President a greater responsibility with regard to it. The success of this plan, therefore, depends very largely upon him. Just as local, community, and State executive officials must be held responsible for local and State enforcement, so the President must be held peculiarly responsible for Federal enforcement.

The legislative department

Character of legislation: Under this plan the legislative requirements are not for a new system of enforcement but rather for ample appropriations, necessary adjustments, and clarifying and remedial provisions to carry out the intent of the present laws.

Specific changes necessary: Experience has demonstrated the need for the following legislative action:

Increase of the annual appropriation for the Federal Prohibition Unit to not less than $25,000,000.

The transfer of the Prohibition Unit to the Department of Justice.

A liaison officer to coordinate the subdepartments of all the general departments of the Government in such a way as the Coast Guard and customs have been correlated with the Prohibition Unit under the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Concentration of all existing warehouse liquor stocks and making the manufacture of all intoxicating liquors for legitimate use a definite and direct responsibility of the Government.

Increasing penalties for the violation of the prohibition laws to equal the penalties provided for similar classes of offenses under the postal laws and codes governing other offenses of the same degree.

Making the purchaser of intoxicating beverages liable under specific penalties as particeps criminis.

Providing for deportation of aliens who persistently violate the prohibition laws.

Providing a sufficient number of judges and ample Federal court machinery to insure prompt care of all cases.

Providing that the Government shall gather data and publish official statements on the various vital phases of beverage alcohol use, law violations, accidents, poison liquors, and various other related social and economic data such as are now collated and published on other important subjects.

Enlarging, extending, bringing down to date, and making imperative the observance of State laws providing for instruction on the alcohol question in the public schools.

II. THE FUNCTIONING OF THE PEOPLE

Where final authority rests: Under our form of government there is a power above the three departments outlined in the Constitution. That power is public opinion.

Public opinion is the final authority whose will legislatures translate into statutes, whose mandates public officials execute, whose judgment courts interpret and decree. Therefore this plan places the greatest emphasis on the obligation of the people.

Organized effort: Public opinion under this plan must function through such organized forces as the churches, social betterment agencies, welfare associations, temperance and reform societies, civic leagues, and citizenship organizations. Such organized forces, representing the people, must constantly make their impact upon educational, industrial, commercial, social, and political groups. The results of their efforts must be shown in the work of the public schools, the Sunday schools, labor organizations, business enterprises, social clubs, and other agencies. They must make their appeal to, and make proper use of the press, the pulpit, the public platform, the movie, and the radio.

Impacts upon government: Such forces may thus exercise a most wholesome and proper influence in the community, the State, and the Nation not only in the election of public officials but in securing proper remedial legislation and assisting law enforcement by the influence thus indirectly brought to bear upon legislative bodies; upon local, State, and Federal enforcement officials; upon State and Federal judiciary departments; and, what is more important than all else, upon the people themselves, as to their vital part in the operation of all the departments of government and by their own obedience to the laws which they have made. Thus only can morale be created.

Limitations and obligations: Organized forces representing the public in educational and promotion work in the interest of the eighteenth amendment must not assume functions which belong to the Government, must not attempt to dictate, but must constantly seek to present "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" as it relates to the principle involved in the eighteenth amendment and to its enforcement and observance.

New type of education: Even more vitally important, however, is the obligation upon such forces to inaugurate a new type of educative effort, with new data in harmony with the new age, new methods, and a new appeal, that will meet the most critical intellectual and ethical tests of this new day. That means such a campaign of education as has never before been approached in social reform. It means an effort to persuade the public to consider in this connection the new facts and implications of the rapidly increasing mechanization of industry, where the electric dynamo has substituted for human muscle and has thus transformed the human factor in industry into one, the requirements of which are keen eyes, quick wits, steady nerves, and clear brains.

It means emphasizing the steadily diminishing safety margin in modern transportation, where the fast express, the automobile, and the commercial airship are rapidly making intolerable the contact of beverage alcohol with the nerve centers of the individual, with all the far-reaching social and ethical implications involved therein.

It means placing major emphasis upon the obligation of leaders in industrial, commercial, social, and political realms who, by reason of their example, influence, and leadership, must of necessity carry the largest degree of responsibility.

It means primarily investigation, research, publicity, and other special educative processes with the resultant dissemination of the truth, not simply among adult groups but particularly and more imperatively among those in the public schools, the colleges, and the universities who as citizens and officials of to-morrow will determine the destiny of beverage alcohol and the principle of prohibition.

Such an educational program—with such methods, such limitations, such obligation, and such a purpose—is absolutely essential to an adequate realization of that condition which the eighteenth amendment was intended to promote.

III. THE OPERATION OF THE PLAN

This plan, therefore, will operate, first, in the dissemination of the truth in a tremendous nation-wide educational campaign emphasizing total abstinence for the individual and the elimination of beverage alcohol from social life.

Gradually, by that process and by the action of government which will help to promote that process, there will be created a body of sentiment in villages, counties, cities, and States which will be committed against beverage alcohol and to the vital principal of national prohibition. Slowly but surely that sentiment will be crystallized into public opinion, which in turn will be translated into definite action. That public opinion, guided by the organized forces of the churches, social-welfare agencies, civic organizations, and citizenship groups, will increasingly express itself through intelligent discrimination at the polls, in the election of public officials, and on the sidelines in government, encouraging and upholding the hands of public officials who perform their duty and condemning the action of those who violate their trust.

Finally public officials, certain of that sentiment, eagerly will act and aggressively will press for the realization of the people's will to the end that the laws of Congress and the States may be supplemented as need may require; that the courts may function in the matter of prohibition laws as they do in connection with other laws; that local, State, and Federal officials in the executive departments of the Government may set up a new standard of public conduct in the enforcement of the law; and that the people generally may become committed to total abstinence and prohibition.

Thus only can the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution be made permanently effective.

BUILD UPON SCIENTIFIC FACT

By Dean Alan C. Lennon and faculty, College of Puget Sound, Tacoma, Wash.

The effectiveness of the eighteenth amendment will depend first upon favorable public opinion. This must be founded on scientific fact rather than propaganda. To this end a Federal commission composed of expert economists and sociologists should be appointed by the President of the United States or the Department of Justice. This commission would proceed in a scientific manner to discover, analyze, and present facts concerning the effects in personal and social life of alcohol and of its prohibition, from such sources as life insurance records, biological investigations already undertaken and not yet completed, and other types of research into the results of intoxication and use of alcohol in general. Such a commission could have public confidence and through dissemination of the actual facts concerning the effect of alcohol on the health, economic success, social welfare, and efficiency of the individual, would be an important factor in forming public opinion.

A national organization of business and professional men and women, with units in all parts of the country, would be established for giving adequate publicity to the findings of the Federal commission. The members would be chosen for their outstanding ability and influence, and would be called upon through lectures and conferences, to appeal to the sentiments, ideals, and patriotism of the citizens. They would use their personal influence to bring social pressure to bear upon the indifferent, and to curb the propaganda of special interests, especially in the press.

Since the ultimate success of legislation and enforcement must come from an enlightened public conscience, a systematic plan of character education should be carried on through the schools and through other cooperative agencies, such as the Boy Scouts, Knighthood of Youth, and Girl Reserves. This would include as a part of the course of study, loyalty to the Constitution as a trait action, correlative with honesty, courage, industry, and other trait actions that make for the good citizen. Loyalty to the Constitution as a subject in the character education curriculum, would be taught by the direct method, just as arithmetic is now taught in the academic curriculum. Information would be given concerning the Constitution and the sanctity of law. In addition, specific situations calling for the development of trait actions in the individual child, involving loyalty to the State and the Constitution, would be presented.

The following situations are offered as examples:

(1) You hear someone make scoffing and derogatory remarks against the Constitution. What would you do?

(2) You hear jokes about the law and the officers of the law. How would you respond?

(3) You are working in a store after school hours. You discover that your employer is selling intoxicants. What would you do?

Many specific situations in addition could be presented, based upon the scientific information given out by the Federal commission of scientists.

The active sympathy and cooperation of leaders in the commercial, industrial, and professional life of our communities must be secured as a major condition of effective operation of the prohibition plan. These leaders have been in the main indifferent, where not actually hostile to the enforcement of the prohibition laws and their lack of cooperation has been in a large measure responsible for the ineffectiveness of enforcement. Business is the dominating force in the social life of the United States, and the thinking of its business and professional leaders is the determining factor in public opinion.

In order to interest the business group in the enforcement of prohibition, since they think in terms of profit or loss, it must be demonstrated that such a course is to their own financial advantage. This can be done through showing that enforcement will bring about increased efficiency and production. Many employers have already been convinced by studies in specific lines of industry that the enforcement of prohibition results in increased efficiency and production among their employees and subordinates. These and similar studies should be given wider publicity, and further research should be undertaken. Exact measure should be made of the relation between the use of intoxicants and fatigue, spoiling of materials, damage to equipment, rate of production by employees, and frequency of accidents; curves should be plotted, charts prepared, and this material made available to all employers.

Although many employers have realized the undesirability of the use of liquor among their employees, they have made no check on the effect of the use of intoxicants on their own efficiency. A system of standards, records, and reports for checking their own efficiency, similar to those used in measuring the efficiency of employees, should be devised.

A general increase in the consumption of goods would be to the advantage of all producers. A study should be undertaken to show how this would result from effective enforcement through increased savings and prosperity of the people.

On the basis of the scientific facts regarding enforcement given to these leaders, they should be definitely committed to a program of constructive cooperation. Through the initiative of the Federal commission and of the national association of business and professional men and women mentioned above, they should be pledged to support prohibition in their personal relations, as exemplified by President-elect Hoover, who, during his visit in Nicaragua, used water in drinking a public toast. Coordinated effort and social cooperation should be initiated by leaders in different lines of business.

Reorganization of political and legal machinery for the enforcement of prohibition must be carried out in order to secure effective operation. Through a survey of enforcement methods in social groups where law is most effectively maintained, a better legal procedure for dealing with violations of prohibition laws should be developed. Since, as noted by the American Bar Association at its annual meeting in San Francisco in 1922, Canadians, as well as other aliens, are more law-abiding in their own country than in the United States, it is particularly suggested that a study be made of court and police practice in such countries as Canada and England, leading to adoption of their desirable features.

There should be immediate use, without waiting for the completion of the above survey, of recommendations for better law enforcement made by the American Bar Association. These include suggestions that parole and probation be permitted for first offenders only, that dockets should be kept clear, and that bail should be carefully supervised.

Efficiency in the enforcement machinery will depend upon proper differentiation of function within the organization. Since the Department of Justice specializes in matters dealing with law enforcement the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment should be placed under its jurisdiction rather than that of the Department of the Treasury. In each judicial area a model police force and a model court, based on the findings of the survey suggested above, should be set up as a special agency for the enforcement of such laws as the eighteenth amendment and the Harrison Narcotic Act. Such a court would have a double advantage, in that it would enforce a difficult law, and, as its efficiency was demonstrated, would serve as a model for other courts.

More exact delimitation of the jurisdiction of Federal, State, and local enforcement officers, eliminating friction and opposition between them, must be worked out. It is suggested that Federal officers concentrate their efforts upon wholesale distributors, and that State and city officials hunt out local and retail dealers. Under such an arrangement the Federal officers would shut off the supply of beverages of high alcoholic content at its source. The principle of elimination at source should be further carried out by arranging treaties with foreign powers whereby these powers would agree to deny clearance papers to such cargoes of alcoholic beverages as may be strongly presumed to be destined for United States ports.

All appointive officers from the Attorney General to the 91 United States marshals should be persons who are friendly to the eighteenth amendment, and who believe that it can be enforced. A program of factual education will guarantee ultimately elective officers who are likewise friendly to the amendment, and who likewise believe in the possibility of its enforcement.

PLAN OF CLARENCE TRUE WILSON, GENERAL SECRETARY BOARD OF TEMPERANCE, PROHIBITION, AND PUBLIC MORALS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

1. If I were President: I would see that the Constitution of the United States did not become a joke during my administration. The White House would not serve intoxicating liquors or patronize bootleggers or set an example of drinking in homes while the Government was committed to the opposite policy. My Cabinet would not contain men who openly flouted the Federal constitutional provisions of the Federal Government. Judges of my appointment would not brazenly, from the bench, denounce the laws of the land which they had taken an oath to enforce without accounting to me and to the Government in the impeachment proceedings provided for by law or through a peremptory demand for their resignation. I would appoint as the chief enforcement officers men of executive ability, standing for character and achievement, and who, in addition, believed in this law that they were expected to spend a lifetime in enforcing, so that in all their work they would be able to work with their conscience and not be asked to work against their own conscience. Other things being equal, men will do better by the task in which they believe; therefore no wets need apply. My message to Congress would hold up the high ideals of citizenship and loyalty and not let down to popular lawlessness in an experimental stage of our "greatest moral experiment" through "that salutary law." As the leader of my party as well as the Executive of my Government my influence would be made to tell for our form of government by showing that when 46 out of 48 States ratify a constitutional amendment, decent and law-abiding citizens would be expected to observe it and the criminally disposed would find it enforced upon them by the strong arm of the Government.

2. If I were Senator or State Representative in Congress and took an oath to enforce, protect, and defend the Federal Constitution and the acts of Congress, I would vote for an adequate appropriation for the enforcement of the law that is most under fire, and until it was changed I would see that it was respected at any possible cost. The budget for prohibition enforcement would, therefore, have my attention and all needed acts of supplementary legislation to adapt the Volstead Act to the growing exigencies of experience. A law should fit the growing sentiment of the people as the bark on the tree grows with and expands with the swelling trunk. I should, therefore, make no apologies for supplementing a law of Congress, but make a felony of the five outstanding offenses against the eighteenth amendment which are named in the amendment itself—the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation, or transportation of intoxicating liquors. To do any of these five things is not only to violate the Volstead Act of Congress but to trample on the Constitution itself, and Congress should enact laws and compel the honoring and the general observance of our constitutional amendments.

3. If I were an officer of the Federal Government in executive position or in a judicial relation I would feel that an attack on the Volstead Act was an attack on me as an officer of the Government and interpret the flaunting of lawlessness as rebellion against our form of government, and I should not do what Roosevelt called "hitting soft," but would show the lawless element what getting the strenuous life pledged to law-abiding citizens meant.

4. If I were an officer of the United States Army or Navy, wearing the uniform of our Government, I should remember what Abraham Lincoln said during the Civil War when he saw a soldier wearing his blue uniform into one of the notorious saloons of Washington. The great President walked forward, put his hand on the shoulder of the young man, and said, "My boy, I hate to see you carrying that uniform into places like that." And as an officer of our Army or Navy I would hate to see our men wear the uniform of the United States, paid for by the Government and loaned to them for personal use while they represent it, carried so that they openly proclaim that while wearing their uniform they were trampling on the principles of free government and obliterating the influence of the laws which the oath of every soldier and sailor requires him to uphold and protect.

5. If I were governor: I should hold my State to be foremost in the cooperation which it gave to the National Government in its great moral experiment of showing the nations that you can run a government like ours without tainted money, and conduct a civilization without turning boys into drunkards and girls into drunkards' wives. I would make a conscience of appointing the best equipped men to enforce a law of my State and see to it that they cooperated with Federal officers in a joint effort to make the efforts of the United States in suppressing an iniquity like the liquor traffic a success.

6. If I were chief of police: I would remember what the old saloon days meant, when every corner was an organized temptation for youth and a sluiceway for drunkenness, when the red-light district and the gambling hells held high carnival and the saloon gang ran the politics of the city, removed decent judges from their places for fining gamblers or suppressing dens of vice, and when decency could hardly get a breathing spell in any one of our big American cities, where the notorious bad government smelled from ocean to ocean and it was commonly said 15 years ago that our civilization was breaking down through the graft of our city life. And now, as the chief of police of my town, I have the responsibility of making a success of prohibition, which simply means the final evolution of a hundred years of education as to the evils of intemperance and the final culmination in a supreme effort to suppress rum selling, liquor manufacturing, and organizing political corruption by the brewers' association and the German-America alliance. Whatever others may do, my citizens shall go straight.

7. If I were sheriff: The people of my county have chosen me from all their citizens to take responsibility for managing their finances, preserving order, enforcing law, and maintaining the standards of good citizenship in rural as well as city life. I can let down and the whole moral tone will lower, or I can hold high standards to law-abiding citizens and we shall have a decent county to live in and raise our children in. I have a close touch with the city government on the one hand and the Federal Government on the other and with the jails, police courts, circuit courts, and the Federal officers as well. They have a right to expect certain things of me, and while I am sheriff they shall not be disappointed. Prohibition has not had easy sledding with politicians, but it is no longer a question as to whether I believe in it as a policy, the law-making power has settled that, and constitutional government goes up or down in this county with the success or failure of law observance and enforcement. I, therefore, shall without asking questions as to who enacted it and why, personally do my duty in the enforcement of a law as it stands. If it is properly enforced we will know whether it ought to stand or not; if it is not enforced no honest man in America can say it has been given a fair trial yet; and, of course, it must not be changed until it has had a fair trial.

8. If I were constable of my county, or policeman of my city, I should expect people to remove me unless I respected the law of the land which I have taken an oath and am taking a salary to defend, protect, and enforce. When I walk my beat I want it distinctly understood that I am there as the embodiment of the principles of law enforcement, for the benefit of all the people who support me, and that I am not in partnership with the bootleggers and none of their blood money has ever clung to my hand or found its way into my pocket.

9. If I were a captain of industry, I would feel that present day industrial leadership of both capital and labor holds the most potential force for effective realization of prohibition efficiency. See how comparatively few have been the strikes since the decade of prohibition, and what an orderly, law-abiding, and sober affair the strikes have been. In the old days they filled up with booze in the wide open saloon, plotted mischief with intoxicated men and went out to make nights hideous with drunken crimes. Then how well I remember when we were thought to have no labor troubles, how thin the ranks were Monday morning, Tuesday, work still crippled as workmen struggled back late in the week from sleeping off their week-end debauch. Our profits have increased as our workmen have grown sober.

10. If I were an influential leader in modern education, the social heredity our generations pass on to the next by what we call education has seriously fallen down in the advocacy of respect for the ideals, law, and institutions of society. Most of our educational standards are lowered to suit a jazz age of lawless music, loose thinking, bravado acting, and unconcerned relationship to the State. The function of education should be to make students good citizens, who observe the law and help to improve society.

11. If I were the editor or manager of a great newspaper, I would give the news, I would picture the situation. But I would hold myself responsible for making my paper a leader to better things. Nation publicity movements are quite as responsible for the popular attitude of citizens as any political organization; "As a man thinketh so is he," and he thinks what he reads.

12. If I were a leader in the religious world, I should want our highest morality to register for human betterment. A religion that does not make men better is not good for men. Religion and morality are one. Religion is morality toward God. Morality is religion toward men. To imagine that religion has nothing to do with political questions is to restrict it from operating in its own field and make it an impractical idealism with no earthly mission. A religious organization with no rebuke or remedy for such a crushing evil as the liquor traffic or now the lawless bootleg trade, would have no place in a world like this.

13. If I were a law-abiding American citizen, enjoying the protection of the Army and Navy that keep foreign enemies from molesting us, of the police force that keeps the evilly disposed from trespassing, of good enactments which protect my life and property and reputation from the burglar, midnight assassin, the villainous libeler and even the speed fiend, I would consider myself an ingrate to enjoy all these immunities from danger at the hands of a republic as I trampled under my feet the rights of that republic in enforcing its own best laws and in the upward-trend of civilization by which evil has gone down and righteousness has gone up. There has been no enactment in the 1900 years of Christian civilization that has meant more for the protection of women, the safety of children, the building of homes, the establishment of character, the prevailment of sobriety than the best law of them all—the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

PRESIDENTIAL LEADERSHIP FOR ENFORCEMENT AND EDUCATION

By William M. Bennett, former State senator, New York

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

1. The manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof, into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all the territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

THE PROBLEM

The best and most practicable plan to make the eighteenth amendment effective.

PROPOSED PLAN

This plan consists of two parts:

1. Legislation, enforcement, changes in administration.

2. Educational program to put public opinion back of the amendment.

A constitution is not self-enforcing. It contains no penalties for its violation. It must therefore be followed by legislation to become effective.

PART I.—LEGISLATION, ENFORCEMENT, CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION

A. LEGISLATION

1. Federal: Federal legislation (a) defines "intoxicating"; (b) declares the crime for violation of the amendment; (c) creates officers to administer the law. Under it there is now partial enforcement, but the amendment is not completely effective.

2. State legislation: The amendment contemplates aid by the States by making jurisdiction of the Congress and the States "concurrent."

The 35 States which were dry before this amendment should not repeal their then existing prohibition laws nor relax their efforts to enforce them. If not already done, the laws in these States should be enlarged so as to include the enforcement also of this eighteenth amendment.

Other States should pass enforcement legislation to make the eighteenth amendment effective within their borders. These laws should be uniform.

B. ENFORCEMENT OF THE LEGISLATION

1. Federal enforcement: There are about 2,000 Federal enforcement officers trying to cover 3,000,000 square miles of territory, about 27,000 miles of coast line, and 4,000 miles of land boundary.

Their number should be increased, their pay increased. They should be men of established character, who believe in the amendment and who personally observe the law.

2. State enforcement: In the States dry prior to 1920, public opinion and State tradition would require that they keep up their police forces to enforce both their own prohibition laws and make the eighteenth amendment effective.

In other States and cities, as for example, New York, with its 12,000,000 and New York City with its 6,000,000 inhabitants, State legislation should place upon the local police forces the enforcement of such laws.

In New York there are 300 Federal prohibition agents. New York City has 17,000 policemen. Such a force can make the eighteenth amendment effective in New York City. Other cities can do the same.

Every policeman knows what is going on in every building on his beat, whether it houses a still, a bootlegger, or a speak-easy.

Every police department should have some official, a deputy commissioner, charged with the duty of keeping a real-estate map showing the location of every such place, a file showing the record of such places and history of the persons running them. Each patrolman should be required to submit to such official a periodical report as to the condition of his beat. Such deputy police commissioner should have the power to examine patrolmen as to the condition of their beats, and also to investigate the complaints of private citizens, the power to subpœna witnesses in connection with such investigations, and jurisdiction to try patrolmen for neglect of duty.

C. CONVICTIONS

Crime must be punished, else the law is not salutary. Local police officers can arrest for violations of the Volstead Act, but State courts can not try the offender for violation of Federal statutes. Hence the crowded condition of our Federal courts.

State legislation will open State and local courts to try offenders against prohibition. Thus speedier trials will result.

D. JUDICIARY

Courts should uphold the enforcement officers. Judges should not be too technical about the evidence. They should impose severer sentences. Failure to do so discourages the officers and prohibition agents.

E. WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED AND WHAT IS STILL TO BE DONE

1. The saloon: The eighteenth amendment has abolished the open saloon. To that very desirable extent the amendment is effective.

2. Moonshiners, rumrunners, bootleggers, speak-easies: The Federal Government is dealing with all of these fairly effectively.

State legislation and local enforcement should aid.

The patrolman knows every building. Vast majority of houses require no watching. The comparatively few that require watching can easily be covered once State and local aid is obtained.

F. VIOLATION OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT IS A BUSINESS

No one will manufacture, sell, or transport liquors unless it is profitable. It is a business with tremendous investment.

Make the business unprofitable and those engaged in it will quit.

Dry up the sources: Seek out and destroy the stills. Concentrate on seizures and destruction of cargoes, whether carried on the sea in ships, on land by auto, or on sidewalk by hand.

Destruction of stills, prevention of delivery, and stopping the trade of the speak-easy is simple when the hundred thousands already existing State and local peace officers cooperate.

Landlords know their tenants. Make them get rid of any criminal tenants.

Conviction for crime helps, but make business unprofitable and it will cease.

It takes two people to make a bootlegger—the seller and the buyer. Education to total abstinence will make the business unprofitable by decreasing the number of customers. The former educational program in schools, schoolbooks, churches, Sunday schools, lecture halls, and homes should not be dropped for a mere law-observance plan.

SOME CHANGES IN THE FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE SCHEME

1. Administration of this law should be made a separate department of the Government directly responsible to the President: Making the amendment effective is so important that it was made one of the main issues in the recent presidential campaign. Economic saving effected by prohibition runs into several billions of dollars. It is a nation-wide problem. President-elect Hoover has pledged himself to special effort to enforce it.

The administration of this law should be placed in a separate department of government, namely, a commission of outstanding men appointed directly by the President.

Thus the subject will be dignified, have its proper importance, and outstanding men of ability will consider it an honor to be appointed one of the commissioners. We have ample warrant for this in the Interstate Commerce Commission and in the Federal Trade Commission.

To this commission should be transferred from the Treasury Department—

(a) All executitve and administrative functions.

(b) Supervision and conduct of the educational program hereinafter outlined.

2. Department of Justice: Enforcement of the penal provisions of this law should be placed under the Department of Justice, thereby coordinating the work, fixing the responsibility more directly, securing a higher type of personnel and a better morale.

PART II.—EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM TO PUT PUBLIC OPINION BACK OF AMENDMENT

A large percentage of the people oppose this amendment. Public sentiment must be put behind it. This can be done by education. Wet organizations under high-sounding names are active with propaganda. Drys must be equally so. A mere "law observance" program will not suffice.

There must be continuous—

A. EDUCATION

1. As to effects of intoxicating liquors: The temperance organizations should renew and redouble their activities in teaching the effect of alcohol in impairing mental and industrial efficiency, causing crime, misery, poverty, industrial accidents, and economic and spiritual loss. Total abstinence is spreading in England and Scotland. It should be emphasized and encouraged here in every possible manner.

2. As to respect for all laws: There is wholesale violation, not only of prohibition, but of all laws. Employers' Association of Chicago reported that there are 168 "rackets" or organized criminal attacks on business in that city, levying tribute of $100,000,000 a year.

Respect for law and a civic conscience must be restored.

3. To bring about the enactment of State legislation putting the State and local peace officers, courts, and prosecuting officers back of the eighteenth amendment: States must help. State, city, and local courts, magistrates, prosecuting and peace officers must back the amendment. Civic organizations should be formed to bring about speedy enactment of such legislation in every State where it is not now on the statute books.

B. THE PRESIDENT SHOULD BE THE LEADER IN THIS EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENT

Mr. Hoover, at Elizabethton, Tenn., October 7, 1928, said:

"The purpose of the eighteenth amendment is to protect the American home. * * * I wish it to succeed."

All the people must be taught to believe this. The amendment will then become effective.

Most of the protection of the American home is secured from State legislation and local ordinances, enforced by State and local courts and peace officers.

This was true of prohibition before the amendment was adopted. The people must cooperate to make this amendment effective. Public sentiment must be put behind it. The President can do this more effectively than anyone else.

1. A message to the people from Mr. Hoover: Along the lines of education of the people and revivifying the public conscience, it would be very effective, and entirely fitting if President-elect Hoover should start the revival of the educational program by giving a message to the American people setting forth:

(a) The reasons for the adoption of the amendment.

(b) Telling them that their cooperation by personal observance of the law and cooperation in an educational program is necessary to make the amendment effective.

(c) Announcing that he intends to call a national conference on the subject.

2. A national conference should be called by Mr. Hoover: There should be formed in this country a national association to promote total abstinence and make the eighteenth amendment effective.

Mr. Hoover after his inauguration might well follow up the message to the people by calling a conference at Washington of governors, mayors, chiefs of police, judges, prosecuting officials, and a carefully selected list of heads of transportation lines, large industries, life-insurance companies, editors, publicists, and other representative citizens of all professions and walks of life from all sections of the country to consider:

(a) The problems of enforcement.

(b) The successes of enforcement.

(c) The failures of enforcement.

(d) The remedies.

The list of names of those invited and their positions in life should be given out to the press. This would be a coming together of the government, and business, and the citizens. Its proceedings would attract great attention and would be spread broadcast by the press and radio, by the church, schools, and colleges, and would give a new and nation-wide interest in the eighteenth amendment.

The conference would result in valuable information and concrete suggestions.

Out of it should come the formation of a permanent nation-wide organization, nonpartisan, nonsectarian, which any man, woman, or child could join, like the Red Cross, having local chapters, local drives, educational propaganda, tag days, and other activities tending to help the parents teach the children and the children to lead the parents and stir up State, city, and community interest in total abstinence and the support of the amendment.

C. ELECTIONS

1. National: The recent election demonstrated that the amendment is here to stay. We have a President pledged to make the amendment effective, who says "I wish it to succeed."

The Congress is of the same mind.

2. State and local elections: State aid is necessary in enforcement.

If a candidate enters the primary of either party or is nominated for governor, mayor, or other office who is a wet, effective action should be taken to nominate an opposing candidate of equal capacity who is avowedly and actually in favor of making the eighteenth amendment effective.

This is part of the "educational" program.

CONCLUSION

Whoever made this world has infinite patience. Toward prohibition He has given us a starting point in the eighteenth amendment. It can not be made effective in a day. But with State legislation and State and local enforcement added to Federal legislation and enforcement, and a public conscience and respect for law and total abstinence restored by ceaseless education, the amendment can be made effective.

Most important and absolutely essential is education, education, education, and a new national association to spread the economic and spiritual benefits of total abstinence and to bring about a restored public conscience and a restored respect for law both by citizens and by the officials elected by them and the election of officials who will respect the law.

SELL ENFORCEMENT

By William Feather and Edwin L. McFalls, 812 Huron Road, Cleveland, Ohio

The following program for making effective the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States assumes that the amendment and the Volstead Act are fundamentally sound—legally, sociologically, economically—and that they represent the conclusive will of the American people and will not be altered in any basic way.

It contends, on the other hand, that the effect of this legislation has been destructive rather than constructive, negative instead of positive, and that the methods of enforcement, running exactly counter to American tradition, are psychologically wrong and tend to promote civil war rather than national progress.

This plan suggests a method, modern but not magic, which will eventually enlist the support of the people who are now indifferent or antagonistic and make enforcement easier, less costly, and more pacific. Evidence will be supplied that the plan is practicable, and that its adoption would immediately reduce present costs of attempted enforcement by the police and courts.

Phychologists state that the human mind is incapable of receiving a negative stimulus as readily, or reacting to it as quickly or instinctively, as it does to a positive stimulus or command. This characteristic of human nature is noted daily in common matters.

Direct a person to do something, with the proper show of authority, and he is likely to comply first and consider your reasons and rights afterwards. His curiosity is aroused, not his resistance. Direct him to cease doing whatever he is occupied with, using the same tone of authority, and he instinctively resists the command, often stubbornly refusing. This need not be proved to parents. A "thou shalt not" law, unsupported by wide public opinion, creates antagonism, and can not be enforced. Public support must be obtained, and police clubs are not the way to obtain it.

In the enforcement of prohibition there has been little or no recognition of this fundamental principle.

Whereas prior to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment all of the various "dry" or "temperance" agencies employed persuasion and appeals to reason and moral sense to win converts, and did so with a large degree of success, no such tactics have been used on a large scale since. Police power has replaced reasoning power; we have been compelled, not converted.

The average citizen, his mental equipment reacting in a perfectly normal way, sees himself losing something he formerly had (whether he ever used liquor or not, sees his range of possible activities restricted, feels his rights infringed. He sees himself as a loser—not a gainer, by the enactment. The reaction of some is expressed in the statement, frequently heard, that "He never drank until the law said he couldn't."

You can take a bone from a dog with safety only by giving him a better one.

In other words, the prohibition law has not been "sold" to the American people. It has not been pictured or interpreted to them in terms of tangible, intellectual, material, personal, and immediate benefits. The authors of this plan maintain that it can be. The benefits are so real, of so great value, with so much appeal to the individual's selfish interests that when they are properly presented to him he will demand them.

As we have said, an American can be converted but never compelled. He can be lead but he can not be driven. The lash must be exchanged for the leash, and the leash that will lead him is a picture indelibly impressed on his mind of the profit and benefits he will enjoy under the proper functioning of the prohibition law.

To make the American public as a whole accept the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act as a positive benefit, to be eagerly and earnestly embraced, is an educational enterprise. Every instrument and medium for influencing the popular mind must be used; but in the opinion of the authors of this plan, one instrument is of the surest and swiftest efficiency.

It is modern advertising—regarded by most business men as the greatest single instrument of influence in the world to-day. The public school, the pulpit, the platform, the press—none of them can reach so many minds so quickly, so convincingly, so cheaply as does paid advertising. Unless this were true, unless commercial advertising were the most efficient means of influencing men, economic forces would have prevented its rapid development.

This plan recognizes the value of constructive educational work in this campaign in the public schools. It contemplates coordinated effort by pulpit and platform speakers. But these are not part of the plan. These agencies for leading the public mind have always existed, but have not by themselves been sufficient since the passage of the eighteenth amendment to stem the adverse tide. Their range of influence is too limited; their appeal is for the most part to classes who do not need the influence.

MACHINERY OF THE PLAN

Under this plan an agency will be created which will be under the direction of citizens who command the respect of the Nation. They might be appointed by the President of the United States, if this plan won the approval of the President or of Congress. They might be selected by an independent group of citizens, if the development of this plan should be left to private effort.

The agency or group thus created would employ a staff of trained and experienced advertising executives, who would be directed to apply the same intelligence to this problem that is now applied to the sale of radios, automobiles, soap, and other commodities. This group would function in the same way as a commercial advertising agency. It would sell to the American public, through the same media, by the same methods, the benefits, advantages, and blessings of the dry law, just as nearly every other kind of goods under the sun is sold to them—and sold so effectively that the American people work harder, earn more, produce more, and consume more than any other people on earth.

Can these benefits be sold by advertising? Can a man be induced to give up the immediate pleasure, a cocktail, for a further benefit, such as better health? Can a savings bank account be sold at the expense of a bootlegger's bill? Can health be sold? Can happiness be sold? Can better homes be sold? Can better automobiles, better radios, and better food be sold? Can character and reputation be sold by advertising?

These have been and are being sold to-day. By advertsiing. Savings-bank advertising, as an institution less than 20 years old, is held largely responsible for the tremendous growth of savings deposits. Life-insurance advertising, a relatively new member of the group, is enlisting thousands of new policyholders. It is stoutly maintained by the authors that the benefits of the eighteenth amendment and its supporting law can be sold by intelligent advertising, and that through such advertising it can be sold more quickly and cheaply than by any other known means.

Under the direction of the proper leaders, as suggested above, the style of advertising, its psychological basis, its graphic form, its timing, its placing, its entire control will be governed by the utmost practical skill, in order to avoid waste of time and money, but principally to avoid loss of interest in, belief in, influence of, or respect for the campaign. Any effective campaign would necessarily be months in preparation before the first advertisement appeared. The staff would work far in advance of schedules; results would be observed carefully and plans changed as the public reaction indicated.

Every suitable form of media would be used. Newspapers in every locality, in every language. Boards, poster and painted. Motion pictures, possibly radio. Magazines, both weekly and monthly. Full-page insertions would be the rule. One page per week in newspapers and weekly magazines, and one page per month in monthly publications is suggested, subject to control by the agency.

Based on the cost of several well-known national advertising campaigns conducted by commercial or manufacturing companies, the authors estimate the cost of such a program at approximately $20,000,000 annually. The money might conceivably come from funds diverted by the Treasury Department from the present Budget available for enforcement through the police power. The authors have sufficient confidence in the plan to suggest that the use of this sum in this way would be vastly more effective than police power of the same expense.

There may be delay and difficulties in obtaining funds from Congress. But we are confident that the money could easily be obtained from business men purely on an appeal of self-interest. The liquor traffic is a colossal drain on the purchasing power of the people. Neither radio nor an automobile can be sold to a man whose surplus is taken by bootleggers. In the so-called new competition, industry competes with industry. Why can not all legitimate business unite in self-interest to fight the bootleg liquor industry by altering the habits of the bootleggers' customers? We believe the American business men, moved partly by the desire for an improvement in the well-being of the American people and partly by self-interest, will see merit in our argument and proposal.

This campaign would probably—indeed, almost certainly—have to continue for 20 years. But it would taper off and disappear.

Is there any evidence that the Federal police function, devoted to the attempted enforcement of this now unpopular law, will ever be sufficient, much less become in time unnecessary?

One word more about copy. Copy is to be the key of the success of this campaign. Copy is the product of research, scientific analysis, genius, artistry, understanding of human nature. Do not think of it in terms of temperance lectures in the form of printed advertisements. We want no pictures of drunken men. That is farthest from the authors' conception of the technique needed.

We believe that public opinion can be so deftly cultivated that the liquor flask will cease to be tolerated at clubs and public places, and a bottle in a traveling bag will be disapproved by business associates. Within a year after this campaign is under way we suspect that brazen bootleggers will no longer be smilingly received in the offices of respectable citizens. Leaders of American thought and action are in a mood to give their influence to genuine temperance. An alert business man, knowing the potentialities of advertising, would seize this moment to accomplish any purpose if conditions were as favorable for it as they are for nation-wide effective prohibition.

Before the prohibition law was enacted the field of battle between the dry and wet forces in the country was charted. The "front" was defined. The enemy fought in the open. The dry forces, employing appeal to reason and moral sense, were making great progress.

Almost overnight an amendment and an act were passed outlawing this "war." The front lines disappeared, but the enemy did not disappear. The new enemy flies no flag, fights "out of uniform," recognizes no law, not even the laws of war. It is spreading corruption, poison, and death through secret, uncontrollable, ever-widening channels. Against it the individual is powerless without the united support of his fellow citizens.

There is only one all-compelling motive strong enough to unite the people of this country in active militant support of our dry laws. That motive is self-interest. That can be awakened only by showing in their most attractive forms the benefits that can be enjoyed under the proper functioning of our present laws. Showing all the people quickly, pleasantly, honestly. Leading them by convincing them.

You will receive many plans dealing with the technique of enforcement. Any plan that places the accent on the syllable "force" leaves out of account the fundamental factors of human nature and our American temper. Force alone can never be successful unless the backbone of the average man becomes so weak that he is no longer worth saving.

The successful plan will recognize that one law can lead a people to water but a hundred thousand law-enforcers can not make them drink it.

ORGANIZE CONTINUING EDUCATION

By Richmond P. Hobson, Los Angeles, former Congressman from Alabama

The plan consists in developing agencies to organize, mobilize, and direct the forces of effectiveness and to disintegrate and overcome the forces against effectiveness. The foundation for effectiveness is laid through two education organizations; one to advance alcohol education for the youth and for the public; the other to advance similarly respect for law and authority. A fighting organization is set up with two main departments to organize and apply the power of education and public opinion and the power of law, respectively. A finance organization is organized to provide the sinews of war.

PRELIMINARY SURVEY

Power for effectiveness lies in the attitude and the will of the people and in law mechanism to carry out that will. Power against effectiveness lies in the profits and resources of the legalized liquor traffic of the outside world and of the bootleggers within America, rooted in social drinking customs as old as the race and enmeshed in the revenue policies and politics of the governments of all other lands.

The eighteenth amendment by the Rhode Island decision is an integral part of the Constitution. No amendment to the Constitution has ever been repealed. To the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, the Constitution itself calls the States as well as Congress. To the enforcement of the other amendments and of the original Constitution, only Congress is called.

THE UNDOING OF AMERICA

Unable to repeal the eighteenth amendment the objective of enemy grand strategy will be to undo America by any means and lay the undoing to the eighteenth amendment as a warning to other nations. The most destructive agent is the alcohol being forced into the Nation in a siege along our coast lines and frontiers.

The next most destructive agent is propaganda that poisons the minds of the people and develops a lawless attitude in good citizens, a feeling of resentment toward the eighteenth amendment and the laws in pursuance thereof, and a general disrespect for all law and authority. Abroad, the enemy will patiently conduct a world-wide propaganda against prohibition, and against America, until all other peoples come to hate us. This is happening. Upon this attitude of hate, sufficiently developed, could be built trade wars, financial and military wars.

The grand strategy for the defense, therefore, is to organize and develop education processes to cause the truth about alcohol to reach our people, and as far as practicable, the people of the world. This is the field for a scientific organization to which all can adhere. Similarly, organized education processes should be developed for advancing respect for law and authority, to which likewise all can adhere. The truth about the liquor traffic and its sinister designs and conscienceless methods in part of the fighting processes. As public sentiment arises under processes of education, more and more the processes of law, Federal, State, municipal, can be coordinated, standardized, and applied with ever rising power to the bootleg outlaws. The same wrath of aroused public opinion is the best agent to take care of those who continue to associate themselves with the liquor outlaws as enemies of their country's constitution.

ETERNAL VIGILANCE

The struggle will not be over until the liquor traffic of the world lies dying. It is said to take as long to cure a disease and recover from its effects as the time the disease has run. Ignorance on the part of any future generation would open the body social to a new outbreak of this alcohol disease. To make the eighteenth amendment effective, the forces of defense must be organized on a permanent basis.

THE PLAN

The following are the logical names:

1. International alcohol education association.
2. The American association to promote respect for law and authority.
3. The eighteenth amendment association.
4. The eighteenth amendment finance corporation.

The four corporations, under the guidance of high counsel, should be incorporated under the laws of a State, say, of New York, as organizations "not for profit." In later stages, one or more of these organizations might well be chartered by Congress. Both the alcohol education association and the law and authority association should be entirely free from affiliations with fighting organizations, and should be pledged in their articles of incorporation to take no part in the prohibition fight or in any other controversial matter of public policy. Thus they will command adherence from good citizens and constructive organizations regardless of their differences on prohibition or other controversial matters.

The eighteenth amendment association is the essential fighting organization and should be incorporated with the broadest powers to organize, develop, stimulate, mobilize, maintain, and operate forces and processes now in existence and new forces and processes found necessary or expedient to effect the purpose of the association, namely, to make the eighteenth amendment effective.

All three operating organizations should have power to raise and expend funds, including endowments and trust funds for their own respective purposes. Mr. Durant, singly or with a group secured by him or appointed by him, should underwrite the organization expenses and the operating expenses for a reasonable time until the financing is placed upon a sound and firm basis.

This organic individual or group should cooperate in choosing the incorporators, and these in turn, the board of directors, who in their turn should select the president, and with them arrange for the selection of other executive officials, taking care to insure that the education organizations have no officers or directors interlocking with the fighting organizations.

In view of the prospect of a long period of siege, the board of directors in each case should appoint a board of trustees and plan for securing and administering trust and endowment funds to insure permanency of support. Foundations and endowments should become practical as the organizations develop, and professional money-raising firms can be engaged to raise same. No one can foretell what the conditions may be centuries hence, so in case of all trust and endowment funds it is well to provide for the eventuality of using principal as well as interest.

THE FINANCE CORPORATION

The key corporation is the eighteenth amendment finance corporation. The success of this corporation will insure the success of the plan. Mr. Durant himself should take this corporation under his especial care and choose its incorporators and board from the foremost leaders in the business world, commanding confidence of the Nation for ability and integrity. The articles of incorporation and the by-laws should be drawn with the greatest care and skill to insure full power to raise funds in all honorable ways and at the same time provide for needed safeguards. The board should promptly build up a finance council with representatives of all important fields, like insurance, banking, steel, oil, motors, radio, screen, etc. This council should prepare a general plan of quotas from the various fields. The councilmen from each field should choose a committee from the field to allot the quota among the firms and appear before the boards of the principal firms. A special committee should be appointed to systematically canvass philanthropy, including foundations. A special committee should be appointed to procure the appropriation of public funds, Federal, State, municipal, and funds from public and semipublic corporations.

The organic person or group, or else the finance council, should underwrite the funds necessary for initial expenses for a professional money-raising firm of high standing to organize the raising of large funds, and leaders already chosen or to be chosen as representing large groups, should arrange for the help needed for the set-up. There is every reason to believe that this campaign or drive, carefully planned, would be successful and solve the major financial problems at the start. Control of large funds will give this organization especial influence in bringing about the affiliation and cooperation of organizations now in existence or to be created.

STRUCTURE OF THE OPERATING ORGANIZATIONS

The international alcohol education association should have two departments, one for the youth in the home and in the school, the other for the public, and should build up four groups of committees, one on organization, one on data, one on documents and methods, one on agencies. The fourth group should organize for disseminating alcohol information throughout society, and should put on alcohol education week once in each year, in which all the great agencies of information should take part, including clubs and constructive organizations of all kinds. In its various committees this association should federate and harmonize existing agencies of alcohol education.

The American association for the promotion of respect for law and authority should be organized along similar lines and should undertake especially to federate, develop, and stimulate the cooperation of existing patriotic organizations, fraternal and other associations, business, industry, professions, and should enlist the cooperation of homes, schools, colleges, Sunday schools, etc. Its two departments should be the same as those of the previous organization, one for the youth, the other for the public. Both of these organizations should commend the ever increasing support and cooperation of Federal, State, and city governments.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT ASSOCIATION

The fighting organization should set up with two principal departments, one for processes of education, the other for processes of law. The department of education, through committees or bureaus, should take up and put forth lines of education for fighting purposes, and federate all education agencies now existing and create new ones as needed, to rout all the favorite lines of enemy propaganda, showing that the law is not intended to invade the home or individual liberty, but to exclude from the channels of trade the exploitation of commodities that, instead of giving value received, harm the individual; that our country is under siege by a ruthless foreign foe; that our troubles are not due to the eighteenth amendment, but to this organized, resourceful, and unscrupulous enemy. Especially should this education expose the enemy's supreme defiance that we can not enforce our own Constitution in our own country; that we are not master in our own house.

The law department should set up bureaus or committees for taking up processes of law of the Federal Government, then processes of law of the several States, then those of counties and municipal ordinances, should finally coordinate all processes of law, making a survey of existing laws and the degree of their enforcement, and from these work out plans for developing, standardizing, and applying more and more the full power of the law, driven on by an ever rising imperious public opinion. This department should cultivate intimate relationship with the governments, Federal, State, municipal, and utilize, like the department of education, the power and instrumentality of existing organizations and activities, temperance, prohibition, church organizations, etc.

LIBERALIZE THE VOLSTEAD ACT

By D. J. Brimm, professor of Bible and religion, Presbyterian College of South Carolina, Clinton, S. C.

The eighteenth amendment is all right. Good has resulted from it despite farcical enforcement. The people wanted it; still want it. We know that, properly interpreted, it can be enforced and accomplish its purpose of saving men and women from themselves, saving wives and children from sottish men, saving rising generations from becoming addicts of alcoholism.

The trouble is with the present interpretation of the amendment, called the Volstead law. It is an expression of fanaticism. We showed "a zeal without knowledge." We hit the line too hard, with disastrous recoil. We threw down a challenge that aroused the spirit of adventure fostered by the spirit of greed. Result: Lawlessness, bootlegging, gangsterism, official corruption—the crime wave, purpose overreached. Any kind of liquor can be gotten almost anywhere, from the vile poison stuff of the back-alley bootlegger to champagne and absinthe. Vanished the saloon; arose the cabaret, the club, the roadhouse, the speak-easy—a nest of vipers in place of the serpent.

Many of the "best people" are not in sympathy with the Volstead law because of its fanatical extremism. "One-half of 1 per cent in volume" is practically equivalent to none. Hence the evil of violation and nonenforcement is notoriously and steadily on the increase. Prominent people as well as riffraff are resistant.

Another notorious fact is that many of our lawmakers and public officials in Washington and in all the State capitals—and the capitols as well—are regular and scarcely covert violators. What an example to the young in respect for law! What a tragedy if we do not take a more tenable position before it is too late! Nonenforcement, corruption, and light sentences beget a contempt for law. We have to deal with people as we find them—a situation, not a theory. Americans are peculiarly jealous of their personal liberty; the age is individualistic. Education of the masses up to an ideal is a slow process. Extreme action often results in disastrous reaction and thwarts its purpose.

Another consideration: Great numbers still accept Bible teaching as authoritative. Bible teaching in its entirety is not teetotalism or absolute prohibition, but temperance—temperance in all things. All admit the benefits—social, moral, and economic—inuring from temperance. Hosts who voted for the eighteenth amendment and who would yet refuse to vote for its repeal expected a strong temperance law, but nothing so drastic as we got. For eight years we have tried an experiment, but it has failed because it went too far. When an attack has been made and repulsed, common sense dictates that we fall back to a tenable position and re-form before we attempt further advance; otherwise, we may be routed and vanquished.

The Volstead law could have been better enforced had it been better formulated. We now propose a new law as an interpretation of the eighteenth amendment and for its enforcement, with features that will make it enforceable and will cut the foundations from under the extensively organized bootleg system. We list the provisions and requirements consecutively under certain comments.

I. This country is unique in that sovereign States delegate certain powers to a central Federal Government while reserving all others to themselves. In legislation for the common weal there is need of complete cooperation between the several State governments and the National Government. The second section of the eighteenth amendment provides for this harmonious cooperation, whereas the Volstead law practically ignores the sovereign States, mentioning them incidentally only three times. There must be cooperation for success. The States differ in conditions, type of population, and outlook. In such cases there must be more or less of compromise and flexibility for the best results. Then—

1. Allow the several States to determine by law the alcoholic content of wines and beers to be used in their respective bounds, up to, say, 7 per cent, by weight, which does not produce intoxication. A person can hardly drink enough to become intoxicated or to injure himself by habitual use. Some States would, by popular vote, probably make the limit only 3 or 4 per cent, while others with a different type of population would, perhaps, allow the full 7 per cent. It is understood the Supreme Court would not interpret a 7 per cent beverage as "intoxicating."

2. Beverages to be tested and supplied from a central distributing house at the capital of the State.

3. In each incorporated town, with police force, up to 5,000 population one dealer commissioned to handle these beverages and an additional dealer allowed for each additional 5,000 or considerable fraction thereof, on request of city council.

4. Goods for sale subject to frequent test by certified testers without advance notification.

5. Each State to enforce its own law within its own borders in case of transportation from a State allowing a larger content, and to be assisted on request by national enforcement officers.

6. Sworn and heavily bonded distillers, brewers, and importers licensed and carefully supervised by the National Government.

7. Intrastate violations tried in State courts and punished in State prisons; fines and forfeits to the State. Interstate violations, or violations by national enforcement officers, in Federal courts and prisons; fines and forfeits to United States.

II. In accordance with the spirit of this amendment and the incident laws, it is desirable to discourage the use of alcoholic beverages as much as possible, even when the alcoholic content is small. To this end—

8. Goods must be sold in an open storeroom, with no bar, in sealed packages, and no drinking allowed on the premises. Clubs, cabarets, and road houses must get their goods from local or nearest adjacent dealers and sell in the same way with exception provided in number 24, and with further exception that packages may be opened on their premises under proper restrictions.

9. A heavy Government tax and an additional State tax on every gallon or part thereof, to cover costs of management and enforcement. The revenue idea should not be emphasized—no urge to promote large sales.

10. No advertisements of any type allowed.

11. Prices of dealers regulated by State law.

III. It is always best to avoid the infringement of personal liberty so far as is compatible with the spirit of a law and with the general welfare. And so—

12. Permission granted, upon sworn avowal, to make beverages of legal content for one's own private use exclusively; samples to be furnished and tested and taxes paid. Unfermented juices not taxed.

13. No restrictions as to quantity of permissible beverages one may buy or make for his own use so long as he keeps within the law, nor to his giving—bona fide giving—to others; but this does not apply to those running public houses. In case of suspicion arising that a party has further fermented or distilled to increase alcoholic content, he may be required to allow further testing, and, if found guilty, treated as a violator.

14. Private stocks in actual homes not subject to raid, search, or seizure, except as specified in No. 13.

15. Sale to minors prohibited or regulated.

IV. A law to be respected must be rigidly and rigorously enforced, without distinction between rich and poor, between white and colored. It must "have teeth." It must have provision for checking and counterchecking. It must have penalties that are deterrent and can not be scouted or circumvented. Hence—

16. State distributors and local dealers to be sworn and bonded officers of the State with police authority to see that the law is enforced and with right to call on local, State, or national enforcement officers for assistance in apprehending violators.

17. State and national enforcement officers to be sworn and heavily bonded and to be changed frequently from one district to another of the State or Nation, respectively.

18. Anyone reporting infractions, with clews and facts, to remain unknown to the public, but to receive $10 for each ordinary case and $50 for each case of infraction by a sworn officer, upon conviction of the offender—to be paid with New York checks from the State capital or from Washington according to jurisdiction.

19. Distributors and dealers sworn to report violations, assisted in finding and apprehending offenders and rewarded in case of conviction.

20. Distinction must be made between obviously intentional and obviously unintentional violations, the presiding judge to decide.

21. Penalty for making, importing, or selling contrary to this law or without authority, a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for one year at hard labor for each offense, and no concurrent sentences. In case of inability to pay fine, three years imprisonment for each offense. Confiscation of all equipment and appurtenances. For making or selling vile, poisonous, or deleterious stuff, double the other penalty. For subsequent offenses in either case penalty doubled, trebled, etc., according to the number. No pardon, parole, or commutation.

22. Penalty when a sworn officer is convicted of any violation or of conniving at such, five years' imprisonment with confiscation of stock and equipment and with forfeiture of bond. No pardon, parole, or commutation. No subsequent employment as an officer in any capacity.

23. Whisky, brandy, or alcohol for medicinal purposes furnished to doctors of medicine in half-pint sealed packages upon their written statement for whom and for what cause and with restrictions as to frequency. Doctors violating this provision fined $100 for each offense.

V. Other provisions:

24. Along with meals eating houses may furnish, as per menu card, wines and beers of legal content by the glass—size to be specified—not more than three to one individual on one occasion, and to the same person not oftener than at 4-hour intervals. They may charge whatever they choose to assess above cost and must sell under a special license and under pledge.

25. Only sworn, bonded, and licensed dealers may sell, except as in 24, and no officer, dealer, or keeper of an eating house may solicit anyone to buy or use. If he does, discharged or license withdrawn.

26. One charged with offense tried by a jury, but a majority may convict, and a judge convinced of guilt may instruct the jury to return a verdict accordingly and adjudge them in contempt if they fail.

27. States recommended to make intoxication (defined) a public offense punishable with heavy penalty and the intoxicated party kept in jail up to a year's limit till he tells from whom he secured the liquor, so that the offender may be brought to justice.

28. Pure alcohol for the manufacture of extracts, medicine, etc., and for industrial purposes supplied by State distributor on special statement of a competent chemist, and a sworn agreement to use only as represented.

29. Other matters in the Volstead law not replaced by specifications here to be reenacted in this law.

30. The Volstead law and its execution operative till the hour and minute when this law goes into effect.

31. States requested to enact laws pursuant to this, and make all provisions for enforcement at the next meeting of their legislative bodies and the date when this law becomes operative set for a date subsequent to adjournment of the last of these legislative assemblies to meet.

32. In case a State refuses to cooperate in this matter Congress will continue the Volstead law in operation in said State with the machinery for its enforcement by national officers.

33. Each State to publish its law periodically in all newspapers of the State.

CONCLUSION

This law will furnish a system by which everyone is checked and counterchecked, and it is in the interest of everyone to check on others without spying on them or trying to trick them; but it will be to the interest of bonding companies, through their detectives, to see that those they bond keep straight.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States, December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, December 19, 1928.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the pending treaty has been debated at some length. I had hoped to avoid saying anything regarding it, because it was anticipated that either a clarifying report of the committee might be made or that clarifying resolutions might be agreed upon. The negotiations or talks between Senators have not progressed to a fortunate conclusion and I therefore feel impelled to impose myself upon the Senate. I appeal to the Members of the Senate to look well into the treaty before they advise and consent to its ratification.

I am aware, sir, of the embarrassment of the situation. Our Secretary of State invited the chancelleries of the earth to sign this document. He did so without consulting the Senate. He did so without any previous general public demand. He simply evolved this instrument and proceeded to the point where he had asked all of the nations of the world to sign it before he submitted it to the judgment of the Senate, which in the end is the responsible party to such a contract as this.

Now we are told that because those steps have been taken, we must accept the treaty without the dotting of an "i," without the crossing of a "t," without expressing our opinion in any way except forsooth that we may be permitted to stand upon the floor of the Senate and say what we think the treaty means, and there are as many different opinions as to its meaning as there are Senators upon this floor.

Many of the Senators agree upon one proposition, and many may agree upon another proposition, but no two men in the Senate, I undertake to say, have exactly the same views touching this instrument. Yet the general statement has been made that the instrument does not do certain things; and all that has been asked by those of us who have labored here to reach a composition has been that we shall say in some official way the very thing that the Secretary of State says this treaty means; the very thing that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations says it means; the very thing that it is pretended here that it indubitably means. If that be true, then we are not asking to change its terms or to alter it in any respect, and anything we may do that is consistent with the treaty can by no possibility destroy or injure the treaty.

Mr. President, I do not know that I can state this case as plainly as it has been stated, but briefly I should like to run over the various views that seem to be entertained by some people in the United States.

This so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty proposes in about six lines to abolish war—war of every kind. The various signatory nations solemnly agree to renounce war as an instrument of national policy. If the words of the treaty are to be taken at their face value, no nation can in the future levy war for any purpose whatever, offensive or defensive. The treaty has been exploited throughout the country as the outlawry of war. It is proposed to be signed by all of the nations, big and little, civilized and barbarous. Its proponents advance two lines of argument, each contradictory and destructive of the other. There is also a hybrid argument which combines the vices of both and so is devoid of the virtues of either. To a consideration of these various claims I invite your attention.

We are told by one class of treaty advocates that the treaty will usher in the millennium, that the dream of ages is about to be realized. Swords will be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. The roar of cannon will be supplanted by the chime of Christmas bells, and war's grim visage assume the lineaments of the countenance of Christ. These enthusiasts argue that the treaty binds all nations never to make war; that all nations will keep the faith of their promises, and, ergo, never again will the iron chariots of Mars sweep across the earth's peaceful fields. If the syllogism be correct, then he would be a monster who would not acclaim the treaty as the holiest document ever promulgated by man. It would, indeed, be greater than the commandments delivered by God amidst the thunders of Sinai, for it would accomplish the ordinance "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." It would be greater than the Sermon on the Mount, for it would bring to fruition the peace and good will for which Christ prayed and for which the ages have waited. What the proclamation of Sinai did not accomplish in 4,000 years, what Christ's teachings have not achieved in 20 centuries of time, is to be produced by the magic stroke of Mr. Kellogg's pen.

There is a class of doctrinaires who hold that a law or resolution is a universal solvent of all human ills. At that point, Mr. President, imbecility approaches sublimity. These people conceive that safety is to be found in helplessness, and that the best way to suppress burglary is to leave the doors unlocked and discharge the constabulary. A majority of those outside of the Senate who now clamor for immediate ratification have never read the treaty, short as it is; but few have examined the historic and diplomatic background which must be regarded when treaties are made.

A still smaller number have considered the declarations made by different governments in qualification of their adhesion. Nevertheless, the declarations made by the representatives of foreign governments acting for their signatories must be taken as conditions running with the pact. Read in that light, the treaty assumes an entirely different aspect from that which is reflected by the words of the instrument itself.

Upon its face the treaty proposes a complete abandonment of all war; but the negotiations had scarcely been begun when Mr. Kellogg began to admit exceptions. I want to invite your attention now to those exceptions and let us see what is left of this pact when we shall have subtracted the exceptions from the total of its alleged promises.

First, we except defensive wars. They are not excepted by the terms of the treaty. We read that into the instrument; we say it is inherent in all instruments; but there is more included here in what has been specified and defined as defensive wars than the people of the world understand to be defensive wars. I mean specified and defined by the advocates of this treaty upon the floor.

First. Defensive wars, they say, means the right to defend territory from attack;

Second. To protect trade and commerce everywhere;

Third. To protect nationals on sea and on land; and Fourth. The invasion by armed forces of the territory of a foreign country for either protective or punitive purposes. The examples of that which have been given are the Boxer invasion, which we are told could take place under this treaty; the Mexican invasion, which we are told could take place under this treaty; the Nicaraguan invasion, which we are told could take place under this treaty; and the recent Chinese invasion, which we are also told could take place under this treaty.

We are further told that it implies the right to make offensive defensive war; that is, to make the initial attack when it is for a defensive purpose;

Further, that it involves the right to defend all national interests;

Further, that it does not interfere with the obligations of something like 50 nations who are parties to the League of Nations covenant;

Further, that it does not interfere with the obligations of the nations under the Locarno pacts—and both the League of Nations and the Locarno pacts are solemn agreements to make war under certain conditions which are not wars of self-defense and never could be so construed under the ordinary meaning of the term "self-defense";

Further, all other treaties and treaty obligations are excepted that have been mentioned—and I think they have nearly all been mentioned—

Further, that each nation is to be the sole judge in its own case as to what constitutes self-defense. That is to say, whenever any nation conceives that it ought to do any one of these things for the purpose of protecting its interests, that that is a war of self-defense. Finally, we are told that there are certain zones of influence where at least one nation claims the right to complete freedom of action, not the complete freedom of action that would ordinarily spring from the terms of the treaty itself and from the ordinary doctrine of self-defense, but something in addition to that, else the condition would not be made; and that freedom of action to defend territory, to defend trade, to defend the rights of nationals, and to continue to exercise influence and dominance over lands that are subject or partially subject is asserted by Great Britain.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what Great Britain has excepted from this pact. Here before us is a map; I wish it were larger, so that everyone could see it; but it embraces the world and every foot of the seven seas. The red is British territory, claimed or held by her absolutely under her domination. The barred portions are conquered countries or countries that are held in subjection by the power of Great Britain.

No one will deny, under the interpretation which has been given to this treaty, that she has the right to defend all of the part that is in red. No one will deny, under the interpretation which has been given to this treaty, that she has the right to take any protective measures she sees fit for the purpose of defending as she may construe it every inch of this territory that is in red; and that means the waters that are adjacent.

Beginning over here is India, with her 350,000,000 of people. There are British fortifications at these points, and no nation can send a vessel to India without substantially passing under the guns of the British fortresses of Bombay, Trincomalee, Rangoon, and Singapore.

At this strategic point in the Indian Ocean is another fortress, Colombo. These small red dots that you see are islands controlled by Great Britain, everyone of which can be used as a naval base or as a base for flying machines.

When we pass to Africa, we find that the entire eastern coast, except a very small portion, is controlled by Great Britain. Over here, at the mouth of the Red Sea, she has her fortresses, Aden, and her claim of land. I am pointing now to Port Said at the entrance to the Red Sea, where an English fortress stands. To the immediate north is Egypt, with its 14,000,000 people, every one of whom protest that Great Britain is there not of right but of wrong, and that she holds them in the thraldom of her iron grip.

We find on the west side of Africa the whole southwest portion under the control and ownership of Great Britain. Going a little farther north, we come to the Suez Canal, which Great Britain controls by her fortifications.

Passing along the north of Africa, we find her fortifications again; so that she can command the Mediterranean Sea and all of the waters of the Mediterranean Sea by her fortifications at Gibraltar and Malta.

Passing farther to the north, we find there the British Islands themselves, and the claimed dominance which she has exercised there for centuries of time.

Let us go over to Australia. Here is not only Australia but the vast archipelagoes, with their thousands of islands. Here again we find British fortresses—King George Sound, Sydney, Aukland—commanding the sea.

Pass a little farther over, we find English possessions asserted in Borneo; and we then come to the great fortresses that she has constructed and is constructing at Hong Kong and Singapore. So England commands the waters in those seas, and there her vessels in time of war can find safety, and there the vessels of her enemy can find nothing but death and destruction.

Let us cross to our own side of the water.

Here in Canada, with her eight or nine million British subjects, and, so far as I know, more loyal to the British flag than the inhabitants of London or of Liverpool. Certain it is that in all the war no people rallied with greater unanimity, none fought with greater courage, than the soldiers of Canada. They cover our line at the north completely. They extend to the Arctic Circle. There is enough land there for fifty or a hundred millions to reside upon; and who shall say that in the course of the next 50 years there will not be 50,000,000 loyal Britishers in Canada?

Let us see how that further affects us.

Here, at this point on the east, lie the harbor and fortress of Halifax. In those waters England can establish, maintain, and protect her entire war fleet, or any part of it, and in one night's time can reach great cities on the American coast and subject them to bombardment and to destruction; and those waters are fortified.

Dropping down a little farther, we find the Bermudas, the key position from which a hostile nation can strike New York or ravish our entire coast; and the Bermudas are fortified. At whose heart are the cannons of Bermuda aimed? What nation's interest is involved there? Would Great Britain permit a fortification of that kind by a distant nation so contiguous to her coasts as Bermuda is to ours?

Let us go a step further.

This dotted line of red is a series of islands owned or controlled by Great Britain. They stretch in a semicircle from the coast of Florida to South America. Within that semicircle is embraced the Panama Canal. At this point lies Jamaica, the key to the canal, the fortress controlling the canal; and it is fortified by British guns. At whose heart are those guns aimed? What nation has Great Britain in mind when she still maintains her fortifications there?

From Jamaica, in five hours' time, a fleet of airplanes can destroy the Panama Canal. If our national fleet is divided, part of it in the Pacific and part of it in the Atlantic, and it becomes necessary to concentrate that fleet, in five hours' time Great Britain can destroy the Panama Canal.

She can prevent the consolidation of our fleet. She can destroy it then by piecemeal; and she reserves all these zones. She does not tell us where they are; but if we ever have difficulty with Great Britain—which, God knows, we all hope will never come—it is certain that the expression of Sir Austen Chamberlain used in the signing of this treaty, "There are certain zones of influence," will mean the West Indies, will mean Jamaica, will mean the Bermudas, will mean every part of the seas where she has a fortress or where she has a landholding.

We may close our eyes, we may smile, but it will be no smiling matter if ever we should come to grips with this nation that has dominated the sea for 500 years and that proposes to dominate it for the next 500 years.

If we try to pass around the Horn to consolidate our fleets, there lies the station of Port Stanley, from which point British ships, having been concentrated, can strike our vessels when their fuel is nearly exhausted.

Going up the west coast, you find that at this point, just at our northwestern border, lies another British fortress, Esquimalt, near Vancouver, and back of it are impregnable waters where the British fleet can lie in safety, and where guns can be planted in a week's time so that no power we possess can ever oust them, unless they are attacked from the land side—waters that are as impregnable as were the waters of the Bosphorus when they were defended by two or three companies of Turks armed with guns taken from the Emden, and where the British fleet went to disaster and almost destruction.

This, then, is what Great Britain says is not in the treaty—that she reserves special rights and full liberty of action. When she says she reserves full liberty of action in all of these waters, the mollycoddles of this country are willing to say that we shall not say that we reserve the Monroe doctrine! We shall sit silent; we shall not open our lips; we shall sit silent, because, if we speak, South American countries will not sign!

This country is never going to be destroyed by warriors. This country is going to be destroyed by pacifists and traitors if it is ever destroyed, or destroyed by well-intentioned men who think they are not pacifists, but who play into the hands of every pacifist there is, from the anarchist societies of Russia that deny the duty of any citizen anywhere to defend his country to the mild-mannered and gentle-tongued gentlemen who go about crying "Peace! Peace! Peace!" when there is no peace of the kind they are talking about.

So that is excepted by Great Britain, and specifically excepted. There, it must be understood, we retain full liberty of action. There, we insist that the right of self-defense embraces not only our lands in the ordinary sense but there we insist that we have some other and additional rights, particularly as to these countries lying here.

So you subtract that exception from the general language of the treaty, and you have not, as far as Great Britain is concerned, anything left.

Then they except the Locarno pact, and the Locarno pact is a pact between a number of nations not that they will fight in their own self-defense but that they will fight to maintain a status quo, to compel Germany to continue to submit to the conditions forced upon her. Of course, Germany signed it. Of course, she signed the Versailles treaty. Of course, she signed, as every sensible man knows, with a bayonet pointed at her heart. I am no advocate of Germany; I voted for the war, I voted for every man and every gun we sent there; but I know that this great and proud people, this mighty people, will not forever submit to the fixation of a road that cuts her in two, or to the onerous conditions that have been imposed upon her.

We go further than that. We except from the terms of this treaty all of the conditions of the League of Nations. I am not dragging that in here to rediscuss the League of Nations, but let us see what the exception of the League of Nations pact takes out of this treaty. It leaves 50 nations or more, practically every nation except ourselves, having solemnly agreed to maintain the status quo, having solemnly agreed that any war or threat of war by any nation anywhere shall be justiciable by the league, and that the league may take such action as it sees proper; and leaves to the council of the league, or some of its bodies, the decision as to who is right and who is wrong, just as the Locarno pact leaves to the Council of the League of Nations the decision as to who is right and who is wrong. The decision having been rendered, provision is made for imposing the conditions of the decision on the nation adversely decided against, and those provisions, as we all know, are provisions for war; not war in defense of a country's territory, not war in defense of a country's trade, not war in defense of a country's nationals, but war in defense of the status quo. Take that away from your treaty, and will somebody tell me what you have left? What have you left?

Mr. President, as thus construed, the provision that we will never make war under any circumstances or conditions dwindles to this: Every nation has the right left to make any kind of preparation deemed proper or necessary; two, to match armaments against armament in preparation; three, to match armies against armies in preparation; four, to match navies against navies in preparation; five, to match airplanes against airplanes in preparation; six, to match poison gases against poison gases in preparation; seven, to match alliances against alliances in preparation, and to assert that all of those things are matters of self-defense, and to employ them in self-defense, the nation concerned to be the sole judge of what is self-defense.

It also embraces the right to suppress any nation's activities and sovereign rights, to prevent it from becoming dangerous; for that is embraced in the League of Nations. That is to say, it embraces the right of the nations to preserve the old balance of power, or the balance of power, at least, as it was laid down in the Versailles treaty.

It preserves the right, in case of these wars, to fight with poison gases, to employ all the armaments that have been accumulated, to seize the commerce of neutrals, just as Great Britain has always seized it, and, finally, to match starvation against starvation. All these things are excepted.

If the above process of subtraction be carried out, the residue does not change a single existing condition. It does not even enlarge the protestations of devotion and peace, or the expressions of good will, for England, France, Russia, Germany, Italy, all of the countries that have signed this pact, have solemnly said that war is not an instrument of their national policy, they never had any such diabolical thought as that; they were concerned always and only in wars of self-defense. It has been admitted upon the floor, and it is true, that there has not been a war made in a hundred years where the nation making the war has not alleged it to be in self-defense, and we concede that each nation is to be the judge, in its own case, as to what is self-defense.

More than that, all of these nations have already made treaties of good will and perpetual amity. They have been solemnly written and repeated time after time and time after time. They are filed away in the chancelleries of the earth. They are covered with the dust of ages. They have been brought out and dusted off and refiled period after period, and all of the parties to those treaties have sworn eternal friendship to each other, and all of them have sworn that they will not make war upon each other.

The aggregate of those treaties is the sum total of this treaty. The simple difference is that they are probably of more binding force, for two reasons: One is they were carefully negotiated between nations and took into consideration the peculiar conditions of those nations. The other is that many of them have attached to them already means by which difficulties can be ironed out and amicable adjustments arrived at.

What you are doing here is writing a treaty of words, and you have extracted from the words all the meaning of the English language. You are putting that out now as a sovereign remedy for war; you are not doing one single practical thing to remove the causes of it. But as to that, a little later on in my address.

There is one thing we may say that, having many times and in multitudinous pacts, treaties, and understandings agreed to keep the peace and remain perpetually in amity, we gain nothing by repeating the oft-repeated terms of the pact. There is one inference which might be drawn, and that is that we entertain doubt as to the good faith of the previous pacts, and hence we are going to make another one just like them.

Mr. President, viewed in that light it is no wonder that the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has described this as a mere gesture; that the distinguished Senator in charge of the measure, my good friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], for whom I entertain the highest regard in every way, as he knows and as everybody knows, practically concedes that there is not much left of this treaty except an expression of good will.

We are told that there is a particular kernel of virtue in this pact, in that the nations renounce war as an instrument of national policy. You could not get a prime minister of any country on this earth to admit that within the last two centuries war had ever been an instrument of his nation's policy. They would all say, "We fight only in defense of our rights. We do it with tear-filled eyes, we do it with aching hearts, we stand to defend ourselves, exercising the God-given right of self-protection, and that is all we have ever done." Then, when Germany begins a war with France, England says, "Our self-defense is involved." Why? "Because if Germany gets too strong, then we will be in danger." So they construe self-defense, and so they say that they have never had war as an instrument of national policy, as was the case in the days of Alexander, and Cambyses, and Julius Cæsar, and some other great conquerors; but no nation has admitted any such impeachment during the last 200 years. So you have a phrase there that means nothing—"as an instrument of national policy."

If it meant that you would not make a law in self-defense, then you would include in your terms something that was not there before. But when you take self-defense out and say that every nation is to be the judge of what constitutes self-defense—and every nation says it always fights in self-defense—what becomes of your phrase "an instrument of national policy"? It vanishes into thin air, just as this treaty will vanish at the first puff of powder, at the first shot of the first gun.

Now, let us go back and see whether my analysis of the treaty is not correct. This is known as a treaty to outlaw war, to make all kinds of war illegal and criminal. That is its language. I think I know where it originated. There is a gentleman in Chicago named Samuel O. Levinson. He is a friend of mine. He is a good man. He is a fine lawyer. He conceived the idea that a law ought to be passed making it a crime for any nation to go to war; that we would outlaw war just as we outlawed dueling where there is a law of superior force which can punish the duelist. He worked out a plan for amending the laws of nations so that they would declare a warring nation to be an outlaw. Then he was finally brought up against the proposition that a treaty to outlaw war would not amount to very much unless there was a constabulary to enforce the decree of law. Nevertheless, he submitted his proposition. He took it over to France. He states unhesitatingly that he spent $200,000 in trying to promote the idea of outlawing war. Later, when M. Briand and our Secretary of State submitted a similar proposition to the sovereign nations of the earth, they said, "We can not waive the right of self-defense," and they began to construe that. "We can not waive the Locarno pacts," and they began to insert that. "We can not waive the League of Nations covenant," and they began to insert that. "We can not waive the multilateral treaties," and they began to insert them. When they got through with their subtraction there was not anything left to subtract from.

Then it is brought here and the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], whom I admire, said, "It is a pleasant gesture. Let us make it." I wanted to discuss that with him, but I saw at once that the dove of peace had not sung its notes with sufficient sweetness so that they had penetrated his heart, and as I had no desire to involve either of us in a controversy, my questions subsided.

Mr. President, the gentlemen who say it is a gesture, a good-natured gesture, a kiss thrown from the tips of the fingers to amorous and waiting nations who will accept the kiss and hold themselves to no responsibility have another theory, and that is that everybody will be compelled to obey the spirit of the treaty and never make war by what they call the "general opinion of mankind." More people have been fooled by phrases than have ever been convinced by logic. We are going to have this treaty enforced by "the general opinion of mankind." One would think that mankind could be gotten into a room, that they were all like we are, that they had a consciousness with regard to war that we may possess, that we could arouse that consciousness, and that there would be no conflicting interests, that we could simply resolve ourselves into a sort of church meeting where brotherly love prevailed and where everything was sweet and serene and nice.

The general opinion of mankind! What is "the general opinion of mankind"? What is meant by the general opinion of mankind? We can not get the peoples of the world to believe in the same God, to worship at the same shrine, to adopt the same philosophy, to live according to the same code of ethics, to treat each other in the same way. What is the general opinion of mankind as applied to this treaty? Let us have a little plain horse sense. They have it on the other side of the waters. We are the only body of dreamers there is. We are the only nation in the world that ever composed such songs as I Did Not Raise My Boy to be a Soldier. [Laughter.]

We are the only Nation on earth where it has ever been advocated in a great legislative body that we ought to teach our boys as they grow up that they never should fight. All other nations teach their boys that it is their duty to lay their lives on their country's altar when their country needs them. Other nations do not teach internationalism. They teach nationalism, and if we fail to teach it, if anything can undermine the courage of American youth, it will be that sort of nefarious doctrine.

"The general opinion of mankind!" If treaties could make public opinion promotive of peace and barring war, if that could be done by treaties it would have been done centuries ago. But the armies of earth have marched across the realms of time over highways carpeted by treaties of amity. Treaties do not create the will for peace. Treaties to possess force must be expressive of a will already formed, already thrilling the hearts of the nations. If that condition existed, then the treaty would be expressive of it and would be obeyed—indeed, a treaty would scarcely be necessary.

If the hearts of mankind could be changed, if differences could be reconciled, if all selfishness could be eliminated, then we would have a public opinion amongst all the nations for peace, because all the peoples, all the races, kindreds, and tongues would be devoted to peace. We would be like the Chinese nation that denied war and, denying war, died for lack of preparedness.

But what is the public opinion as it exists to-day? I appeal to the common sense of men. The public opinion of 320,000,000 people in India is that the thraldom of 40,000,000 Britishers should be broken. The public opinion of 400,000,000 in China is that the knife of Japan should be removed from her throat; that Britain is an invader of her soil and her rights; that the 40,000,000 of French have already invaded her rights; and that until recently we were to some extent involved in this invasion of national sovereignty.

The public opinion of 63,000,000 Germans, 7,000,000 Austrians, and 8,000,000 Hungarians is that the foot of the oppressor is upon their soil and that they have the right to regain complete sovereignty. The public opinion of 150,000,000 Russians is that governments of other nations are upon an unsound basis and that Russia has great national rights of which she has been despoiled. The public opinion of 14,000,000 Egyptians is that England's iron hand is at their throat and that that stranglehold must be some day broken. The public opinion of Poland is that she ought to have the privilege of cutting large slices out of the body of Russia and of enlarging her claims in Germany. The public opinion of Persia is, as broadly hinted in her note of adherence, that England is trespassing upon her national rights—and she is. The public opinion of Algeria is that she has been shorn of her sovereignty, and she protests against the conditions or reservations which imply that that process of oppression shall be continued.

The public opinion of these nations is probably that they would like to live in perpetual peace if they could enjoy what they conceive to be their full natural rights; but it is also that those rights are sacred and that they must defend them where possessed and regain them where lost. Until they are made contented with their lot there will be no concert of public opinion in favor of maintaining a status quo. We might as well ask a man to be content who wears a dagger in his breast, festering in the wound.

"The public opinion of the world under these circumstances will compel obedience." It will compel obedience by Great Britain as long as Great Britain gets what she thinks she is entitled to, and her philosophy is that she is entitled to rule the seven seas and that she is entitled to hold every foot of land over which the Union Jack flies and every inch of ground where she has established her protectorates or her interfering agencies.

The public opinion of Germany will be content when she thinks her wrongs have been righted, and she will then be for a perpetual peace. The public opinion of France will be content when she feels that her destiny has been fulfilled and not until then. The public opinion of Russia will be content when Russia reaches the Dardanelles and has full access to the oceans of the world, and not until then.

All these are the opinions of different nations and they are at variance and when, therefore, it is said that every nation shall decide the question of when it ought to act and how it ought to act in its defense, and that its defense embraces anything that it may see fit to do, that is in good faith intended to defend its interests—when we go further than that and concede these additional rights over conquered territory, when we have done that, then there is no such thing as a public opinion that will compel those nations to relinquish those rights which we have expressly reserved to them, and which they have reserved to themselves or which every advocate of this treaty says they possess. So let us not make any mistake. The public opinion of the world has always held, at least within the last century, that when a nation simply went out and conquered other countries it was doing an unjust thing. There are in the hearts of many people in this country opinions of that kind that are very strong and firm. There are people in every great nation of similar notion; and there are people all over the civilized world of that kind, but they do not represent a public opinion that will coerce the nations of the earth into surrendering anything they believe to be their rights; and as there is conflict always as to which is right, a conflict will arise, and public opinion of this kind will not stop it.

I still think the public opinion of the world was against Germany in the late World War; it certainly came to be against Germany toward the end; but that did not hinder Germany from fighting when she believed her vital interests were concerned; that did not hinder Great Britain from joining with France in order to preserve the balance of power in Europe; that did not hinder Russia from advancing her armies to the battle front when she believed that Russia's interests were imperiled. So we reduce this matter to the plain proposition that if this treaty means nothing; except that which its advocates say, just as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] said the other day, it would be a mere gesture, meaningless, except as an act of courtesy or friendship. That is not the Senator's language, but that is a rough interpretation of it.

Mr. President, I think that if the treaty is a mere gesture, it is very unfortunate that it is being made; first, because a false remedy always postpones a real remedy. If a patient is sick, if he needs calomel and a doctor gives him dough pellets, he endangers the life of the patient, he prolongs the disease, and he prevents the application of a proper remedy. That is a thousandfold more important in international negotiations. So, if this treaty is only a gesture, it is a foolish thing. It is a foolish thing to call the chancelleries of the earth together and solemnly agree to do nothing; to say once more what we have said in scores and scores of instances; to say once more what is already solemnly registered in the archives of every nation. If that is all, then it would be better not to have been done. If that is all, I put it upon your conscience and upon your sense of fairness, if there is no obligation, express or implied, in this treaty save that we shall not make wars of aggression, then why not write in some formal manner our construction to that effect, so that in the future we can not be accused of bad faith? Why not say on paper what we are willing to say with our mouths?

My experience has been in the practice of law and in life that when a man says to you, "This contract I make, but I will not put it in writing," he does not intend to carry out his contract. If this treaty means what Senators say, then have enough regard for those of us who fear the construction to put something in the treaty which you say is there, but put it in in plain terms. How can any man in fairness deny that? What reason is there for denying it? We have not asked to have put into the treaty anything that would compel it to go back to the other chancelleries; but, if we did that, who could properly object?

Senators say if it goes back the other signatories will begin to add conditions of their own. Then they must have those conditions in their minds. If they have those conditions in their minds, it would be better they put them on paper now, so that we may understand what is being done. If they have those conditions in their minds, and will attach them if we say plainly what we mean, as a matter of fairness we ought to invite them to attach them.

But what, sir, will we gain? If this were a contract to be made by two individuals, and if we could seduce the individual into signing the contract as written, we might take him into a court of justice and say to him, "You did not write it in the bond; you did not nominate it in the instrument; and hence under the rules of law we will make you live up to the instrument"; but there is no such court, there is no such obligation here; the matter rests upon good faith. If it rests upon good faith, and good faith alone, then no nation can be held to stand by it that puts a different construction on it in its heart than somebody else puts on it. If they have reservations in their minds now, in the name of high heaven, let us know what they have in their minds before we put our pen to paper, for in the end they will decide—not a court, not a tribunal, but they alone—and that is admitted everywhere.

I would be ashamed if I represented a private client to hide from him the implications of a contract or to refuse to allow him before the contract had become effective to write into it that which he understood to be its meaning. How much more would I be ashamed in the great tribunal of conscience that may exist somewhere but does not embrace the world, to stand there convicted of having purposely kept back the thought of my own heart and my own construction of this treaty lest they should write theirs into it.

We talk about a treaty resting upon good faith and at the same time we talk about it resting on good faith we are guilty of an act of bad faith; we taint it from the start. We get them to sign in some way, and then we will hold them, but we can not hold them; there is no court to hold them; there is no judge to say, "No matter what you had in your mind, you did not put it in this document," as has been so often and recently unjustly said in cases of contracts—a harsh rule of law that we have to maintain because its evils are not as great as would spring from its abandonment. Why not put these conditions in?

Well, Mr. President, we do not mention our Monroe doctrine. We left it out on purpose; we held that back; if I may use a colloquialism, that was our "ace in the hole." There have been some views expressed here to which I wish to refer. One of them is that the Monroe doctrine is reserved to us because Sir Austen Chamberlain stated that the United States in certain regions had similar interests upon which she would insist. I take it that there can be no dispute among Senators who have thought of this question that when a nation signs a treaty and attaches an express condition that condition runs with the pact. Whether as a strict matter of law it does or not is immaterial here, because there is no court to decide it. The nation decides it for itself, and it is an eternal verity that it will decide that question in favor of its reservation. So Great Britain by attaching her reservation can say to all the world in the future, "We expressly told you that we reserved full liberty of action in these unspecified regions, and this is one of them"; and, there being no court to construe it, England's construction must stand, or else we must go to war or encounter difficulty about it.

Let me say, further, that when England mentioned the fact that we have a Monroe doctrine, not calling it by name but referring to it, I think it can be fairly said that Great Britain by that act recognized our Monroe doctrine, and would be estopped from hereafter declining to recognize it in any manner concerning the interpretation of this treaty; but while England made that concession she made that concession or admission for herself. It does not inure to the other nations. It does not bind the other nations. England said, "You have a Monroe doctrine." That is an admission by England that we do have such a doctrine, but it is not an admission by Germany that we have a Monroe doctrine. It is not an admission by Russia that we have a Monroe doctrine. It is not an admission by France that we have a Monroe doctrine. I mean, when I say we have a Monroe doctrine, that we have a Monroe doctrine that ought to be respected. Indeed, several of these nations, in signing this pact, expressly said they refused to accept any conditions attached by any nation; that they signed the pact upon its face, and without any qualification. So that the Monroe doctrine is not reserved there, except we can say to Great Britain, "You tacitly admitted it," and we can say that to Great Britain alone.

England can say to us when we accept this pact that by ratifying this agreement after she specified an oriental Monroe doctrine, if she proposes to confine it to the Orient—God knows whether she does or not—we have assented to that doctrine. We take her into a general pact of peace, and we grant to her the right to except from the terms of that instrument her dominions as claimed by her in all these quarters of the globe. If England hereafter should exercise her rights in those dominions, we could not resist her without violating the terms of this instrument. We admit the validity of her claim. If we do not want to admit the validity of her claim we ought not to sign this agreement for general world peace, general abandonment of war, and then concede to her the right to take out of the agreement these special territories upon the claim that as of right she is the dominant force there.

In my judgment, there is no escape from that reasoning. I can see no escape from it. I have been in the Senate long enough to know that there is no reasoning from which somebody can not escape; but, then, that is equally true of foreign chancelleries. Moreover, I have also found that there are men who can not be convinced, and perhaps I am one of the worst offenders in that respect; but I am hoping here that we are not going to make any mistake. My opinion is that this thing as now formed is a Trojan horse, because they put inside of it the doctrine of the balance of power in Europe, with the right to make war to maintain the balance of power, and with our assent to such a war by accepting the treaty with that condition in it, because they put in it the right of every nation signing it to be controlled by the obligations of the Locarne pact and the obligations of the League of Nations; and when we sign this treaty with those exceptions we tacitly agree that anything that is done in good faith in accordance with the procedure there laid down we will not regard as a hostile act or as a breach of the treaty as to us.

Let us see, then, where that leads us.

Let us assume that Germany and Austria hereafter see fit to form themselves into one nation; that their right to do so is protested by France or some other country; that then it is claimed that that is a threat of war; that thereupon the matter is carried to the council of the league, and the council of the league decides that they have no right to form themselves into a single nation, and that it is a hostile act and a breach of treaty; but we, on our side, believe that they have a right, in working out their salvation as a people, to do that very thing. We believe that the use of any armed force against them or the taking of any measures against them is unholy and unjust.

The league then proceed to apply sanctions, as they call them—"sanctions" being the polite name for war in some of its forms—and they declare an embargo of all the ports of Germany. After having admitted that they have the right to proceed in the manner and form laid down in the treaty of Versailles, can we then, without breaking this treaty and without being an aggressor, do anything to aid Germany, which has been solemnly, although in our opinion unjustly, adjudged to be the aggressor?

I do not know what answer will be made to that. It may be said that each nation is its own judge; but if you say that each nation is its own judge, and is not bound in any way by the language of the treaty, then you would better not write the treaty, for the treaty means nothing.

Again, suppose that Germany should say some day, "The French soldiers have no longer any right upon our soil. We have performed the conditions of our surrender"; and suppose the French should say, "We have the right to stay here," and the Germans should say, "You are, therefore, an invader of our soil, and we have the right to put you out." Thereupon the Council of the League of Nations decides that Germany is about to make war, or has actually resorted to violence to get the French soldiers out. We, however, think Germany was right. We think France was wrong. Germany says, "You tried us before a packed court"; and it is a packed court. It is a packed court because the interests of every nation run into it, and any court where interest interferes is a court that is packed. Again we venture to send our goods to Germany, with which we have been at peace; and these other nations seize our goods, and say to us when they seize our goods, "You agreed that the League of Nations pact should stand as between these nations, and it is standing, and they are acting under it. Having consented to the validity of the League of Nations, and to these nations that joined with you belonging to it, how, then, can you protest against or do anything in contravention of a decision rendered by that league?"

So, without following it further, or wearying your ears and patience by further illustrations, what I have said here may be extended to the Locarno pact, which is a pact of war, a pact in which nations are bound to fight who are not fighting in their defense at all. One of them may be fighting in its defense, but the others are bound to come in. It is an offensive alliance in that respect, and they are bound to come and fight, although their territory is not invaded and although their rights are not imperiled.

But let us bring it a little closer home. Let us see if the propagandists of this country and the pacifists of this country who have been flooding the Senate are stronger than all appeals to reason.

We except from the terms of this treaty, I repeat, the League of Nations pact. We consent that all nations belonging to the League of Nations by signing this treaty have done nothing to impair the league compact. We thus by implication, if I know the meaning of language or any single rule of logic, consent that these nations shall freely act under the terms of the League of Nations pact. I am not urguing here against the League of Nations; but we are not a member of it and we have nothing to say about it.

Now, let me assume that Japan comes over to South America or Mexico and gains by peaceful negotiation the right to establish a naval base and to build a fortress, and we protest. Why has not Japan the right to say, "This is one of the questions necessarily falling within the jurisdiction of the League of Nations, and we will take their decision." The league meets and decides that Japan is right; that as a sovereign nation she had the right to make a contract with another sovereign nation for the cession of territory. But we say, "We are not members of the league." "Ah, but," Japan says, and Mexico says, "we were members of the league and we had a contract providing for the way to settle our disputes and differences, and following that and in accordance with that we have reached this decision."

It will be said that there is a fault in that argument; that we are not parties to the league, and hence we can say we are not bound.

I am not here to argue that as a strict measure of law we would necessarily be bound, but I am here to say that by implication we have at least said to these nations, "Whatsoever your obligations are under the league, you are at liberty to carry them out."

Let us take another illustration. Two South American countries get into a controversy. They both belong to the league. They submit their controversy, or the league takes jurisdiction and proposes to decide that controversy. When it decides it, it decides it in such a way as to be clearly inimical to our interests. It may involve relations with European governments, or protectorates by European governments, or something offensive to us. We say, "We protest against that"; but they reply, "What right have you to protest? You agreed that this League of Nations covenant should stand unimpaired by this peace agreement. By doing that you recognized the rights of these nations to conform to and act in accordance with the League of Nations' proceeding. They have done it."

At least there is the gravest danger that we may involve ourselves in a charge of bad faith. At least there is the gravest danger that foreign nations will regard our action here as having opened the door to decisions touching acts upon this continent which we believe would be violative of the Monroe doctrine, unless we say, "We reserve the Monroe doctrine," or words to that effect.

Mr. President, I have talked as long as I want to talk to-day, and while I have not covered this question at all, I may have scratched the surface a little with as dull a plow as I possess, but at a later time during the debate I intend to bring forward a resolution, not to be adopted here in connection with this treaty but elsewhere, covering what I believe would do some good in the matter of limiting war.

For 500 years England has asserted the doctrine that she has the right, practically, to dominate the seas, and to place embargoes upon the commerce of every nation whenever she is at war. That right she asserted in the late World War, and it was the secondary reason which produced the immediate reason for our entrance into that war.

England asserts that when she is in a fight, the rights of the innocent bystander cease; that when she is in a fight with a country, she has the right to seize the goods of every country that is at peace with her enemy, and that dares to carry anything to the enemy. She asserts the right to wipe that trade out, to seize the ships.

The controversy has been a long one, and I intend to review it. While she has been driven from it time and again, and has been compelled to qualify it time and again, she returned to it in the last war in the most aggravated form, for formerly the right of seizure and search had been limited to contraband of war, and contraband of war had been limited practically to munitions of war and to soldiers. But in the last war, by her order in council, Great Britain declared substantially everything that men wear and that men eat and that men employ, either in the arts of peace or in war, to be contraband of war.

She seized our ships, she embargoed the North Sea, she planted her mines, and told us the lanes through which we could travel, and told us that when we went outside we would be blown to pieces. She seized our cargoes destined for neutral ports and demanded that the owners prove that they were not going into Germany for transshipment. So, having undertaken to apply starvation to Germany in this way, by interference with our commerce and the commerce of all other neutrals, she compelled Germany to adopt similar measures, and it was because of the adoption of those measures that we finally were compelled to enter the war.

I want to see something done of a practical character. I want to see an agreement forced among the nations of the earth so that when two nations fight they shall fight each other and nobody else, and that they can not seize the goods of a friendly nation. If that were done, wars could be confined; they would not spread all over the world.

Is that chimerical? Perhaps so; but Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson and John Adams did not think so, and Henry Clay did not think so, when they negotiated with Prussia the treaties for freedom of commerce, those treaties providing expressly that in case Prussia were at war with any country the goods of the United States should go unmolested into ports of Prussia's enemy, and that if we were at war a similar privilege was to be accorded to us. That would limit war, and if such a treaty as that were universally accepted, then when two nations went to war they would be fighting each other and not injuring the innocent.

Article 12 of the treaty of 1789 provided:

If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power, the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining neuter with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted. On the contrary, in that case, as in full peace, the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports and on the coasts of the belligerent parties, free vessels making free goods, in so much that all things shall be adjudged free which shall be on board any vessel belonging to the neutral party, although such things belong to an enemy of the other; and the same freedom shall be extended to persons who shall be on board a free vessel, although they should be enemies to the other party, unless they be soldiers in actual service of such enemy.

Mr. President, if we had had a treaty like that when the last war came on, and if every nation in the world had had similar treaties, then when Great Britain first began seizing the ships and goods of a neutral, she would have violated her pact with that particular nation directly, but it would have been notice to all the other nations that similar treatment would await them. Hence there would have been a natural combination of nations against her which she would have recognized, and we would never have had a vessel seized or sunk by either of the belligerents. If that had been true, then 125,000 American boys who lost their lives in France would still be walking the earth, and the vast debt that is piled upon us would not be here to burden us and those who are to come after us.

Mr. President, what argument can be made against that? The argument of brute force, the argument that England has made because she commands the seas, and has been powerful enough to force her will upon nations. Once in history Catherine of Russia called together the neutral nations and imposed an armed neutrality, and thus protected the commerce of the world.

What is Britain's argument for this employment of brute force? It is that she wants to starve her enemies into submission. Humanitarians there are who sit around in all parts of this country and say that war is a terrible thing. Let us do something to keep it within limits, and without bounds. That is practical.

They tell us that we should not have poison gas, that that is a terrible thing. Poison gas is used against the soldiers upon the field, who have some means of defense, while starvation strikes the women and children at home.

They tell us that humanity demands we should not bombard unfortified cities, because the lives of women and children and peaceful citizens would be imperiled, and that is true; but is it any worse to kill them with shot and shell than by the slow process of starvation?

When we speak of humanity, we would better stop and think of something that will limit war. I say, sir, that I would like to see the nations stand before this imaginary tribunal of the world we talk so much about here and defend the right of starving women and children to death. That has been England's method of warfare.

Close the ports, and where the bullets can not reach, gaunt starvation will place its skeleton hands. Close the ports, and the stout hearts upon the battle fields that are not dismayed by the sound of shot and of shell will break when they know that their loved ones at home are famishing for food. That is the kind of doctrine that has been taught by Great Britain.

Let me say, in conclusion, I have said many things about Great Britain, but I am no enemy of Great Britain or of the British people. I have spoken of her at length because she has spread herself all over the world. All over the map of God's footstool she has placed her marks. Everywhere, in every quarter of the globe, her flag floats, and when she proposes certain policies that have made for war, that still make for her dominance, that will result in fixing her iron grip upon the throats of conquered peoples, and ask us to agree that she has the right to do that, and that nobody has the right to resist because they are resisting their natural, righteous, and conceded right—when she does that, and when she imposes her will upon the seas, it is time to do a little talking.

That is a great nation, a great people, and because she is a great nation and a great people, because her sons possess the iron of courage in every fiber of their being, because they know how to cling to an idea and fight for it and die for it; because her ships sail all the waters of all the oceans; because her guns frown upon every lane of the sea, so that every craft must pass beneath their muzzles; because she has us surrounded, in a large sense, I say that it is time to do a little thinking.

But, indeed, like miserable, sentimental idiots we have sunk $500,000,000 worth of the finest fighting craft on earth, and we did it to the peans of the pacifists and mollycoddles of the Nation, we did it to the delectation of certain statesmen who thought they were going to get some votes from those propagandists. We did it, and when we did it, as soon as the ink was dry, Great Britain began to sing hosannas, France rubbed her hands in congratulations, and they both said, "Now the dominion of the seas can not pass from us or one of us or both of us. America, the great giant, has cut off her right arm, and we have reserved the right to build cruisers that will infest the waters of every ocean and can destroy the commerce of every nation, and so we will continue to build them. We will have peace. We are great friends of peace so long as that doctrine will destroy your ships. We are great friends of ourselves and our governments and of our imperialism when we want to build a swarm of smaller vessels that can destroy all the commerce of the world."

It is time to wake up a little bit here. That nation is safe, that nation can pursue a policy of peace which is strong enough to command peace; and, being strong enough to command peace, it may then pursue policies of peace that make for the welfare of mankind. We have furnished that example. America's example to the world has done more to form opinion in other nations favorable to peaceful means than can be done by all the treaties that have ever been written.

Ah, but America will lose her strength; America's arm will drop palsied; America's influence will shrink whenever America becomes a weakling no longer able to maintain herself. Then they will say, "The weakling begs for quarter." Now they say, "The strong man extends the hand of friendship." But it is not to be accomplished unless we safeguard our interests now; and I make the appeal to the Senate to insist that there shall go into this instrument or into a report of the committee or in some way into an authoritative statement the construction of the treaty which has been put upon it by the chairman of the committee and put upon it by its advocates. If we do less than that we are derelict in our duty to the people who sent us here. If we yield to these propagandists who come down here talking about peace and that there shall be no war instead of talking about our country being safe first and then pursuing the policies of peace, if we surrender nationalism to internationalism, if we accept the doctrine of the Third Internationale, which has been denounced as anarchism, then we shall sow the seed that will raise a crop that will choke out the spirit of patriotism, and this Nation will suffer by our act.

We are the watchmen upon the tower. The solitary watchman is not down in the office of the Secretary of State. He is not the only man charged with the duty. He was once a Member of this body. We respected him, but no man surrendered his judgment to him. Now, for his private opinion, that we may anoint him with the oil of our obsequious approval, we are asked to say nothing, to do nothing, to just accept the treaty, although it is admitted that all the speeches we may make here in the way of construction will not affect the final construction of the treaty, but that a few words plainly spoken would remove all danger from it. Why not write them?

Mr. President, I thank the Senators for their attention.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to submit a request for a unanimous-consent agreement to the effect that beginning tomorrow at 3 o'clock each Senator shall be limited to 30 minutes in the discussion of the treaty or any reservation or amendment offered to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum before such an agreement is entered into. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	Keyes	Ransdell
Barkley	Fess	King	Reed, Mo.
Bingham	Fletcher	La Follette	Reed, Pa.
Black	Frazier	McKellar	Robinson, Ark.
Blaine	George	McLean	Robinson, Ind.
Blease	Gerry	McMaster	Sackett
Borah	Glass	McNary	Schall
Bratton	Glenn	Mayfield	Sheppard
Brookhart	Goff	Metcalf	Shipstead
Broussard	Greene	Moses	Shortridge
Bruce	Harris	Neely	Simmons
Burton	Harrison	Norbeck	Smoot
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Steck
Caraway	Hawes	Nye	Steiwer
Copeland	Hayden	Oddie	Stephens
Couzens	Heflin	Overman	Swanson
Curtis	Johnson	Phipps	Thomas, Idaho
Deneen	Jones	Pine	Thomas, Okla.
Dill	Kendrick	Pittman	Trammell

Tydings	Wagner	Warren	Watson
Tyson	Walsh, Mass.	Waterman	Wheeler
Vandenberg

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by reason of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am going to submit a request for unanimous consent for the purpose of limiting debate. I ask unanimous consent that, beginning to-morrow at 3 o'clock, speeches or discussion on the treaty and all amendments or reservations thereto on the part of each Senator be limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator from Idaho mean that each Senator may speak 30 minutes on the treaty and 30 minutes on any reservation?

Mr. BORAH. No; 30 minutes in all. Each Senator may divide the time to suit himself, but would be limited to 30 minutes on the treaty and reservations.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not possible to submit a unanimous-consent agreement fixing a time when we shall vote on the treaty?

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not possible unless the Senator from Missouri has changed his mind.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Missouri is not in the Chamber. I do not know what his position would be as to the request which the Senator from Idaho now submits.

Mr. BORAH. I talked with the Senator from Missouri about that proposition.

Mr. McLEAN. Is the Senator from Idaho willing that it shall be understood that there shall be no vote to-morrow?

Mr. BORAH. No; not if we get to a vote. I would want a vote to-morrow if we should get through with the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator will permit me, the suggestion I am about to make is solely because of the usual course of events. To-morrow will be Saturday, and if the Senator's request shall be agreed to we shall begin to limit debate at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Ordinarily we would not be in session very late on Saturday. Why not make it 12 o'clock on Monday?

Mr. BORAH. Very well, if the Senate prefers that.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a mere suggestion which I make, because of to-morrow being the end of the week.

Mr. BORAH. I thought we might get through with the debate to-morrow, perhaps, and then have Monday to begin other matters, but if there is objection to my first request I will resubmit the proposition.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, can the Senator from Idaho state how many Senators would like to be heard on the treaty?

Mr. BORAH. No; I am unable to do so. There are, however, several Senators who desire yet to be heard, but they are not going to speak long. I am making this request largely because Senators want to get some idea about when we are going to vote on the treaty, as some of them have other matters that call them away.

Mr. McLEAN. That was my idea in suggesting that it be understood that there would be no vote to-morrow, because even though we should begin to limit debate at 12 o'clock on Monday we might still finish the discussion and reach a vote to-morrow. I think it should be understood that there should be no vote to-morrow. Otherwise it would be rather embarrassing for a good many Senators.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want any understanding that we shall not have a vote when we get through with the debate. When we get through with the debate on the treaty I want a vote.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Idaho did the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] indicate why he would object to fixing a time for a vote if he was willing that debate should be limited?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Missouri said he did not want a time certain fixed to vote, and I told him that I would not make that request. I am not speaking for the Senator from Missouri on the question of limiting debate, but he said he did not want a time certain fixed for a vote, and therefore I am not asking for that.

Mr. MOSES. For the time being, Mr. President, and until I can consult with the Senator from Missouri, I feel constrained to object to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Idaho. I should like to talk to the Senator from Missouri this afternoon, and possibly the Senator from Idaho may then subsequently renew his request.

Mr. BORAH. Objection having been made, that ends the matter for the present, I suppose.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter from Jeremiah Smith, jr., a leading attorney of Boston, Mass., and request that the letter be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. Smith's views are of public interest and importance because of his extraordinary public service and intimate knowledge of European questions, since he was attached, after his services in the American Expeditionary Forces, to the American mission to negotiate peace, as council to the Treasury Department and adviser on financial questions.

When the council of the League of Nations in 1923 sought a commissioner general providing for control of a draft scheme for an international reconstruction loan to stabilize the currency of Hungary and balance its budget, Mr. Smith was selected.

He served in this capacity from May 1, 1924, until June 29, 1926, when the need for his services terminated owing to the decision of the League of Nations to relinquish its control of the financial reconstruction of Hungary. Mr. Smith was entitled to compensation for his services, but at the termination of his functions he presented his entire salary for his two years of work in the amount of $100,000 to the Hungarian people, stating that the friendship and appreciation of the Hungarian people were all that he desired. His administration was pronounced eminently successful both by the league and by the Hungarian Government, and he was publicly offered the thanks of the Hungarian people, and probably no American is more affectionately regarded by them.

I particularly call attention, in view of Mr. Smith's well-recognized conservatism of thought and speech and his intimate knowledge of European affairs, to one sentence in his letter which is the one which indicates that, in his opinion, it is only a question of time until there will be another general war if foreign affairs are conducted in other parts of the world in the future as they have been in the past.

The letter is brief, and I ask that the clerk read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HERRICK, SMITH, DONALD & FARLEY,
Boston, January 9, 1929.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: * * * I am writing to tell you that I hope very earnestly that you will vote in favor of the Kellogg-Briand peace treaty, as I expect you probably will.

I am neither a pacifist nor an internationalist, but I think the preservation of peace is one of the most important questions in the world to-day, and everything that promotes it is valuable.

During the last 12 years I have had some opportunity to observe how foreign affairs are conducted in other parts of the world. I am convinced that if they are conducted in the future as they have been in the past, it is only a question of time until there will be another general war, though I do not think the people in the different countries are anxious for it. After very careful thought I am convinced that there has never been any international standard of morality in international dealings, and that the only remedy for this situation is to be found in the creation of international public opinion which will insist on the same standards of morality being observed in international dealings as are observed between individuals of good character in conducting their own personal affairs. Creating such an international public opinion is a very difficult piece of work, but I think it is progressing steadily though slowly. I consider this new treaty one more step in building up an international public opinion of the right sort, and I think it will be very valuable to that end. I realize that it contains no penalties, but I do not agree with the technical criticisms that it is of no value because it does not contain binding obligations to enforce it against anybody else. I think it is a most valuable step forward and may become a very important instrument in maintaining peace. I sincerely hope you will vote for it, and I think it would be very unfortunate if the Senate undertook to modify this treaty, which was initiated by this country. I think it is quite plain that other countries must understand our position and could make no claim of bad faith against us if we insisted on maintaining the position which they have already been informed is that of our State Department.

I may add that this letter is entirely voluntary on my part. I know that you must have received a great many communications on this question, so please do not take the trouble to acknowledge the receipt of this.

Sincerely yours, JEREMIAH SMITH, Jr.

SPURIOUS DOCUMENTS AFFECTING SENATORS

Mr. BROOKHART obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As in legislative session, I send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram from Mr. Ivy Lee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 10, 1929.

Hon. DAVID REED,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

One of the newspapers advises me that they have story to the effect that it was revealed to-day that the Senate was in possession of document stating that the Soviet Government had paid to me a certain sum of money for some undescribed expenses. The fact is that I have never received one penny of money from the Soviet Government, directly or indirectly. I should appreciate the privilege of appearing before your committee and making this statement under oath and should also be very happy to place at the disposal of your committee the books and files of my office. The whole suggestion is a complete fabrication and utterly without basis in fact.

IVY LEE.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators to the fact that there has been laid on the desk of each Senator a transcript of the proceedings of the last hearing of the special committee investigating this matter, which includes facsimile reprints of the various documents that were submitted to the committee.

I also send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of State to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, January 11, 1929.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BORAH: I learned yesterday that Senator REED'S special investigating committee had been informed that there was in the State Department at one time a copy of what purported to be a receipt signed by you acknowledging the payment of a considerable sum of money by the Mexican Government and that Mr. Lane, chief of the division of Mexican affairs, had been called before the committee to testify on this point.

Until this information came to me yesterday I had had no intimation of any kind that anyone believed that such a document had ever been in the possession of the department, and I caused an investigation to be made at once. I find that no such document and nothing resembling such a document has ever been in the department, and I can not understand the basis for the report which reached the committee unless there has been some confusion between the above-mentioned "receipt" and the alleged copy of a ledger sheet from the Mexican Treasury Department's records, a facsimile of which was published in the Washington Herald of Friday, December 9, 1927. That document, you will recall, purported to show the payment of a large sum of money to three persons whose names were obliterated from the published facsimile. A typewritten sheet (with translation) similar to that reproduced in the Washington Herald came into the possession of the State Department and was destroyed as unworthy of acceptance by the department for incorporation in its official files.

In order to make certain that I covered the matter completely, I have not only made inquiry of Mr. Phenix but also have asked Mr. Olds this morning by telephone whether he recalled any paper purporting to be a receipt by you for money paid by the Mexican Government. Mr. Olds stated unequivocally that he knew of no such paper; the only paper of which he was aware that associated your name with payments by the Mexican Government was the alleged extract from the Mexican Government ledger referred to above, the original of which, as you know, was given to Senator REED'S special committee, together with the other so-called Hearst documents.

I hope that this letter disposes of the matter to your satisfaction and that there will be no further revival of the subject.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, before the Senator from Pennsylvania takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. CARAWAY. Reading yesterday's proceedings, I see that a man by the name of Baker was presumed to have the papers to which reference is now being made. Has he been examined by the committee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He has not been examined, because the papers with which he was connected contain, so far as we know, no reflection upon any Senator. I am given to understand since the hearing was finished that the papers with which Mr. Baker was concerned were about 600 in number. They were papers which had been sold, or delivered at least, to the Mexican Government by some person who pretended that they showed hostile intention on the part of this Government toward Mexico. About 200 of them were genuine papers stolen from the American Embassy in Mexico. They in themselves did not show any such hostile intention. There were about 200 or 300 fraudulent documents wholly spurious. All these were turned over to the Mexican Government, and that Government, in a spirit of intelligence and amity for which we can have nothing but praise, was quick to send to our own Government for examination. They did not send them through in a formal way, but I understand that Mr. Baker was at the time in Mexico City and that some Mexican official told him about these papers and said that they would be glad to have them examined by our State Department. They were actually brought to this country, I am told, by some Mexican messenger.

Mr. CARAWAY. The question propounded to Mr. Lane and his answer left an entirely different impression on my mind. I thought that these were the papers bearing upon the reputations of the Senators accused, and I inferred from Mr. Lane's reply that it was with difficulty that they got the papers away from Mr. Baker.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President. So far as I can learn—and I have made diligent inquiry since the hearing—Baker's papers bore not at all on the reputation of any Senators.

Mr. CARAWAY. At least, then, Mr. Lane puts him in rather a bad attitude, because I remember the Senator from California asked him some questions, and the impression I gained both from the questions and the answers was that Baker had some documents and was likely to make an improper use of them, and that it was with great difficulty that they were gotten away from him. I think he is put in a very unfortunate attitude if he is entirely innocent of any wrongdoing.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think everybody, at least all those with whom I have talked derived the impression that Baker's connection with the papers was entirely improper and his attitude subject to the gravest criticism.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can see that that is a natural misunderstanding. On page 345 of the testimony, however, appears the question of Senator JOHNSON, which was:

Let me ask you about some other spurious documents, inasmuch as the inquiry has been opened up in that regard.

I do not think that any of our committee understood that the documents with which Mr. Baker was associated had anything to do with Senators.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did not the committee understand that he was trying to make an improper use of the documents that he had?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. And was unwilling to surrender them to the proper parties?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, I think he ought to be given a chance to testify, because that was the impression I obtained from reading the testimony; and I have heard quite a number of people state that they had similar impressions.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. So far as I can discover, Mr. Baker's only connection with the papers was in his anxiety that they should be shown to our State Department; and if Mr. Lane's testimony gives any other impression, it was unfair to Mr. Baker.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have not the testimony before me now. I read it in the paper—I think this morning's paper.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator will find the testimony on his desk.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall read it again, because the impression I have is that Mr. Lane at least left the impression that Baker had them; and I think he was asked the question if it did not take rather extraordinary means to get them from him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The question was (p. 346):

Senator JOHNSON. They obtained those documents from Mr. Baker in a rather drastic fashion.

Mr. LANE. Well, I think they obtained them in a roundabout way.

As a matter of fact, I now understand that they were delivered by the Mexican consulate to some representative of the Navy Department in New York; the Navy Department had nothing to do with them, but this representative happened to be convenient, and they were brought by him to Washington. In that sense it was a roundabout way.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, let us take this: Mr. Lane says, speaking of Mr. Baker:

I do not know how they came into his hands. I know that Mr. Baker went to Mexico and arranged to have them come into his hands, but he denied having brought them into this country.

Senator JOHNSON. But he had them, did he not?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Senator JOHNSON. And it required a considerable effort on the part of the State Department to obtain them, did it not?

Mr. LANE. I was not here at the time, but I understand that was the case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in fairness to Mr. Baker, I think I ought to make a fuller statement about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think so, too.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I had been hoping that I would not need to take up too much of the time of the Senate.

During the war Mr. Baker was a reserve officer in the Navy and, I think, had something to do with the Naval Intelligence Bureau. He happened to be in Mexico, and some friend—I think a Mexican Government official—told him about these papers having been shown to the Mexican Government and about their willingness to have them inspected by our State Department. Mr. Baker said he was not going to bring them to the United States, but suggested that the Mexican Government send them to their consulate in New York and have it turn them over to some naval intelligence officer in New York, somebody that he knew. That was done. I do not know what individual brought them from New York to Washington. It may have been Baker.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why is there any mystery about it? That is what I am curious to know.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The only mystery comes from the fact that Mr. Lane was asked about this without expecting to be asked about it, and he said right at the beginning that he had no personal knowledge of it. He was embarrassed by trying to tell about an incident that he had heard of only scantily.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does not the Senator think Mr. Baker ought to explain where he got the papers, and how he got them, and why he was reluctant to bring them?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Surely. I have no doubt he will if we ask him. I am trying to tell what I learned yesterday about this matter on making inquiry. All this came to me yesterday. I did not know it before.

Then either Baker or somebody from the Navy Department brought these papers to Washington and showed them to the State Department. They instantly knew that they were forgeries. They include a lot of preposterous yarns about military steps that our Government was preparing to take, or had taken, against Mexico. It was a whole cock-and-bull story, just like these soviet papers.

Mr. CARAWAY. At least there were 200 of them that were genuine, that somebody had stolen from the American Embassy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have the impression—I do not want to charge anybody unjustly—that a stenographer in the American Embassy was disloyal and peddled these copies of papers that were genuine. There was nothing in them of any importance, nothing to arouse the Mexican Government; but they sufficed to furnish a background of genuineness against which they could plant their sensational forgeries.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations December 19, 1928.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the Senate has just listened to a great discussion of a great subject by a great man. I shall not refer to the Senator from Missouri as a distinguished Senator, because that description is unfair. I think the Senator is the greatest objector who has ever appeared on the floor of the Senate. He had distinguished predecessors of that type from his own State, but I think he outranks even the famous name of Thomas H. Benton.

I am not criticizing objectors. I am about 50 per cent an objector myself, although I think the Senator from Missouri is about 100 per cent, and measures up to the percentage all the time. I do not mean this afternoon to reply to his argument. With much of it I agree. I may, though, in the course of my discussion, correct with the actual facts some of the impressions left in reference to the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

We have heard much of the fictions of Russia and of Russian institutions; but I mean in the discussion of this treaty to point out its relation to Russia, and to point out some of the facts of that country as they exist now.

I agreed with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in opposition to the League of Nations and in opposition to the World Court. I did not oppose those things upon the ground of mere opposition, but I did not feel that the new institutions of government which they created were not based upon the economic principle of world peace, and that is the principle of cooperative economics which I recently discussed on the floor of the Senate.

The outlawry of war is the beginning of cooperation. The outlawry of war in business is the beginning of cooperation. Therefore, from my standpoint, this treaty of world peace is a different proposition from the institutions of the League of Nations and of the World Court.

This afternoon I shall not go further into the subject of this treaty being a basis of cooperation. Perhaps later in the debate I shall give some little time to an explanation of that idea; but this afternoon I want to make the claim that this treaty is a recognition of the Soviet Government. I do not mean that it is a recognition by sending an ambassador and diplomats. Those are minor matters. Those are things that may follow; but it is a recognition of the Soviet Government as a government, of its right to make treaties, and it is even joining with that government in the execution of this treaty.

Upon that basis I want to discuss the proposition of whether or not it is desirable that we should recognize the Soviet Government as a government among the civilized peoples of the world.

I visited Russia in 1923. I had read the accounts of it in the newspapers, and the published statements; and when I went into the country itself I found the story so vastly different that I think the people of this country are entitled to know the real facts. I said, when I came back, that Russia ought to be recognized as a government. I said that it was about the most stable government in Europe. This was in 1923, and every event since that time has sustained the conclusion which I presented, although at that time I was denounced as a Bolshevist and an anarchist myself, and perhaps my argument to-day will not be pleasing to my standpatter colleagues in the Senate of the United States. Perhaps they will not enjoy ratifying a treaty that is a recognition of the Soviet Government; but such is the fact.

I saw Russia. It was not a camouflaged country that I saw. You read in the papers that they show you what they want you to see, and they keep you from seeing everything that you ought not to see. That is ridiculous when you are on the ground itself. I was shown Russia by Herbert Hoover. He was in charge of the American relief administration, and he had his personal representative with me in other countries of Europe investigating cooperatives; and when I decided to go into Russia I asked permission for this representative to go with me. He desired very much to go. That was Dr. Alfred P. Dennis, now vice chairman of the Tariff Commission. The permission was denied, but Mr. Hoover at once cabled to Col. William G. Haskell, who was in charge of the American relief administration under his direction, and directed Colonel Haskell to look after me in Russia. Haskell was closing the relief administration, but he had automobiles and he had interpreters, and those interpreters were nearly all czarists; they were not friendly to the Soviet régime. Haskell, with his equipment and his interpreters, is the man who showed me Russia under Mr. Hoover's order.

That was in 1923. Since then the firm of Col. Hugh L. Cooper, who built the Keokuk Dam, who was the consulting engineer in the construction of the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals, who has constructed more water-power plants than any man in all the world, has become the consulting engineer of the Soviet Government. In June, 1927, Colonel Cooper delivered a speech to the 150 American delegates on the steamer George Washington en route for the Fourth Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce, at Stockholm, Sweden. That speech is so able, so fair, so full and complete, that I mean to quote it very largely in my description of the Russian situation. Colonel Cooper said:

You will receive a better dividend from listening to an engineer's views about some present economic conditions in Russia if I frankly tell you at the outset:

First. That your speaker has no financial interest to gain or lose by any action you may later take as a result of what he is to tell you.

Second. That you will not be asked to make any subscriptions or extend any credit to the soviets.

Third. That your speaker does not believe in Bolshevism or Communism or any other "ism" that seeks to lead mankind away from the normalism exemplified in our best American life to-day.

Fourth. That your speaker believes the future peace of Europe depends almost entirely upon the early establishment of new and properly balanced economic conditions for the whole and not a part of its people.

This new economic theory must give Europe a substantial increase in its purchasing power, coupled with the possibility of saving something for old age. This rise in purchasing power can be produced only by increasing constantly the efficiency in the use of available natural resources and raw materials. European peace, to be worth while, must be founded upon a population happily and hopefully employed. Such employment is the only agency which can wipe out the accumulated hatreds of centuries still flowing in the blood of these 340,000,000 of people.

I think it will be conceded that the statement of those principles is of a high order and of a high value in determining the relations of the nations of the world to Soviet Russia. He continues:

The views I am to state to you have been fully expressed by me to various high officials in the Soviet Government. As we proceed you may well say to one another, and to me, "Who are you who is so bold as to propose a formula for the peace of Europe, and why should we listen to you?" I can only reply, in defense of my audacity, that history seems to record numerous instances where good has come from inconspicuous sources.

But Colonel Cooper was more modest in describing himself as an inconspicuous source than he should have been. He is really the most conspicuous power engineer in all the world. He said further:

As we travel over Europe these days and try to visualize the horrors of the Great War and its senseless destruction of lives and property and the resulting permanent punishment to industry the American observer finds it difficult to look with complacency upon what he sees; it is all so different from the happy prosperous picture he left at home. I believe our continued possession of what we now cherish may be threatened some day if the balance of the world is denied a substantial increase in its purchasing power. We must admit that modern transportation and means of communication have collectively destroyed a great many old plans of life and have given birth to a multitude of new demands as to what a man must have in order to enjoy himself, and these demands we can not ignore.

In the final analysis man's material comforts depend almost entirely on the efficiency with which his natural resources are employed. Natural resources are the foundation of all private and national wealth. The successful use of natural resources depends, first, upon the engineering profession; second, upon the proper commercial direction of the engineering; and finally, upon "live and let live" laws among neighboring nations—laws, by the way, which seem very difficult of enactment. I can see you smile when an engineer stands before you boldly declaring that the peace of the world depends not upon treaties and diplomacy, not upon congresses and conferences, but primarily upon the engineering profession in all its numerous branches. This declaration is not born of conceit or thrown out with the idea that the profession is seeking belated recognition of the value of its work to humanity; this thought is submitted for constructive criticism. I should now, perhaps, better than later, tell you I am here of my own volition and, that I do not represent any person or group of persons in Europe or America. I am devoting all my spare time, and some that I can not spare, to an attempt to enlighten the American mind about present-day Russia, and the expenses of this devotion are borne solely by me. I have just completed my third round trip to Russia in the last 10 months, and my firm is employed by the Soviet Government for the design and construction of the Dnieper River power and navigation project in southern Ukraine, near the Black Sea. This development is being financed by the Government, will cost about $75,000,000, and will produce about 1,500,000,000 kilowatt-hours of hydroelectric energy at a cost that should compare favorably with similar American power costs when the values to navigation are charged to proper amounts. The installed capacity of the plant will ultimately be 650,000 horsepower and the granite-faced dam will be of gravity overfall type, raising the natural levels of the river 120 feet for its width of about 2,300 feet. The structures to be built collectively represent the largest and most difficult engineering proposal yet actually undertaken by man. The development of this splendid natural resource is an important step forward in the engineering program that should be adopted for the whole of Europe. A careful study of Europe shows it to be sadly deficient in natural resources as compared to America. On our side of the Atlantic our 120,000,000 people have their prosperity guaranteed by natural resources of at least two and one-half times the asset value of the natural resources now available for 340,000,000 people in Europe—a per capita ratio of 7 to 1 in favor of America.

In all comparisons of Europe with America it is important that this fact be known. The great disparity of natural resources in favor of the American people is an item that must be considered and given the greatest weight in determining the relative standing in material progress of the countries of Europe and the United States.

A per capita ratio of 7 to 1 in favor of America.

That is, the American has natural resources at his command seven times as great as those of the average citizen of the countries of Europe.

In my studies of European natural resources I have found that in Russia, representing about one-seventh the landed area of the earth, there are probably more unused natural resources than in all the balance of Europe.

If, then, our premises are correct, it is immediately evident that the highest attainable efficiency in the development of Russia's resources is of first importance, not only to Russia but to all of Europe, if these countries are to carry on peacefully in the future.

In the United States to-day we consume annually about $310 worth of the things man produces. In Russia to-day this consumption is about $32. In the United States we consume about 600 kilowatt-hours of electricity per capita per annum. In Russia this rate is about 60 kilowatt-hours.

I will say that since this was written I have received charts showing a wonderful development in electrical power, and that that ratio is very greatly increased in Russia since that time. That was in June, 1927. I quote further from Colonel Cooper:

In the spread between 1 unit of life's good things for them and 10 units of life's good things for us their exists a vast potential field for a highly useful industrial expansion. The necessary natural resources and the necessary people are there. All that is needed to complete the inauguration of this new era is an industrial leadership in which these people can safely place their confidence. People are never successfully led without confidence in their leaders. You may properly inquire, "Are these people capable of doing their part in the development of a new industrial program?" If you had been with me in Moscow last month, when I studied for four hours on two different occasions, the faces of 1,500 delegates representing the entire soviet union in annual convention, you would have seen a strong, virile, determined, poorly but cleanly clad, intelligent looking in the main, body of men and women between the ages of 30 and 50. You would have been impressed with the orderliness of their ways, and no one looking at such a composite photograph could avoid the conclusion that these people are capable of producing under proper guidance a standard of living much higher than they now have. The direction they must have can not be found in Europe with its multitude of wars and resulting hatreds, extending back over many centuries. This history is full of envy and suspicion, and who would look for confidence and leadership to such a record where the life of a great nation was concerned? A parallel reliance would be found in handing over a flock of lambs to a pack of hungry wolves, expecting the lambs would grow and multiply. Outside the historical objections to finding Russia's necessary leadership in Europe, it should be noted that the Great War has compelled Europe to lag in efficiency and understanding in many lines of work, and she must first prepare her own industrial machinery very carefully or be lost in the world competition that confronts her. The leadership Russia requires can be found only in the United States.

If that statement be true, it is the most powerful argument for the recognition of Russia diplomatically as well as through the methods of this treaty.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator by whom that statement was made?

Mr. BROOKHART. It was made by Col. Hugh L. Cooper, who built the Keokuk Dam and who was the Government's consulting engineer in the construction of the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals, and who has constructed more water-power projects than any man in this world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not know Mr. Cooper nor do I wish to qualify the eulogies bestowed upon him by the Senator from Iowa, but when Mr. Cooper says there is no industrial leadership available to Russia except in the United States and that Russia must look to this country for such leadership, I express dissent. I was in Russia shortly after the Senator was there, and in company with Senator Ladd, Congressman FREAR, Professor Johnson, and several others traveled nearly 10,000 miles through that rather dark and mysterious land. We met thousands and tens of thousands of people in all parts of Russia and made a close study of industrial and economic conditions. Russia, it is true, at that time lacked industrial leadership for the reason that most of the industrial leaders had either been killed or driven from Russia. But the communist leaders who precipitated the revolution and set up the Bolshevik régime discovered that their policy would prevent economic rehabilitation; that it was necessary to have technical men and competent economic leaders if industry was to revive and Russia be rescued from the pit into which it had been thrown by communism. Accordingly some of the owners and operators of business enterprises were being permitted to return to Russia.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think the Senator did not understand the idea that Colonel Cooper intended to express. He was not criticizing Russian leadership. In fact, as I read a little earlier from his speech, he praised them and said it was true that the outside leadership must come from the United States.

Mr. KING. If I may trespass further upon the Senator's time; when I was there not only had a considerable number of Russian industrial leaders returned but a number of foreigners, technical men and others who were competent to operate plants and develop important enterprises, were to be found in various parts of Russia. Germany and Sweden had furnished a number of men of the character referred to. Indeed, business and scientific persons were being employed in a number of the business enterprises there found. But the Bolshevist officials imposed such restriction and interposed so many obstacles that men of ability and skill and technical qualifications could not accomplish what they desired. The result was that some who had gone to Russia to help develop her industries were constrained to leave. On the same boat that carried former Senator Ladd, Congressman FREAR, and myself across the Atlantic were a number of technical oil men en route to the Baku oil fields on the Caspian Sea. Several months later we found them at Baku. They went there for the purpose of trying to reclaim oil wells which had been destroyed by the Bolsheviks and to apply modern technical methods to the development of other oil wells.

Mr. BROOKHART. Destroyed by the Bolsheviks? I would say they were destroyed by counter-revolutionists. Most of the destruction occurred in those counter-revolutions.

Mr. KING. I shall not stop to enter into a discussion with the Senator as to who destroyed hundreds of oil wells. I will say, however, that the Bolsheviks did injure many wells and discharge bombs in some. It is quite likely that some of the forces under Kolchak, who was seeking to preserve Russia from Bolshevik rule, contributed to the ruin which was wrought in the Baku oil fields.

But to return, the Americans, to whom I have referred and who were in Russia to aid in reviving the oil industry, were unable to accomplish the purpose for which they went. Some of them told me that it was practically impossible for them to work under the restrictions and regulations that were interposed and enforced by the Bolshevik régime.

Mr. BROOKHART. Will the Senator let me interrupt him at that point? I shall present charts before I finish showing that they did work under the Bolshevik Government, and showing the most wonderful development, almost beyond belief, that has occurred since them. My charts were prepared by Prof. A. A. Johnson, who was with the Senator.

Mr. KING. Let me complete my thought. Upon the same boat which carried me back to the United States were some of the men who had gone to Russia to help her, but they were forced to depart because of the obstacles interposed by the Bolshevists, which made their mission impossible. They threw up their contract and returned to the United States. They were technical men and competent to develop the oil fields of Russia, but soviet stupidity and arrogance made it impossible for them to remain.

It is quite likely that during the five years that have intervened since then progress has been made in Russia. The Bolshevists have profited by the mistakes which they made. They have gained experience and have secured from European countries a number of competent men to aid in their efforts to revive industry. Moreover, there has been improvement in the business methods employed, and many Russians have qualified themselves for excellent services in the various enterprises that have received attention.

In the Baku oil district there were more than 5,000 producing oil wells in 1914 and 1915. When I was there scarcely 1,200 were in operation, and the yield was far below normal. But the point I am trying to make is that there are technical experts and competent business men that can be obtained in Europe who are willing to accept employment and give the benefit of their technical skill and knowledge to the development of the resources of Russia. That is particularly true of the Germans. But the impediments offered by the Russians when I was there were so great as to prevent such aid being furnished.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator mean by that statement that he is opposed to the American experts and American leaders availing themselves of this greatest opportunity in all the world?

Mr. KING. I do not concede it is the greatest opportunity in all the world. The same opportunity has been offered to Germany and other European countries, but has proven disappointing. Russia wants capital—whether from America or elsewhere, and any country that will supply capital can find in Russia an eager market. I do not speak of the security that will be offered. However, I am glad to see Americans, as well as nationals from other countries, visit Russia. They will aid in developing Russia and in bringing greater liberty to the Russian people. When I returned from Russia I recommended that under certain conditions trade relations be entered into with the Soviet Government, although there were no obstacles to trade, except such as Russia imposed. The trouble was that the Bolshevist Government controls all foreign trade, and at that time Russia had limited exports and could purchase but a limited volume of commodities. When I saw Chicherin and the other leaders of the Communists—and I saw them all except Lenin, who was then dying—I stated that the only conditions that I would insist upon as a sine qua non to the recognition of the Bolshevik régime were, first, that the Bolshevik Government should dissociate itself from the Third Internationale, and no longer subsidize it and employ it to spread revolution and disorder in other countries and particularly the United States; and, secondly, that it should observe its international obligations as other governments observed their obligations. I said that so far as the debts owing the United States, amounting to approximately $300,000,000, I was willing to forego them.

I wanted to help Russia. I sympathized with her people and was desirous of seeing them develop and obtain liberty and justice.

I could see that one of the instrumentalities to effectuate reforms was contact with the outside world. I wanted Americans and Europeans to go into Russia, believing that it would tend to break down barriers and liberate the people from the tyranny of Bolshevism. I believe that trade between Russia and the outside world would do much to destroy Bolshevism and advance the cause of freedom among the Russian people. However, the leaders refused to dissociate themselves from the Third Internationale and continued to maintain that sinister organization to disturb the peace of other nations and to promote a proletarian revolution. I may add, however, that I have no fears as to the results of their efforts. Communism is discredited, and it will fail in Russia and will exercise diminishing influence in other countries.

If the Soviet Government will cease its efforts to destroy the peace of the world and its efforts to injure the United States and will meet its international commitments, I should look with favor upon changing our policy toward that Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. Willing to forget the so-called debts?

Mr. KING. Oh, I stated that. That would not be, in my mind, an obstacle to recognizing the Soviet Government. I agree with the Senator. The Bolshevik Government is a stable government; those who believed that it would gradually fall were mistaken. The Bolshevik régime may exist for 25 years or for a longer period. It may be many years before the autocracy of Bolshevism will be overcome. But democracy is gaining in Russia; it will come gradually through education and development and contacts with the world and because progress is inevitable. Little by little the dark wall of Bolshevism will be forced back and ultimately Russia will become a constitutional democratic government and take high rank among the nations of the earth.

Mr. BROOKHART. A cooperative republic is my prophecy. The Senator mentioned the Third Internationale. That is a propagandist institution. That is something like the Power Trust in the United States as disclosed by the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. Probably it may be half as dangerous as our propaganda of that kind in this country.

So far as I am concerned, I am not one of these Americans who believe that my Government is so weak or flimsy that it can be overthrown by propaganda from anybody, Third Internationale or fourth or sixteenth or any other internationale. I believe American institutions can take care of themselves against propaganda from anywhere and everywhere and everybody. This talk of putting a lid on all kinds of open discussion of questions is un-American to me. But the species of secret propaganda, such as we have had disclosed by the Power Trust investigation, I think needs some serious attention in our country probably before the Soviet Government recognizes us.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? The Senator is very generous.

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I do not believe that the Senator is quite right historically, and he will pardon me for so saying, in his allusion to the Third Internationale. It is more than a propaganda organization. The Senator must know that the Third Internationale is a creation of the Communist Party; that it is an instrumentality set up by the communist organization which dominates Russia; that the communist organization, which was controlled by nine men when I was there and is controlled now by seven or nine men, determines who shall be the leaders of the Bolshevik government and who shall be officers in the Third Internationale. When I was there Trotski was a member of the Third Internationale, Zinovieff was president, and Radak was one of the leaders. Lenin was vice president. I visited their headquarters, which were maintained by the Bolshevik government and the Communist Party. They were subsidized and maintained by it. The printing press, which was operated by the Bolshevik government under the control of the Communist Party, printed the propaganda of the Third Internationale, and the Bolshevik leaders frankly confessed that the Third Internationale was the agency by which the propaganda, to use the Senator's expression, of the communist organization was being carried throughout the world.

They admitted that the mission of the Communist Party and the Third Internationale, its agent, was to bring all nations under the control of a proletariat dictatorship, and they declared that the Third Internationale would continue its activities in all countries and seek to undermine governments and dislocate their economic and industrial life, with a view to bringing about social and political revolution.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I shall have to take some of the time myself, and I want to say a few words there.

Mr. KING. I shall not further trespass on the Senator's time.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Third Internationale, of course, is a political party. It may be a bad one. It is, however, not a grafting party. Grafting is not in existence in high places in Russia. The Russian Government is honest; its officers are not selling out. Czarists themselves told me that if an ordinary man got caught grafting he was given about three months in jail; if he were a member of the Communist Party—that is, an ordinary member of the Labor Party or the Peasant Party—they would tell him that he ought to know better, and they would give him about six months in jail; but if he were a member of the Third Internationale or the dictatorship, which the Senator from Utah has described, they took him out and shot him. In our country it appears that the higher up such an offender may be the freer he goes from punishment.

Now, about the propaganda as to overthrowing the world. That has an American sound to me. I can remember in the history of the American Revolution statements were made that we were going to overthrow the kings and potentates of all the earth. In every Fourth of July speech we still declare for that idea. No doubt the Senator from Utah has done so himself. I stopped in England on my way home and talked to the undersecretary of foreign affairs on the Fourth of July. He said, "Great Britain had not as yet recognized Russia, and the serious objection they had was the propaganda for revolution." He said, "This propaganda is a bar to any recognition of the Soviet government." "Well," I said to him, "We Americans can not say very much about that, because it was 147 years ago to-day that we promulgated the greatest revolutionary document in all the history of the world—and," I said, "We triumphed in that revolution." Then later, when Maximillian had conquered Mexico, we supported a revolution of the people, sent an army to the Rio Grande under General Sheridan, and Maximillian was driven from the throne and killed. Still later we supported a revolution in Cuba to drive a king from the American continent and we prevailed and succeeded in that revolution.

Then finally, at the end of the World War, the President of the United States, from the White House, called upon the German people to rise in revolution, drive out their Kaiser, and create a government with which we could treat, the greatest act of the life of Woodrow Wilson. I said, "Now, after we Americans have backed so much revolution as all of that, we can not criticize these poor Bolshevists for being mere revolutionists."

Mr. President, Colonel Cooper, after stating that the leadership Russia requires can be found only in the United States, says:

> No other country is so highly qualified for this job as we are.

I think that is quite an accurate statement.

> Our practical experience, geographical location, and historical record fit Russia's needs perfectly. Then why don't we take on this great opportunity? Before such a question can be properly understood or answered, we must devote time to some review of past history and its imprint on the minds of the heterogeneous multitude we are considering.
>
> For about 1,000 years prior to 1917 around 95 per cent of the population of Russia was undoubtedly exploited without mercy by the remaining 5 per cent. The terrors of those centuries need not be recounted here. Even the enemies of the present Government now resident in Russia tell you freely that the revolution in 1917 was as inevitable as the rising of the sun. From 1917 to 1921 there were more revolutions and famines from within. During these four years one hundred and thirty to one hundred and forty million war-worn, starving, deluded, sick people went mad, ripped off all restraint of law they had previously known. The pendulum of frenzy swung out to the limit of possibility. The French Revolution was enacted over again on a much larger scale. We know that people from time immemorial have had leaders. They have never been able to do much without leaders.
>
> Even the wild geese of the air have a leader, and when this tremendous body of people had torn loose their fetters and were at last free, the only voice that rang out, "Follow me," was the voice of Lenin proclaiming his Marxism and communism. Among other ideas preached in effect by Lenin, was the belief that everything that was in vogue in the discarded régime was wrong and therefore its opposite must be right. Very simple and seductive reasoning this. Every listener's mind had been well fertilized for the sprouting of such seed.

At this point I want to digress to describe some of the characteristics of Lenin as I discovered them to be and as they were told me by Czarists still remaining in Russia.

The last day I was in Moscow, Colonel Haskell brought in a large number of Czarists, who had been working for him. They had been aristocrats, and one of them had been editor of one of the great newspapers during the Czarist régime. I asked them about Lenin and about the Soviet Government. Every one of them said to me that it was an honest government and that Lenin was really a great humanitarian and a great intellectual genius. They said that the revolution originally was a peaceful enough revolution; that there was not a great amount of bloodshed; that it went on in that way for a considerable length of time, and that the bloodshed which Colonel Cooper described started when the counterrevolutionists began operations with our assistance and encouragement. We were directly responsible for a large part of that by sending two armies into Russia with Kolchak in Siberia and with Yudenitch at Archangel.

The testimony of Raymond Robins, who was representing the American Red Cross in Russia at that time, before the Senate corroborates every word of the statements made to me. I talked with our military attachés who were there at that time, and they corroborate every word of it. About six months after the revolution was organized before the counter-revolutions began Colonel Robins decided to come home. He obtained a letter from Lenin—a passport, if you want to call it that—and started through Siberia. That letter carried him 11,000 miles through Russia, and was recognized as authoritative everywhere, showing the condition of security and peacefulness in the country at that time.

Then the counter-revolutions were organized and we sent an army to Archangel to encourage and help Denekin, and another went with Kolchak into Siberia. No more bloodthirsty outfits ever went forth in any country than those of Kolchak, Denekin, and Yudenitch. They were the ones who brought on the famines and the conditions that ruined Russia, and we were assisting them.

Perhaps at this time I might mention in this connection something about the debt that Russia owes other countries of the world. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is willing to forgive that debt so far as the American Government is concerned, because in international law the Soviet Government had a valid counterclaim against all of it. We were aiding and abetting in all of that Great War damage.

Let me suppose that we were in trouble with England and that Russia sent an army into Canada and down and across our country, assisting an English army in the destruction of our country, and then we triumphed in the end and drove them out, as the soviet did the foreign armies which invaded the soil of Russia. In international law would we have no claim against them for the damage they wrought against us? They have a valid claim, but no one will ever hear of that claim when the various chancelleries of the world discuss the idea of the recognition of the debts of Russia. They forget that the Russian Government has a counterclaim against France and against England and against us, perhaps, several times greater than the claims we have against Russia. There will be no trouble to settle this debt problem when that principle is recognized by both countries. The Senator from Utah has recognized the principle so far as the United States is concerned, and I hope he will be able to convince the State Department of its validity.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Iowa does not assume that my willingness to forgive the obligations of Russia to the United States rests upon the assumptions which he has suggested. My willingness to forego that debt rests upon other grounds. I may say, broadly speaking, it rests upon my desire to help the Russian people; to aid them in the tragic struggle which is before them before they are emancipated from communist rule.

I saw, I may say to the Senator, when I was there, hundreds of thousands of people who were starving or suffering from malnutrition. I saw mothers who had, it was alleged, eaten their own children. If one's heart could be wrung, it would have been wrung in going into the Volga region and witnessing the sorrow, the tragedy, the suffering, the starvation, and death there in evidence. I came home sick at heart because of the inhumanity of man and the great suffering which, like the irresistible tide, had everwhelmed the Russian people.

I offered the first bill in the Senate to give them succor and relief, because I knew of the awful situation then existing. I recognize in the Russian people a capacity for mighty development; and sooner or later they will carry high, in my opinion, the banner of civilization, progress, and liberty.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, it took 2,000 years to make an Anglo-Saxon after he had reached about the present stage of civilization of many of the Russian people, but it will not take that long to bring Russia up as the Senator has predicted.

Since he has mentioned their suffering and the famines, I want to discuss the causes of those conditions a little more in detail. In south Russia there is as fine land as there is anywhere in the world. I rode across six or seven hundred miles of that country. It looked like my own State of Iowa, which I have always described as the best agricultural spot on earth. I saw thousands and tens of thousands of acres of corn. Planting was carried on much as it is in Iowa. I did not know they raised corn until I saw it there. Colonel Haskell told me that he had furnished some seed even from Iowa to plant some of that corn. I observed all of that; but I learned also that occasionally they have what they call a famine year in Russia. That is, they have a year in which they get no rain and no crops; and in order to meet that year they lay by a surplus to feed their stock and upon which to live during what they call the famine year; and that occurs even in this best part of Russia.

The peasants know of this condition. It has been a thousand years of history, for that matter. They had their surplus; and then Denekin came in there with his counterrevolutionary army; and Kolchak went into Siberia, and went far, even into western Russia, with his counterrevolutionary army, and we had an American army along with him, not fighting much, but aiding and abetting him just the same; and Yudenitch went in at Archangel with his counterrevolutionary army, and we had an American army there aiding and abetting him. The stories of bloodshed and torture that these counterrevolutionists perpetrated upon those innocent people are as bad as anything in the Soviet Revolution. They destroyed this surplus; and before the surplus could be replaced the famine year was upon Russia, and those people did die of starvation.

I was in villages where 60 per cent of the people died of starvation. The survivors showed me their tombs. They probably would have nearly all died if Colonel Haskell and Mr. Hoover had not gone in there with their great relief administration. Haskell went in under suspicion. The people believed he was there for the purpose of starting another counterrevolution. They thought it was a ruse on the part of the American Government to get inside and then make them trouble. They set their spies upon Haskell; and everything we have heard in the spying system of the Cheka, of that invisible institution that spies out people in Russia, was used upon Haskell and his force there. But within about three months Haskell convinced them that he was on the square. Haskell is a big American. He is now major general of the New York National Guard. Haskell, after he convinced them, became their friend; and I will say to you that in Russia, from Trotsky down to the lowest peasant, I found no one hostile to America, due to the great work of this great American in an American way.

That is the inside history of this famine and this great calamity. We were a large part of the cause of even that, and we owed them the $24,000,000 that we appropriated. We were not doing any more than we ought to have done to relieve them. Now prosperity has come to them; and we will see, as we go along from that low level, how they have risen since 1923 up to the present day. My authority is Professor Johnson, who accompanied Senator Ladd and Senator KING on their Russian trip.

But, Mr. President, I am anxious that this statement of our own great American expert be heard and be in the RECORD, and I therefore desire to proceed with the description as given by Colonel Cooper.

In the old days the people suffered from official and private graft and greed to a frightful extent.

Everybody knows that Russia was the worst country on earth for graft and corruption in the days of the Czar, and it is my belief that it is the freest of graft of any country in the world to-day. I think graft is absolutely eliminated; and that is a good deal to be said for the advancement of that people.

Colonel Cooper continues:

The whole world knows this to be a fact. The churches came in for a lot of just criticism. Marriage, home, capital, private ownership of property, vast landed estates, whose royal owners never even knew the boundaries of the same, were all viewed from afar by a peasantry treated like slaves, and all these conditions and institutions were thrown overnight into the frenzied fires of hatred without any calm reflection as to what the effects would be. The new order under Lenin decided to do away with everything that went on in the old days, and boldly substituted an entirely new plan of life and government never before tried out. The cold revelations of actual experience soon told Lenin of many errors in his plan and since 1921–22 Lenin and his successors have been compelled to modify to a radical degree many of the ideas with which they started.

Mr. President, they have modified just one idea. It is a great idea. The one they have adopted is the greatest economic idea in the world. When the Soviet Government first took over the government of Russia they confiscated the cooperatives and turned them into governmental institutions. As this statement of Colonel Cooper points out, that did not work so well so they turned them back; and in 1923, when I was there, they were just publishing the last message of Lenin to the Soviet Congress. That message called upon the government and the people to develop and to encourage cooperative economic organization in every direction.

Mr. Kinchuk, manager of the Centrasoyous, the great cooperative institution, the wholesale and foreign export corporation of the cooperatives, told me that under the help of the Soviet Government in the last year or two their volume of business had increased to six times what it was under the Czar; and I will show you a chart of an increase almost unbelievable since that date. The change to cooperation is the great change in the economic policy of the Soviet Government.

The Government has not relinquished the title to real property in that country. The title to all the real property of Russia is in the government, and it is held firmly there. They allot it to the peasants and to the dwellers in the cities for use for life. They can will away their use, but not the title. They can not speculate in it; they can not sell or dispose of it, and it remains a government property. Upon the question of cooperative or governmental industries, however, the government has yielded to the cooperatives; and I think that is largely the cause of the great success that has occurred in Russia since that date.

I have been called a Bolshevist; and if believing in cooperative economics is Bolshevism, I am the most guilty person in the world.

Returning to Colonel Cooper's statement:

Nevertheless, when you add all the pluses and minuses algebraically, you must admit that a marvelous work has been accomplished by these hard-working idealists or plead guilty to prejudice and blindness.

That is what is the matter in this country—prejudice and blindness. Why, big business in the United States has been afraid to have the plain truth told about the situation. It fears that some of these cooperative ideas are going to spread to our country. It has no fear of communism, but it is afraid of the cooperative movement. This big business institution in America is the most cowardly thing in all the world. It will not stand in the face of the facts. It runs away from them, hides them, covers them up with propaganda, as was shown in the Power Trust investigation of the Federal Trade Commission.

The sincerity of these idealists is no more to be questioned than is the sincerity of Christ's apostles.

That is Colonel Cooper's statement, and that statement is true.

We may well have sound differences as to the wisdom of what is being done, but we can not honestly accuse them of hypocrisy. In judging these people we must remember that their present-day views of life were formed through centuries of oppression and outlooks through prison bars. When the revolution ended in 1917 over 40,000 political prisoners were turned loose to add their pent-up energies to the new era they erroneously thought was the road to human happiness.

It is important that we get a general idea of what has been accomplished by the soviets up to date, for from such a picture we may learn much that has a definite bearing on what can be done by these people in the future along industrial lines. What have they accomplished since 1921–22?

First. They have produced a stable government throughout their entire boundaries. They have less crime of all kinds than we have in New York City, Chicago, Herrin, Ill., and several other nauseous American crime centers that might be mentioned.

Second. Their financial system is on a gold basis and their State bank holds about $135,000,000 in gold and its equivalent in foreign securities as a basis for its note issue.

Third. They are successfully operating a good railway system over 50,000 miles long, and even British travelers tell you the difficult trans-Siberian service is surprisingly good.

Fourth. They have abolished graft in high places, and for the most part in low places.

Fifth. Their city streets are clean and well lighted by electricity, although the cost of electricity is too great to permit of its general use.

Mind, I read to you that the average Russian had an income of only $32 a year.

Sixth. They are spending about $90,000,000 a year on education and about $27,000,000 a year on social-welfare work.

Seventh. Since 1922–23 they have purchased in the markets of the outside world raw materials and manufactured goods of a total of more than $1,100,000,000, of which the United States supplied about $235,000,000.

This financial crowd that is not willing to recognize Russia politically is willing to recognize them when it can sell them $235,000,000 worth of goods.

No graft and no default of even a kopek stands out in this record—

You can not say that even for the record of the United States, after what the Senate has disclosed in the last few years—it has been carefully searched in more ways than one.

Eighth. In the last three years the soviets bought raw cotton in the United States of a total value of $130,000,000 at a purchasing cost of one-twentieth of 1 per cent.

There is your cooperative purchasing cost. There is the elimination of the combination of middlemen's profits that are oppressing our people in the United States. They are eliminated in this system. One-twentieth of 1 per cent is their purchasing cost of this $130,000,000 of American cotton.

Ninth. Their government-operated Textile Syndicate manufactured and sold to Russian consumers in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1926, goods of a gross value of $750,000,000. For the fiscal year that will end September 30, 1927, the estimated business of the Textile Syndicate is $1,150,000,000.

There is no comparison like this in all the world for growth and development. Russia is at work, and Russia under this government, however much you may condemn it, is coming back; and this property and this wealth as it is produced in Russia belongs to the people of Russia, and not to a few individuals who have acquired it through corporation organization, or through economic combinations, or through special favors of laws of their country.

Tenth. The Government revenue of all kinds for the year ending September 30, 1926, was $1,927,700,000 and the expenses for the same period are $1,732,400,000.

They had a surplus of nearly $200,000,000.

The estimated same figures for the year that will end September 30, 1927, are: Receipts, $2,485,000,000; expenses, $2,229,973,000.

Again they will have a surplus of over $200,000,000.

Eleventh. In the year ending September 30, 1926, the Russian exports amounted to $334,000,000. This amount was made up in part as follows:

Cereals, all kinds, $79,000,000.
Eggs, $11,800,000.
Butter, $15,400,000.
Petroleum, $38,000,000.
Timber, $28,800,000.

In considering the foregoing statistics, you quite naturally ask at least two important questions. One, "How sure are you of your Govment-quoted figures?" My answer is, that all my data has been given me by Mr. Yazikoff, the chief statistician of the government and a very able, experienced man in this line of work. His records are continuously under the active scrutiny of internal party criticism, also the scrutiny of a bureau especially created to hunt out error. By the time government records are given out they are accepted as correct even by the opposition. Next you will say, "How efficiently do they perform all this extensive work?" My answer is as follows: The testimony of various governmental officials in high places, as recorded in many official reports and speeches printed in full in the newspapers, is all to the effect that "Up to now these achievements of ours have been accomplished with much waste."

That is their own judgment upon themselves.

"In the future we must be more efficient, because the cost of living is still far too high in Russia." In the foregoing we see only a part of what has been accomplished for and by these 140,000,000 people in about six years. When we consider that the heads of the Government are without previous experience in government and that nearly every one of them has been for years in Czardom's Siberian prisons I am willing this audience shall make up its own mind as to whether or not we have been considering something we should think some more about. In what I have hastily sketched you get an outline of what produced the present conditions, what the general industrial condition is, and what room there is for economic progress, and how this economic advancement can best be assured. Having in mind all that has been said to you, I ask you, What are we Americans going to do about this extraordinary situation in Russia? That it is extraordinary you will not question. The men at the heads of the Government and all the successive strata down to and including 120,000,000 peasants are, all over Russia, crying for American help, not so much financial help as technical help, aided by American machinery of every description. These people have a great confidence in anything that is made in America.

I will say that confidence was given to those people by this same Col. William N. Haskell. I want to give the Senate a little description of how he operated the relief administration. He looked over the situation and said "Down around Odessa you need a new road." Their wagon roads in that country are horrible. "You put these starving people to work building that road, and I will pay them in these relief supplies." They did that, and they built those roads. The only good roads I saw in Russia were the "Haskell's." They call them "Haskell's." Colonel Haskell's name has gone into the language, and it means a good road.

He said to them, "You need a hospital, and you need a children's home for these war orphans, and a children's school, and here are these old czarist buildings, occupied by the aristocrats in their day. They can be refitted and rebuilt into the best of hospitals, schools, and homes. If you will put these starving workmen to work, I will pay them with these supplies."

I saw a hospital at Kiev, down in the Ukraine, that was just being finished, part of it already being occupied, which was in as fine shape as any hospital in the city of Washington. It was one of the "Haskell's" built in that way, and paid for by the relief administration that we sent over there. There are many like stories of children's homes and schools.

The big mind of that man, Colonel Haskell, did as much to revive and restore prosperity in Russia as anything that happened. I asked Mr. Hoover if he was the author of that himself and he said "No," that it was Haskell's own plan when he went over there.

Colonel Cooper continued:

Last September I talked with three Russian chauffeurs, one of whom talked English and thought I was an Englishman, who all insisted that Buick cars are superior to Rolls-Royces. These people, with an abundant reason, believe in America as the one place in the world where they can expect help, free from envy and free from intrigue. As concrete proof of the existence of this belief, I can tell you that in the last eight months, after spirited competition with European engineering firms, the soviets have made three contracts—

I am sorry the Senator from Utah is not here now. I would like to have him know what has been going on in regard to contracts in Russia lately—the soviets have made three contracts with three different American engineering concerns for the design and supervision of new construction in Russia, to cost in excess of $200,000,000. The fees paid these firms will not be affected by American recognition. The values of these contracts to Russia and American machinery manufacturers will be greatly enhanced by American recognition. In my opinion, no opportunity for world service of commensurate magnitude will ever knock at our door again. They need, in addition to our technical services, our machinery, tools, and equipment, and general supplies incident thereto, of an aggregate cost that simply staggers our comprehension. Without these aids Russia can never take her place as a good neighbor in the family of nations.

I will say that I can not agree with Colonel Cooper in that particular conclusion, because the development he has already shown proves that they will continue to develop, and I think the only difference is that their progress will be slower and they will be required to rely more particularly upon their own resources. But this whole account proves the success of the future.

I don't like many things I see in Russia. At home we have always fought polygamy, and yet for years we have recognized governments where polygamy was practiced.

For my part I am in complete accord with the insistence in Washington that the Third Internationale propaganda in America must cease; that payment of the Kerensky debt must be agreed upon; and that American owners must be compensated for property seized by the soviets before the United States acknowledges the Moscow Government.

I have already discussed that proposition to some extent. In the United States our Government seized all the property of the German nationals and held it against damage that was done to our nationals in Germany and until a settlement was had. The Russians have the same right to hold that property until the damages of our armies, assisting those counter-revolutionists, are settled and accounted for, and in that case I fear the balance would be against us rather than in favor of us.

What I want to know is why the representatives of 250,000,000 people with hundreds of good reasons for being on a most friendly working basis, and with, in reality, only the one question of propaganda to be thrashed out, can not find a way to sit down somewhere with all the facts on the table and agree. I believe the time has arrived when Washington should initiate a strong effort to convince Moscow of the folly of the world revolution idea represented by their Third Internationale, and some other ideas that need smoothing out. Unless some powerful disinterested national influence, such as America only can exert, comes along at an early date Europe will, in my opinion, again drift toward certain chaos.

That statement is in line with the reasons Colonel Cooper set out in the beginning. He points out that, man for man, our resources are seven times as great in the United States as are those in Europe, and then he points out that the great resources of Europe are in Russia and that more than half of them unused are in that country. Therefore, he is working to the logical conclusion of his first premise in this statement.

Europe can never have peace with 40 per cent of its population and more than half of its natural resources fenced out of economic consideration by a mass of century-old wranglings. America is the only nation with the background and ability that can give Russia successfully the counsel she needs at this critical time. We can perform this great service to the world without entangling alliances and without the sacrifice of our dignity or honor. Notes, accusations, and policies of letting them "stew in their own juice" have failed and should be abandoned. Constructive common sense should be given a chance to prove its value to suffering European humanity. For some time I have believed the major difficulty in this, as in practically all matters, is ignorance.

In that Colonel Cooper has spoken wisely again. Ignorance is what has turned the sentiment of the American people against recognition of Russia. If the facts were actually known among all our people there would be no division of sentiment, except among some of that financial group who fear cooperative development in America.

Sleeping-car window observations, newspaper stories, sporadic individual, official, and private reports will never get us anywhere with this great task. I think the United States Chamber of Commerce should be persuaded to send to Russia at once a nonpolitical investigating committee of at least 25 high-grade men, and keep them over there for at least six months.

I do not think they accepted that advice.

At the conclusion of such an investigation lots of present-day delusions in America and in Russia would be removed. To get the United States Chamber of Commerce to undertake such a work will require the help of many good men.

Why does it require the help of good men to get the United States Chamber of Commerce to go out and even find out the facts, the truth of the matter? What is the matter with the United States Chamber if that is its attitude toward truth?

It has occurred to me that if a few of your delegates to Stockholm could return via Leningrad for a 10 or 15 day trip through Russia they would thus get at least some additional knowledge above what they now have. Let these visitors talk informally with Premier Ryckoff and Foreign Minister Chicherin and weigh their views. When such a visit was completed the visitors could make up their minds as to whether they would approach the United States Chamber of Commerce in favor of the large committee.

Before I left Moscow three weeks ago I talked over with Premier Ryckoff both of these visits in a very tentative way without, of course, making any commitment, except that I might later talk to you in advocacy of these plans. "Tell them," said Mr. Ryckoff, "they will be very welcome. Tell them also, first, about all the bad you see in us, and then, if you know of any good we do, tell them about this also." If some of you later decide to go to Russia on this trip, you can do so piloted from Stockholm for the entire route by an official representative of the American-Russian Chamber of Commerce of New York, who will be at the Stockholm meeting and be able to provide you, in Stockholm, with soviet entrance and exist visas for the soviet union.

I think perhaps the balance of this is formal matter, so I ask that the remainder of the address be inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Soviet Government will provide free special transportation for you all the time you are in their country. Hotel expenses must be paid by the visitors. I profoundly hope that a much better plan than I have here proposed will be found to start getting these two countries together. My ideas may be, and probably are, crude, but if their presentation to your attention results in a beginning of something besides long-distance talk, I shall be amply rewarded and correspondingly happy. Recognition of Russia is absolutely essential at once, if America is to do anything worth while for Russia and America. A failure to seize this great opportunity will create a just cause for perpetual humiliation at home and will result in an everlasting hurt to this people who now so anxiously plead with us to come over and help them build a new Russia. If we fail, Germany will try to take our rightful place. She can't do the work as it should be done for many reasons. Germany at best can only extend credits to Russia at a high cost to the soviets, which credits, of course, are only possible via America. All that has gone before boils down to this: Do you consider the Russian situation of sufficient importance to let it win from you some personal effort along indicated lines, or is the job too far from home?

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I want now to review the facts and figures relating to some of the conditions and developments in Russia since 1913. I very recently received a chart of the developments in Russia up to November, 1928. This is published by A. A. Johnson and associates, Springfield, Mass., United States of America. Professor Johnson, former dean of an agricultural college in one of the Western States and a noted economist, was one of the experts with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and former Senator Ladd when they visited Russia. Since then he has been back many times and has made a study and charted the situation so we can see at once what has developed in that country. I want to develop some of the figures and then I shall ask that the charts on the pages which I have numbered may be inserted in the RECORD. I am informed that my request to have the charts inserted in the RECORD will have to go to the Committee on Printing, and that, of course, may be done. I shall call attention to the numbers of the charts as I proceed.

Chart No. 30 shows the large industries of the Union of the Socialist Soviet Republics. This chart starts with 1913 and ends with 1928. The figures are given in million rubles in pre-war values or prices. In 1913 the production was 5,621,000,000 rubles. In 1914 it was 5,691,000,000. In 1915 it was 6,391,000,000. This shows a considerable stimulation because of the war. In 1916 it was 6,830,000,000, which is the highest peak that Russian industrial development reached. Then came the soviet revolution in 1917, in the latter part of the year, when it dropped down to 4,344,000,000. In 1918, with counterrevolutions going on, it dropped away down to 1,941,000,000. It continued to drop in 1919 to 1,448,000,000. In 1920 it reached the bottom with 1,000,000,000. From that date began its recovery. In 1921 it increased to 1,162,000,000; in 1922 to 1,527,000,000; in 1923 to 1,981,000,000; in 1924 to 2,530,000,000; in 1925 to 3,958,000,000; in 1926 to 5,745,000,000; in 1927 to 6,723,000,000; and in 1928 to 7,588,000,000, a part of this last latter figure being estimated. I doubt if any other country in Europe shows such a recovery as that.

On Chart No. 31 is shown the yearly output per worker. This illustrates the efficiency of the workers during the various years. In 1913 the output per worker was 2,162 rubles; in 1914, 2,133 rubles; in 1915, 2,418 rubles; in 1916, 2,334 rubles. These are the highest peaks reached. Then came the revolution and it dropped to 1,436 rubles in 1917, down to 769 rubles in 1918, to 712 rubles in 1919, and reached the bottom at 629 rubles in 1920. Then began the recovery in 1921, when it reached 663 rubles; in 1922, 1,201 rubles; in 1923, 1,342 rubles; in 1924, 1,624 rubles; in 1925, 2,112 rubles; in 1926, 2,448 rubles; in 1927, 2,678 rubles; and in 1928, a small part of that being estimated, 2,993 rubles, which is nearly 200 rubles higher than the highest point in war development.

No. 32 is a chart of the cotton industry of the Soviet Republic. The production of cotton goods is given in millions of poods. I have forgotten just how much a pood weighs, but it is their standard over there. The reporter informs me it is 36.113 pounds. In 1913 they produced 25,900,000 poods of cotton; in 1914, 26,400,000; in 1915, 26,300,000; in 1916, 21,400,000; in 1917, 17,900,000. Then following the revolution it

CHART 30

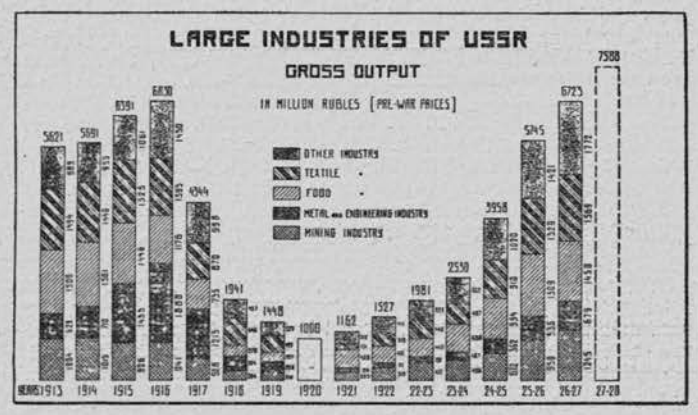

CHART 31

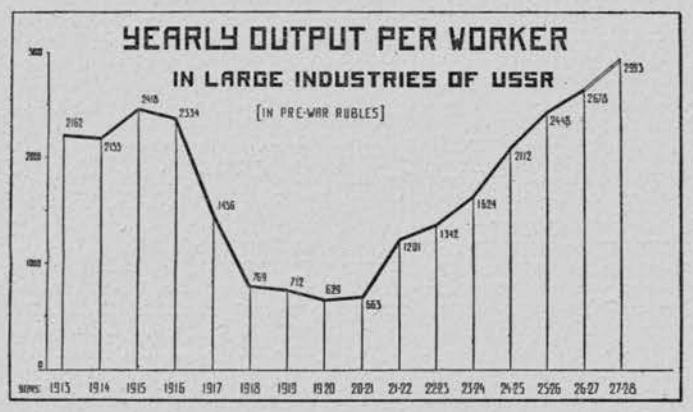

CHART 32

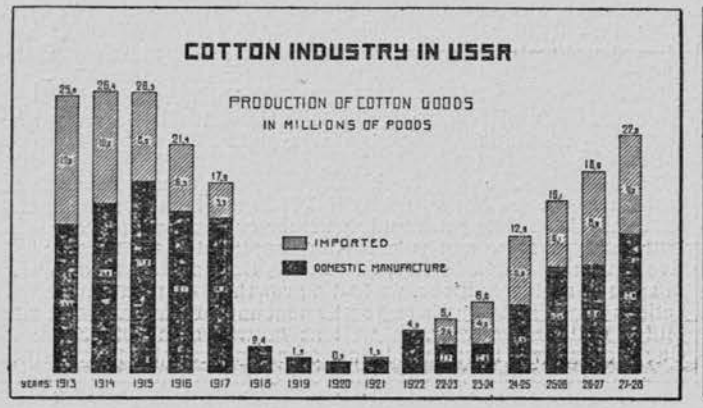

CHART 36

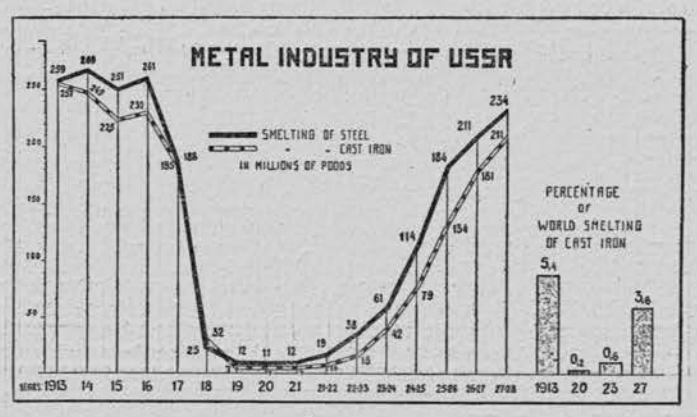

CHART 37

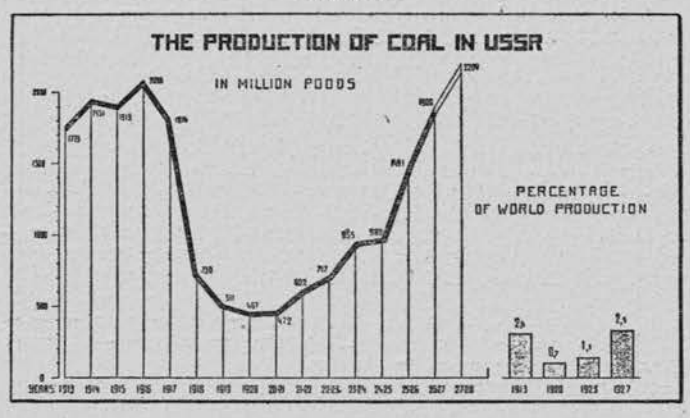

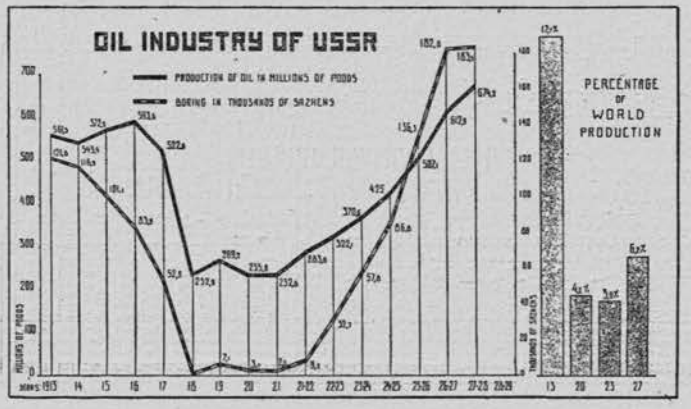

CHART 38

dropped to 2,400,000 in 1918, 1,300,000 in 1919, and 900,000 in 1920. In 1921 it came back to 1,300,000, in 1922 it was up to 4,000,000, in 1923 it was up to 5,100,000; in 1924, 6,600,000; 1925, 12,900,000; 1926, 16,100,000; in 1927, 18,900,000; and in 1928, 22,000,000. It will be noted that the highest peak was 26,400,000, so that the cotton industry has almost recovered and is almost back to its pre-war status.

No. 36 is a chart of the metal industry. This shows the smelting of steel and the smelting of cast iron in millions of poods. In the smelting of steel the highest peak was reached in 1914, being 269,000,000 poods. In 1928 it is back to 234,000,000, very close again to the pre-war level, after dropping in 1920 to 11,000,000 poods. It also shows the smelting of cast iron reached its highest peak in 1913 at 257,000,000 and in 1928 was back to 211,000,000. Of course, these industries were very largely destroyed in the war and in the counter-revolution, and yet they have made a recovery nearly back to normal pre-war times.

Chart No. 37 relates to the production of coal. This chart shows that the production of coal reached 2,096,000,000 poods in 1916. That was the highest peak reached. In 1928 it had reached 2,204,000,000 poods, that figure surpassing the pre-war production. Compare that with England and it will be seen that there is a vast difference in the recovery of Russia as compared to the great empire of the world.

Now, on Chart No. 38 I come to the oil industry, and I am sorry the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not here, because in the beginning he mentioned something about oil contracts and about some men who went over there and could not get contracts good enough to satisfy them and came back. But here is what the oil industry has done: This is the production of oil in millions of poods and the borings are shown in thousands of sazhens. The oil production before the war in 1913 was 561,300,000 poods. It raised under war stimulation to only 593,600,000 poods, but in 1928 it had reached 674,200,000 poods, so that it has already surpassed the pre-war production.

The boring of oil wells was 121,800 sazhens in 1913, and it has now reached 183,300 sazhens, a considerable gain over the pre-war level, showing that the oil industry of Russia has not only recovered, but has made a very substantial advance already.

On Chart No. 40 are found statistics as to electric-power stations in Russia. This is one of the most interesting charts. The power production, in millions of kilowatt-hours—that sounds American, all right—before the war in 1913 was 1,255. In 1923 that dropped down as low on this chart as 281, the lowest point shown, and from that low point of 281 it climbed in 1927—1928 not being given—to 1,800, or nearly 50 per cent greater than the pre-war production.

CHART 40

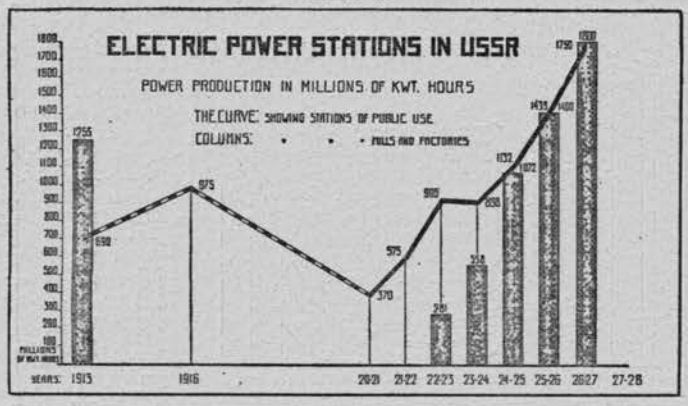

CHART 49

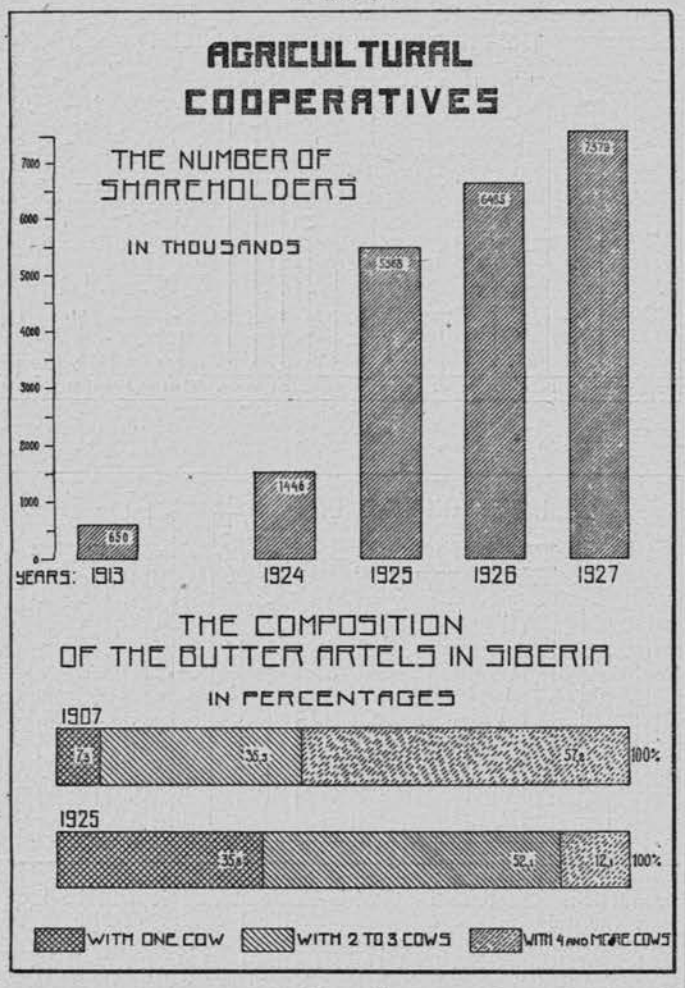

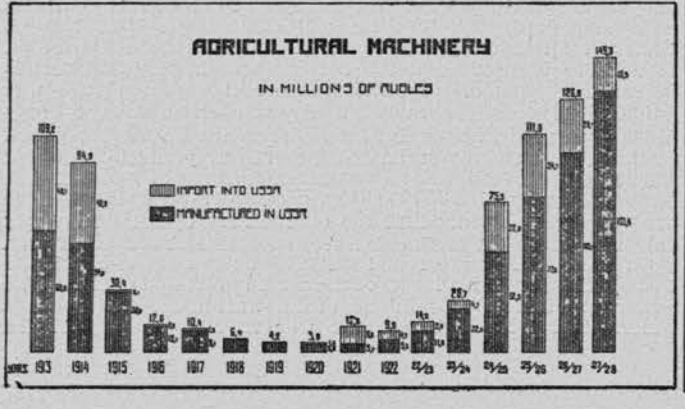

CHART 54

Figures as to railway transportation are shown in Chart No. 41 of this book, but will not be reproduced. This chart shows the movement of goods in billion pood versts, which compares to our ton-miles in the United States. The highest point reached before the war was 4,753, while in 1927–28 it had reached 5,239, a considerable advance or increase over the pre-war rate.

There are many other interesting charts here showing working days in the industries and the wages of the workers, and there is a showing of great improvement in all these lines. The working day in Russia in 1913, as stated in the chart on page 43, was 10 hours; in 1927 it was 7.4 hours.

The wages of the worker are given in pre-war rubles, or pre-war prices. We hear a great deal to the effect that while the worker gets a big wage in money, it will not buy anything, but this comparison has to do with what the laborer's wages buy. The highest they reached in 1913 was 25 rubles, while in 1928 they reached 29.2 rubles, on the pre-war basis. That is in the manufacturing industries.

Chart No. 49 relates to agricultural cooperatives. They are, perhaps, the most interesting organizations in Russia; so I refer to the figures. The number of shareholders, in thousands, in 1913 was 650,000. That was the membership of the agricultural cooperatives; but in 1927 there were 7,379,000, showing a tremendous growth in cooperative organizations. In fact, I think the one economic idea in Russia and everywhere else that has survived the war has been the cooperative idea. There is no other development in the world to compare with the cooperative growth in foreign countries. It has also been very great in the United States, but in the United States we have no efficient cooperative laws. Our cooperative laws are all formulated by the financial crowd, with a view in the end to destroying cooperation. We created a Federal land bank, a cooperative institution, started, of course, as a Government institution and to be turned into a cooperative. Then we tied to it a joint-stock profiteering land bank, to destroy the cooperative bank. That has been our procedure all the way through. We knew about the railway engineers organizing a cooperative bank at Cleveland, Ohio. I helped organize that bank. Warren S. Stone, the founder of it, is from my home town in Iowa. I have known him always. I was in his first convention where the bank was decided upon. It was not a cooperative bank at all, because we have no national law in the United States that will permit the organization of a cooperative bank. That is prohibited by law in every State of the Union except two. The Iowa Legislature recently, in the second session back, passed a cooperative banking law, but that does not authorize the organization of a reserve bank.

The State of Nebraska has a law in general terms authorizing cooperative banks, but authority is left in the hands of the bank examiner so that he can decide whether or not a proposed bank will be cooperative and rule out any application for a cooperative bank that might be offered. In the United States, however, in spite of such conditions, we had a growth in cooperative transactions among the farmers to the amount of two and a half billion dollars last year, as well as growth along other lines. Our cooperatives have failed, just as competitive business fails, because they do not have a federated central organization such as the laws of other countries give to them, and especially a cooperative credit system.

Mr. President, this chart which shows the cooperative growth in Russia is the best prophecy of the future of Russia. An increase in membership in that short time from 650,000 up to 7,379,000 indicates a very great growth. The cooperatives, as I have said, were confiscated at first by the Soviet Government, but they were finally turned back, and in the very last message of Lenin to the Russian Congress he said that they should be encouraged, and they have been encouraged from that date. Hence their enormous growth.

Of course, the Government should not assist a cooperative by starting it and then withdrawing its support at a time and in a way that would destroy it. That is what is so often done.

We had a War Finance Corporation to assist cooperatives in this country. It made loans to them and then called them when the cooperatives were not able to pay, and thus destroyed some of the cooperative associations. So the attitude of our law has been one of covered hostility. Why should not the farmers and the laboring people of the United States have the same right under the laws of the country to organize cooperative banking systems, with reserve banks, and all from top to bottom, under their own control just as fully developed and as fully encouraged by the Government as the commercial interests have to a competitive banking system with a competitive reserve bank under Government control?

Agriculture, of course, sustained the greatest damage in Russia during the war. In 1913 the area under cultivation in millions of dessiatins was 109; in 1927 it had climbed back to 105.5, almost equal to the pre-war figure.

Harvests in 1913 amounted in billions of poods to 5.9, while in 1927 to 4.7.

The livestock industry has shown very great improvement.

I next come to agricultural machinery. I think Chart No. 54 should go in the RECORD. It has to do with agricultural machinery and shows the importations and domestic manufacture. The value in millions of rubles before the war in 1913 was 109.2, while in 1920 it had reached 149.9, showing considerably more than a complete recovery.

Mr. President, I have here many more charts showing economic and other conditions relating to nearly everything in Russia. They really ought all to be put in the RECORD, but at this time I will content myself with those I have already offered, but I do ask that the charts on the pages whose numbers I have given may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request will no doubt receive the immediate consideration of the Joint Committee on Printing, to whom such requests must be submitted, as provided by law.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, what I have said affords something like a picture of the present Russian situation. It is a different story from what we have been reading in all our newspapers; it is a different story even from the conclusions which have been announced by the Senator from Utah, although he concedes most of the facts which I have set forth. It is not a different story from what the late Senator Ladd, of North Dakota, told after he made his trip to Russia. I talked to him many times about what he saw and found, and in every way his report would tally with the speech of Colonel Cooper and with the charts which I have presented. It is one of the regrets of the country and of the Senate of the United States that Senator Ladd did not live to put his account of his trip and observations in the RECORD, because his able and scientific mind sized up every phase of the situation in a way that would have made it of great value in letting the American people know the real truth about this situation.

Mr. President, if we shall ratify the pending treaty—and I think we are going to ratify it—it will mean the recognition of the Russian Government; it will mean that we have become a party to a treaty contract with the Russian Government, because under its terms they have a right to adhere to it and be a party to it upon the same terms as the Government of the United States. Perhaps that will give an excuse for some of our statesmen who are considering this question to accord full recognition to Russia and open up diplomatic relations with that Government. I should like to see some American like Haskell over there as minister or ambassador from the United States. I should like to see that good feeling which he developed among all branches of the Russian Government and among all the Russian people carried to its full extent. That kind of an idea can do no harm to world peace.

In addition to that, the Russian Government has gone further than any other toward disarmament. As for myself, I think the ratification of this treaty will be a starting point toward disarmament. The Russian Government is willing now to undergo complete disarmament, and there is more sense in such a proposal than in any other of the kind. When the Russian suggestion was rejected by those who were fearful of the situation the Russian Government was willing to cut down armaments by half. They are going further in the effort to bring about world peace than is any other country in the world. They are not at the same time trying to put through a treaty and then enact a law to increase the number of their cruisers and increase other preparations for war. Therefore, I welcome the ratification of this treaty, because it will recognize the Soviet Government, as should have been done years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask to have read at the desk a short letter written by Alice Stone Blackwell and printed in the Christian Science Monitor of January 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of January 7, 1929]

THE CHRIST OF THE ANDES

To the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

President-elect Hoover, while in Chile, was invited to see one of the world's most remarkable monuments.

In 1902 Chile and Argentina were making great preparations to go to war over a boundary dispute. Chiefly through the efforts of the women and the clergy they were persuaded to settle the question by arbitration instead. The money thus saved was used for better roads and harbors. Part of it built the great trans-Andean railway that connects Santiago with Buenos Aires.

The women of the two countries, led by Señora Angela de Oliveira Cesar de Costa, of Argentina, raised the money for a colossal statue of Jesus Christ, made of bronze obtained by melting down old cannon taken from Spain in the War of Independence. It was set up at the highest accessible point on the disputed boundary.

The day before its dedication hundreds of persons from both countries toiled up the mountains to be on hand for the unveiling. They fraternized joyously; the Chileans camped overnight on the Argentine side of the boundary, the Argentines on the Chilean side. In the morning, after hymns and prayers, the statue was unveiled amid a burst of music, with salvos of cannon and great rejoicings.

It is 26 feet high and stands on a tall granite column surmounted by a globe on which a map of the world is outlined. A tablet at the base reads: "Sooner shall these mountains crumble into dust than Argentines and Chileans break the peace to which they have pledged themselves at the feet of Christ the Redeemer."

The great statue stands near the old trail leading over the mountains from Chile to Argentina, a trail now almost disused, since a tunnel has been made through the mountain. It would have taken Mr. Hoover five hours to climb up to it, and the shortness of his stay made it impracticable for him to do so. But it is good to recall the story at this time and to remember that Argentina and Chile were the first two nations in the world to conclude a general treaty of arbitration. It is to be wished that Bolivia and Paraguay would follow the example.

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

DORCHESTER, MASS.

EXECUTIVE SESSION BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business behind closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. As in open executive session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess in open executive session until to-morrow, Saturday, January 12, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 11 (legislative day of January 7), 1929

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE

Walter Spencer, of Colorado, to be register of the land office at Denver, Colo., effective February 23, 1929. (Reappointment.)

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

CHAPLAIN

Capt. Louis Curtis Tiernan, Chaplains Reserve, to be chaplain with the rank of first lieutenant, with rank from date of appointment.

[NOTE: This message is submitted for the purpose of correcting an error in date of rank.]

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Capt. Shelby Cyrus Newman, Cavalry (detailed in Quartermaster Corps), with rank from July 1, 1920.

Capt. Robert Joseph Kennedy, Finance Department, with rank from June 21, 1925.

First Lieut. Wesley Karlson, Field Artillery, with rank from July 1, 1920.

FIELD ARTILLERY

First Lieut. Alfred Percy Kitson, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

AIR CORPS

First Lieut. Joseph Smith, Cavalry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from March 31, 1928.

Second Lieut. John Caswell Crosthwaite, Cavalry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 30, 1926.

Second Lieut. Marvin Marion Burnside, Coast Artillery Corps (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 30, 1926.

Second Lieut. George Woodburne McGregor, Field Artillery (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.

Second Lieut. Charles Albert Harrington, Corps of Engineers (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.

Second Lieut. Maurice Francis Daly, Field Artillery (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.

Second Lieut. James Douglas Curtis, Coast Artillery Corps (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.

Second Lieut. Orrin Leigh Grover, Coast Artillery Corps (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.

Second Lieut. Milton Merrill Towner, Field Artillery (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.
Second Lieut. Fay Roscoe Upthegrove, Infantry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.
Second Lieut. Ernest Godfrey Schmidt, Infantry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.
Second Lieut. David Morgan Hackman, Infantry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.
Second Lieut. Marion Huggins, Infantry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.
Second Lieut. Neil Bosworth Harding, Infantry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 14, 1927.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

To be colonels

Lieut. Col. Francis Amory Pope, Corps of Engineers, from December 21, 1928.
Lieut. Col. Paul Stanley Bond, Corps of Engineers, from December 31, 1928.
Lieut. Col. Joseph Augustus Baer, Cavalry, from January 5, 1929.
Lieut. Col. Charles Fletcher Martin, Cavalry, from January 6, 1929.
Lieut. Col. Willis Virlin Morris, Cavalry, from January 7, 1929.

To be lieutenant colonels

Maj. James Hatch Van Horn, Signal Corps, from December 21, 1928.
Maj. Cassius McClellan Dowell, Infantry, subject to examination required by law, from December 29, 1928.
Maj. Albert Benjamin Kaempfer, Infantry, from December 31, 1928.
Maj. Forrest Elmer Overholser, Infantry, from January 3, 1929.
Maj. Charles Winder Mason, Infantry, from January 5, 1929.
Maj. Jacob Arthur Mack, Coast Artillery Corps, from January 6, 1929.
Maj. Archie Wright Barry, Air Corps, from January 7, 1929.
Maj. Edmund Louis Gruber, Field Artillery, from January 7, 1929.

To be majors

Capt. Samuel Victor Constant, Cavalry, from December 21, 1928.
Capt. William Curtis Chase, Cavalry, from December 29, 1928.
Capt. John Dunham Townsend, Infantry, from December 31, 1928.
Capt. Norman Edgar Fiske, Cavalry, subject to examination required by law, from January 3, 1929.
Capt. Wilson Tarlton Bals, Cavalry, from January 4, 1929.
Capt. Cyrus Jenness Wilder, Cavalry, from January 5, 1929.
Capt. Harold Charles Fellows, Cavalry, from January 6, 1929.
Capt. George Lester Kraft, Infantry, from January 7, 1929.
Capt. John Singleton Switzer, jr., Infantry, from January 7, 1929.

To be captains

First Lieut. Joseph Leonard Stromme, Air Corps, from December 21, 1928.
First Lieut. Robal Alphonzo Johnson, Infantry, from December 23, 1928.
First Lieut. James Palmer Blakeney, Infantry, from December 29, 1928.
First Lieut. Glen Ray Townsend, Infantry, from December 31, 1928.
First Lieut. Woodburn Edwin Remington, Infantry, from January 2, 1929.
First Lieut. Maxwell Gordon Oliver, Infantry, from January 3, 1929.
First Lieut. John Edward Nolan, Infantry, from January 4, 1929.
First Lieut. Frederick Harrison Koerbel, Coast Artillery Corps, from January 5, 1929.
First Lieut. Linton Yates Hartman, Coast Artillery Corps, from January 6, 1929.
First Lieut. Charles Richard Sargent, Infantry, from January 7, 1929.
First Lieut. Thomas Martin Tiernan, Field Artillery, from January 7, 1929.

To be first lieutenants

Second Lieut. Raymond Morralles Arthur, Coast Artillery Corps, from November 30, 1928.
Second Lieut. Thomas Thrower Mayo, Infantry, from December 3, 1928.
Second Lieut. Carroll Norton Pearce, Infantry, from December 6, 1928.
Second Lieut. Philip Mapes Shockley, Quartermaster Corps, from December 7, 1928.
Second Lieut. Ernest Tuttle Owen, Field Artillery, from December 12, 1928.
Second Lieut. Martin Hamlin Burckes, Field Artillery, from December 13, 1928.
Second Lieut. Arthur Cecil Ramsey, Infantry, from December 13, 1928.
Second Lieut. Wallace Howard Hastings, Corps of Engineers, from December 13, 1928.
Second Lieut. Albert Fox Glenn, Air Corps, from December 13, 1928.
Second Lieut. Emerson Leroy Cummings, Corps of Engineers, subject to examination required by law, from December 14, 1928.
Second Lieut. Earle Everard Partridge, Air Corps, from December 15, 1928.
Second Lieut. Fisher Shinholt Blinn, Corps of Engineers, from December 15, 1928.
Second Lieut. Donald Charles Hill, Corps of Engineers, from December 17, 1928.
Second Lieut. Benjamin Schultz Mesick, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, from December 21, 1928.
Second Lieut. Reginald Langworthy Dean, Corps of Engineers, from December 23, 1928.
Second Lieut. Merrow Egerton Sorley, Corps of Engineers, December 27, 1928.
Second Lieut. Philip Robison Garges, Corps of Engineers, subject to examination required by law, from December 27, 1928.
Second Lieut. Gerald Joseph Sullivan, Corps of Engineers, from December 29, 1928.
Second Lieut. George Dakin Crosby, Field Artillery, from December 31, 1928.
Second Lieut. Arthur Gilbert Trudeau, Corps of Engineers, from January 1, 1929.
Second Lieut. John Henry Brewer, Signal Corps, from January 2, 1929.
Second Lieut. John Held Riepe, Cavalry, from January 3, 1929.
Second Lieut. Emerson Charles Itschner, Corps of Engineers, subject to examination required by law, from January 3, 1929.
Second Lieut. Ernest Orrin Lee, Field Artillery, from January 4, 1929.
Second Lieut. Howard Ker, Corps of Engineers, from January 5, 1929.
Second Lieut. Charles Day Palmer, Field Artillery, from January 6, 1929.
Second Lieut. Herbert Davis Vogel, Corps of Engineers, subject to examination required by law, from January 7, 1929.
Second Lieut. Fremont Swift Tandy, Corps of Engineers, from January 7, 1929.

MEDICAL CORPS

To be captain

First Lieut. Stanton Knowlton Livingston, Medical Corps, from December 21, 1928.

MEDICAL ADMINISTRATIVE CORPS

To be captain

First Lieut. William Francis Coleman, Medical Administrative Corps, from January 5, 1929.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 11 (legislative day of January 7), 1929

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Frank M. Surface to be assistant director.

COAST GUARD

To be lieutenant commanders

Noble G. Ricketts.
Harold G. Bradbury.
Irving W. Buckalew.
Rae B. Hall.
Arthur G. Hall.
Ephraim Zoole.
Paul K. Perry.

To be lieutenants

Alfred C. Richmond.
Walter R. Richards.
Thomas Y. Awalt.
Roy L. Raney.
George B. Gelly.
Russell E. Wood.
Clarence H. Peterson.
James A. Hirshfield.
Joseph D. Conway.
Charles W. Lawson.
Frank T. Kenner.
George C. Carlstedt.
John Rountree.
William W. Kenner.
Stephen P. Swicegood, jr.
Henry C. Perkins.
Paul W. Collins.
Charles W. Thomas.

Frank A. Leamy.
John H. Byrd.
Beckwith Jordan.
John McCann.
Charles Etzweiler.

To be ensign

Dwight H. Dexter.

To be lieutenants (junior grade)

Henry T. Jewell.
Donald F. A. De Otte.
Irving E. Baker.
Gordon A. Littlefield.
Frank Tomkiel.
Kenneth A. Coler.
Henry J. Betzmer.
George C. Whittlesey.
Beverly E. Moodey.
John A. Fletcher.
Walter S. Anderson.

To be captain (engineering)

Christopher G. Porcher.

To be commander (engineering)

Frederick H. Young.

POSTMASTERS

ILLINOIS

Eugene L. Hiser, Bloomington.
Ralph Redding, Fisher.
Edward J. Briswalter, jr., Grayville.
Peter J. Aimone, Toluca.

MINNESOTA

Arthur F. Johnson, Dent.
Ernie L. Emmons, Emmons.
Frederick A. Cooley, Heron Lake.
Joseph L. Gilson, Ivanhoe.
Jennie L. Dowling, Olivia.
Mary A. Mogren, Ortonville.
Niels F. Petersen, Tyler.

NORTH CAROLINA

Keiffer L. Long, Thomasville.

PENNSYLVANIA

Anna Postupack, McAdoo.
Claude S. Yeager, Orwigsburg.

TENNESSEE

Grosvenor M. Steele, Bemis.
Jesse W. Alexander, Carthage.
Emma R. Kilgore, Cottagegrove.
Roe Austin, Dover.
Stephen Hixson, Dunlap.
Benjamin Ford, Hartford.
Link Monday, Kimberlin Heights.
Parks L. Hayes, Lynchburg.
Ollie F. Minton, Nashville.
Carrie S. Honeycutt, Wartburg.

VIRGINIA

Peter L. Cooper, Clarksville.
Edgar B. Elliott, Gate City.

WISCONSIN

Redmond F. English, Arcadia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, January 11, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Lord, Thou who hast the power to penetrate the profound mystery of being with unerring love and sympathy, Thy mercy transcends all human affection. Thou dost not dwell in the dense haze of sullen skies to fill us with apprehension; but Thy everyday blessing is a wonderful cause for thanksgiving. Let Thy guidance be realized in the issues of our daily lives. In purpose and exalted idealism lead us to the heights of our powers and make us well worthy of a place in the councils of the Nation. By awakening intellects and spiritual emotions may we be all that we were born to be and to do. Now, Father, breathe into our souls the essence of Thy Spirit, and never allow evil to win its ministry nor permit it to claim us as its own. In the holy name of the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 7729. An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., January 10.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This is to certify that at a special election held in the various counties of the second congressional district of the State of Arkansas to fill a vacancy caused by the death of the Hon. William A. Oldfield, MRS. PEARL PEDEN OLDFIELD was the nominee of the Democratic Party without opposition and was elected for the remainder of the term expiring March 4, 1929.

JIM B. HIGGINS, Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be pleased to administer the oath to the lady from Arkansas.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the lady from Arkansas, Mrs. OLDFIELD, be given the oath of office and enter without further formality upon the duties of her position.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Thereupon Mrs. OLDFIELD, attended by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, appeared before the Speaker's rostrum and took the oath of office.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have unanimous consent to address the House to-day for 30 minutes after the disposal of the Army appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent that the consent be vacated. I make this request after conference with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and our floor leader, and I will renew that request some day next week.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be vacated.

There was no objection.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, after the passage of the District of Columbia appropriation bill last year Mr. Madden, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, requested the Bureau of Efficiency to make a study of the question of the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia. The result of that study has been submitted in a report to the present chairman of the committee, Mr. ANTHONY; and I ask unanimous consent that the report, with the accompanying tables and letter, be printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the report of the Bureau of Efficiency upon the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia be printed as public document. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. The tables are rather large, and if there is any action by the House in the way of instruction to the Printing Office it should be to direct that the tables be kept complete in sheets.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the tables be printed so as to be complete by themselves. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman may have to get some order from the Joint Committee on Printing. The order of the House may not be sufficient.

Mr. SIMMONS. We can dispose of that later if any difficulty is encountered, but I would like to have the permission of the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REREFERENCE OF TWO RESOLUTIONS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a change of reference in the case of Senate Joint Resolution 28 and House Joint Resolution 166 from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on the Judiciary. Both of those resolutions were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, I think, under a misapprehension, owing to some unanimous-consent arrangement about having all tax-refund matters referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

This involves the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and involves a change of the statute of limitations to revive some claims 60 or 70 years old. These resolutions were referred to our committee in the last Congress, and we had hearings upon them, and they were properly before the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to rerefer Senate Joint Resolution 28 and House Joint Resolution 166 from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the attitude of the other committee? Has it been consulted?

Mr. GRAHAM. I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means this morning, and had authority from him to say that he consented unless there was some parliamentary objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is going on in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] says he has consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the latter had consented that he ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 28 and House Joint Resolution 166 be rereferred to the Committee on the Judiciary from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is it the action of the Committee on Ways and Means or merely that of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. I make the request after a conference with the chairman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will defer his request until I can confer with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], if he has not yet been conferred with.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am willing to have it go over.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his request at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 10]

Allgood	Culkin	Leatherwood	Speaks
Anthony	Curry	Leech	Stedman
Arentz	Denison	McMillan	Summers, Wash.
Bachmann	Dickstein	McSweeney	Sumners, Tex.
Bacon	Douglass, Mass.	Michaelson	Taylor, Colo.
Beck, Pa.	Doyle	Milligan	Taylor, Tenn.
Bell	Evans, Mont.	Monast	Temple
Berger	Fletcher	Moore, Ky.	Tillman
Blanton	Gasque	Morin	Updike
Boies	Golder	O'Brien	Ware
Brand, Ga.	Goldsborough	O'Connor, N. Y.	Warren
Britten	Griest	Oliver, N. Y.	Weller
Browne	Hope	Palmer	White, Colo.
Buckbee	Kendall	Patterson	White, Kans.
Canfield	Kerr	Prall	Williamson
Casey	Kindred	Pratt	Wilson, Miss.
Clancy	King	Quayle	Winter
Crowther	Kunz	Robsion, Ky.	Wolfenden

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-five Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF EXPENDITURES TO INFLUENCE CONGRESS REGARDING FOREIGN POLICIES

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent I desire to have a resolution printed as an extension of remarks, and certain statements in relation to the resolution made by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a resolution, and a statement made by himself with relation to the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask if the resolution has been introduced?

Mr. TINKHAM. It has been introduced.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the resolution?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is asking permission to insert some kind of a resolution which he has written on the race problem. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TINKHAM. This has nothing to do with the race problem in any way. It refers to the multilateral treaty.

Mr. RANKIN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave the extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following resolution and statement:

RESOLUTION

Whereas the United States was established as a free and independent country with no foreign entanglements, and by strict adherence to this traditional policy has become a great and powerful Nation; and

Whereas the American people have shown repeatedly by the defeat of parties and individuals who have advocated or supported a policy favoring foreign entanglements that they firmly believe that the United States should continue to devote itself to its own affairs, the welfare of its own people, and the maintenance of its independence, and not attempt to regulate the affairs of other peoples; and

Whereas the covenant of the League of Nations was rejected by the United States in 1919 because it was a military and political alliance for the domination of the world; and

Whereas adherence of the United States to the protocol of the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations was revealed to be an indirect entry into the League of Nations, the court being exposed as an organ and political instrumentality of the league; and

Whereas the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, with reservations, adopted by the Senate in 1926, was not accepted by the League of Nations because one of the reservations would curtail its political activities; and

Whereas the present multilateral treaty now before the Senate is a dangerous and indirect advance toward entry into the Permanent Court of International Justice and into the League of Nations and is another attempt to entangle the United States in the policies and affairs of other nations; and

Whereas immense sums of money were spent to create a public opinion in the United States favorable to the United States joining the League of Nations and subsequently adhering to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations and are now being spent for the acceptance of the multilateral treaty by the United States contrary to its best interest; and

Whereas it is alleged that international bankers, United States international business organizations and their legal representatives, and foreign interests are systematically engaged in this expenditure; and

Whereas the amount of money so spent and the sources from which it comes should be known to the American people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a select committee is hereby created, to consist of five members, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to investigate the payment and expenditure of any money by international bankers, United States international business organizations and their legal representatives, and foreign interests, and from any other source, to create a public opinion in the United States favorable to the United States joining the League of Nations, adhering to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, and to the acceptance of the multilateral treaty by the United States; and said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to compel the attendance of and to administer oaths to witnesses, to conduct such inquiries at such times and places as the committee may deem necessary, and to report its findings and recommendations to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date.

STATEMENT

For nearly a century the international bankers and great business interests in Europe have directed and controlled in large measure the foreign policies of their respective countries. It has not been uncommon in Europe for foreign interests to spend large sums of money to effect their political purposes in alien states. These nefarious practices now obtain in the United States and should be exposed. A network of expensive organized propaganda and intrigue to influence the foreign policies of the United States would be revealed by an investigation.

Vast sums of money were expended from such sources to influence the United States to join the League of Nations, and when that proposal was defeated, to adhere to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations as a first step toward entry into the league itself. This attempt not having yet succeeded, immense sums of money are now being expended to influence the United States to accept the multilateral treaty, first to implicate the United States in international and particularly European affairs, and then to lead the United States to membership in the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations and finally in the league itself. Back of these attempts have been the vital interests of the international bankers, the United States international business organizations and European interests to maintain the status quo in Europe for their own purposes.

It has been the traditional policy of the United States—and a sound one—that investments in foreign countries by private citizens of the United States are made at the risk of the investor. An attempt is now being made to safeguard such investments by international commitments on the part of the Government of the United States. The United States should not be entangled for all time in a position so fraught with uncertainty and peril for the welfare and safety of its people and its independence to maintain the status quo for the purpose of safeguarding public or private investments, large as these now are in Europe.

The proposal of the multilateral treaty by the United States was hailed at once at Geneva and in Europe generally as bringing the United States into closest contact with world and particularly European politics. It was declared that through this treaty the United States would be called upon to speak its mind, to express its opinion, and to take sides in the disputes of Europe and in defense of its treaty—even more than this, it was said to mean United States support of the policies of the League of Nations and the maintenance of the status quo in Europe.

This is the understanding of Europe, and if it is not the understanding of the United States another dangerous difference is added to those already existing.

The multilateral treaty so far as the renunciation of war as a national policy is concerned has been practically nullified by the exceptions made by the various governments before signing the treaty. These exceptions are (1) the right to make war in self-defense, each country to determine for itself the question of self-defense; (2) the right to make wars authorized under the League of Nations; (3) the right to make wars authorized under the Locarno treaty; (4) the right to make wars arising under the French treaties of alliance; and (5) the right claimed by Great Britain to use war as an instrument of national policy in certain undefined "regions of the world" any "interference" with which by anybody, including the United States, would be regarded by Great Britain as a cause of war.

In the last hundred years no nation has declared a war that was not alleged to be a war of self-defense.

The exception made by Great Britain allows her to make war anywhere in the world since the zones in which she claims the right to make war are wholly undetermined except that they shall be of "special and vital interest" for her "peace and safety" as she may determine. There are no geographical limitations.

The multilateral treaty as qualified by these exceptions not only constitutes no renunciation of war but in fact and in law is a solemn sanction for all wars mentioned in the exceptions—the most solemn sanction for specific wars that has ever been given to the world. But much more than this if we recognize as we do the legality of league wars and Locarno wars; once this treaty is signed we are bound by league decisions as to aggressors and league policy generally, but without opportunity to take part in the deliberations leading to league conclusions. Unless we make clear our understanding of this treaty, as have other nations, we alone are bound by its explicit terms and we alone are subject to the will of other nations, in addition to losing our right to trade as a neutral nation in time of war.

But of even more peril to us is the fact that the treaty, if ratified, will inevitably lead to the destruction of our Navy while other nations are armed or arming. If we should maintain an adequate Navy for defense, we should be charged with bad faith. Already these charges are being made. Deprived of an adequate Navy, one of the great auxiliaries to diplomacy, we should be impotent in world affairs and should have no decisive influence in an international crisis.

In addition to renouncing war as a national policy, the multilateral treaty provides that the settlement of disputes "shall never be sought except by pacific means," and for the settlement of disputes it is already again being urged that we enter the Permanent Court of International Justice, although this court is not an independent court representing nations directly, but the instrumentality, agent, and servant of the League of Nations, and notwithstanding, furthermore, that the statute setting up the court provides that nations not members of it may have recourse to it.

The President's statement on November 11, 1926, at Kansas City (uttered after the Council of the League of Nations had indicated its unwillingness to accept the Senate reservation curtailing the political power of the court) that: "The situation has been sufficiently developed so that I feel warranted in saying that I do not intend to ask the Senate to modify its position," was universally accepted as terminating the attempt of the United States to enter the court. Notwithstanding this statement, a dispatch published in American newspapers on November 24 last reported that the administration "appears to be inclined to make another effort to bring the United States into membership of the League of Nations' Permanent Court of International Justice."

The acceptance of the multilateral treaty means that the United States is subject to league policies without participating in league decisions; it means membership in the league's court, which means eventual full membership in the League of Nations itself.

Statesmanship should deal with the real and vital international issue for the United States, the freedom of the seas. Until it is settled by a formulation of international law that neutral commerce shall not be interfered with in time of war, there can be no final harmony between the United States and foreign nations. It was because there was no such formulation that the United States was forced into war in 1812 and in 1917, and she will be forced into war again unless the seas are freed. It has been repeatedly suggested that a conference be held for the codification of international law, including maritime law in time of war. But because this proposal was not spectacular enough and held no domestic political advantage, it has been repeatedly rejected.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. FENN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11725, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11725, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening, the first section had been read, with committee amendments. The question before the committee is on the first committee amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the first committee amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. If this is offered as a substitute for this section, it takes with it all subsequent amendments to strike out the remaining sections.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be pending.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I want to offer it at this time. I ask that it be reported as pending, for further consideration when the perfecting amendments are completed. I want to say that if this is adopted, I shall make a further motion, as time goes on, to strike out the remaining sections of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the committee amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, may we understand just what the parliamentary situation is now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts was on his feet and the gentleman from Iowa was before the Chair. The Chair inquired for what purpose the gentleman from Iowa rose and he stated his purpose. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa later, but he feels he should recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has made a pro forma motion on the first committee amendment and who desires to speak for five minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am offering a substitute and I would like to have it reported at this time before we consider the committee amendment. It might have a bearing on whether the committee will approve or reject the perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who was on his feet, on his pro forma amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, continuous committee service, such as the Ways and Means Committee is called upon to perform at the present time, has its drawbacks so far as presence of Members on the floor is concerned. In connection with this bill, I therefore will simply express a very brief personal view on the general subject.

My thought is that the present number of Members of the House of Representatives—435—is as large as can be properly cared for and handled under our method of procedure. Any greater number would make an unwieldy body. I am opposed to any move that would increase the membership beyond the present number.

I have the honor of representing in part a State that is perhaps likely to lose a Member if we do not increase the membership beyond the number of 435. Irrespective of its effect on the State of Massachusetts, irrespective of its effect upon the district I represent, and irrespective of the possible political effect on me personally, I approve of the Fenn bill. [Applause.]

I think it would be a very unfortunate argument for Representatives of a State to say that their State would lose under any particular form of representation or reapportionment. We, as Members of this House, owe it to the American people to reapportion Congress in accordance with the Constitution of this country. [Applause.] The effect of this action for one

State or one district is absolutely immaterial to me. I shall vote most heartily for the Fenn bill. [Applause.]

Now, what object is there in saying that because our population increases we should likewise increase the representation in the House of Representatives? Are we not comparable with the States? In the 48 States of the Union, or in nearly all of them, the constitutions of the States or Commonwealths provide arbitrarily for the number of Members who serve in the legislatures. The population has nothing to do with the membership of the Legislature of New York or of Massachusetts or perhaps of any other State. If it is not directly provided for in the State constitution, it is provided for in some permanent record of the State.

We have in Massachusetts 40 members of the State senate and 240 members of the house. It makes no difference whether the population in that States goes up or down, the legislative representation is the same.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am sorry, but I have such brief time——

Mr. STEVENSON. I was just going to ask if your State does not apportion them among the counties according to population?

Mr. TREADWAY. We apportion them equitably in the State and that is exactly what the Congress will do. If we keep our membership at 435 we will apportion that number equitably to the States and that is what the Fenn bill is intended to accomplish.

I think we have been very derelict in our duty as Congressmen in not pushing this legislation sooner. As I see it, we have disobeyed, no matter what the reason therefor, the Constitution of this country in that we are now living under an apportionment based on the 1910 census, whereas a reapportionment should have promptly followed the census of 1920.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to see this legislation enacted now in order to prepare for the census of 1930, and it seems to me the only way we can do this is to be unselfish in our way of proceeding. Whether we are representing a State that is going to gain or one that is going to lose in the reapportionment, let us be men and do our job as it is here for us to do, and be prepared for whatever results may come from the census of 1930 to our individual interests or to our respective States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CRAIL. There is objection. I want to speak on the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proper parliamentary procedure is for the Chair to insist that the committee amendments be acted upon unless unanimous consent is given otherwise.

Mr. RANKIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we postpone disposing of the committee amendments until we finish the section.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Mississippi, and the gentleman from California objects to the withdrawal of the pro forma amendment. The question is on agreeing to the pro forma amendment.

The pro forma amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa as a substitute for the bill: Strike out section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Be it enacted, etc., That on the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed, as ascertained under the 1930 census of the population, and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives made in the following manner: By apportioning one Representative to each State (as required by the Constitution) and by apportioning the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census by the method known as the method of equal proportions, and that the House of Representatives shall be reapportioned on that basis.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order until the committee amendment is acted upon. This amendment is offered to strike out the section and substitute another. I have no objection to the gentleman from Iowa discussing his amendment, but the committee amendment should be voted on prior to his amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Only the committee amendment to this section.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa offer this as a substitute for the first section or for the entire bill?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I offer it at this point as a substitute for the first section, with the notice that if adopted I shall move to strike out the balance of the sections of the bill. It is a substitute for section 1, and also a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The only question is as to the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas; that is that the committee amendment to the first paragraph be perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. All committee amendments will be disposed of before the substitute is voted upon. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this as a substitute for the first section of the bill, with notice that if the amendment to the first section is adopted I shall move to strike out the subsequent sections. I do that for the following reasons: First, it is a statement by the House that the sentiment of this Congress is for a House of 435 Members, and recommends that an apportionment be made on that basis in the future. It does not assume to try to control the next Congress as to what shall be done; it does not delegate any authority to any bureau that shall recommend to the House what to do; it does not put in anybody's hands the machinery by which they can automatically take away from one State a Member of Congress or give to another State a Member of Congress.

I, for one, am in favor of keeping the House at a membership of 435. I want to say to those who have opposed the apportionment that they have contributed as much to the defeat of the apportionment bill as those of us who said that the apportionment would not be fair by reason of the fact that the census was taken following the war when there was a great decrease in the number of people. Do not try to place all the blame on those States which have had a decrease since the last census, because these two things were contributive factors to the defeat of the last apportionment bill.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. TUCKER. I want to say to the gentleman that at the proper time I expect to offer an amendment to strike out sections 3, 4, and 5 of the bill. I want to ask the gentleman whether his substitute carries those sections?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It does not, but I shall move to strike them out. I would be glad to have the gentleman from Virginia move to strike them out. But I think the most vicious section in the bill is section 2.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman was present yesterday and heard my remarks, he is aware of the fact that I am in favor of reapportioning the House after we get the census of 1930.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I so understand.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman's substitute contain the solemn declaration that the reapportionment shall be on the basis of the 1930 census?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Absolutely.

Mr. RANKIN. Do you propose by your substitute to delegate the power of making a reapportionment to the Secretary of Commerce or to some one else?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I do not; I am against any such delegation of power, and that is why I am so bitterly opposed to this bill.

When you say that you are not delegating any authority, you must admit that you are setting up machinery by which somebody else is going to make an apportionment rather than the Congress itself. You are providing whereby and how and how many, and then you say that it is practically going to be automatic because if Congress does not do what you say is the solemn pledge of the Constitution, then it becomes automatic and the House is reapportioned by a certain certificate from the Census Bureau as to the number of representatives there should be and the number which each State should have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. As I understand the gentleman's proposal, it only declares that it is the judgment of this Congress that the membership of the House should remain at 435, but it does not in any way provide for a reapportionment after the 1930 census. It merely recommends that such reapportionment shall be made by the Congress at that time.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes. In other words, any assumption at reapportionment on the part of this Congress for the 1930 census is simply trying to usurp the powers and functions of the next Congress.

Mr. MAPES. If that is all that the gentleman's amendment proposes to do, will the gentleman explain to the House how it in any way creates any different situation than we are in now, without the passage of the amendment?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It simply does this: It expresses to the next Congress what the desire of this Congress is, and it would be in a way the commitment of a great many Members of the House that are Members of this Congress who will be Members of the next Congress, such as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and myself, that we are not going to stand in the way of a proper reapportionment after that census is taken, because we believe in reapportionment, and we also believe in 435 Members of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. And, if the gentleman will permit, it also answers the charge that we are opposed to a reapportionment under any circumstances. It answers that charge by a solemn declaration stating that we are in favor of reapportioning the House as soon as you give us the census of 1930.

Mr. MAPES. As a matter of fact, the amendment means nothing.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Oh, it means just as much as this does here, providing the next Congress assumed the authority that it ought to assume, and it will tell you that it is not any of your business what they want to do when it comes to reapportionment in the Seventy-first Congress.

Mr. TILSON. Does it not mean this also, that if the next Congress acts in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of Commerce it will accomplish exactly the same results that we are accomplishing by this bill, so what is the gain? It does exactly the thing this bill proposes to do, and why should not we do it now?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Let me suggest to the gentleman why we could not do it. In your bill you say that it is not going to be just for the Seventy-first Congress but for every Congress following for 10 years, and it also says that in case Congress does not do that, it is going to be automatically done, and if the gentleman is the leader of the House at that time, I shall be ashamed of the leadership unless he assumes the authority of his position and says that it is the duty of Congress to do this, and that it shall not be done by any Government bureau chief down here. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Just for information, does not the gentleman's amendment merely ask the Secretary of Commerce to submit to the districts as to what the apportionment would be for 435? It does not even express the hope that it will be limited to 435.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Oh, yes, it does. It says that there shall be a reapportionment on that basis.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. And he is merely to submit the figure to us?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Submit the figure to us, and it recommends that there shall be reapportionment on that basis. It is a commitment of this House to 435 Members. I have talked with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who has told me time and time again that one of the things that he was most anxious about in this whole fight is the fact that he wants only 435 Members in the House. This gives him that. It gives a recommendation and the commitment of the Members of this House along that line. I say to you that I do not believe that we are making any idle gesture here, but we are preserving to the House the prerogatives that we ought to preserve, and we are not delegating any power to somebody down at the other end of the Avenue to say that Massachusetts shall only have so many Representatives in the new Congress, and that New York and the rest of them shall only have so many in the following Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some one in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, so far as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is concerned, as affecting the very first section of this bill, it is absolutely meaningless. It simply calls upon the Secretary of Commerce to give us some statistics. They gave us those statistics in 1920, and we did nothing with them. His substitute is absolutely valueless to those of us who desire reapportionment. There is nothing in his proposal to assure us of reapportionment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Does the gentleman contend that you can bind future Congresses? They can reapportion themselves and increase the House to 460 or any other number, and the gentleman admitted that in his speech yesterday.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I say that the passage of the Fenn bill before us does something which your amendment does not do. If we enact the Fenn bill, reapportionment statistics based on the 1930 census are then submitted, which you yourself have called for, but with this difference: If the Seventy-first Congress is derelict and does not do its duty, then we will automatically get reapportionment, whether that Congress acts or not. Your innocuous substitute simply calls for statistical data which we would get, anyway. I hope, therefore, that this House will vote down the Dickinson substitute, which, if enacted, would destroy the vital parts and vital principle of the Fenn bill, namely, the automatic feature.

I would like to explain to the House the fundamental difference in the two methods most seriously considered for reapportionment, namely, the one provided for in the bill, the method of major fractions, and the one which has been suggested as a substitute, namely, the method of equal proportions.

A preliminary statement is in order.

The method of major fractions was used in 1840, was used in 1910, and in the tables reported in 1920. The method of equal proportions has never been used or seriously considered at any time.

Mr. FENN. Does not every Member of this House hold his seat by this method of major fractions?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; that is true.

The method of major fractions proceeds on the assumption that every individual in the United States should have the same weight so far as representation in Congress is concerned, regardless of the size of the population of the State in which he happens to live. Under the method of major fractions, a person in Nevada has the same weight as a person in New York, no more, no less.

As against this, the method of equal proportions would attach a weight and importance to the individual depending upon the size of the State. An individual living in Nevada, with approximately 75,000 people, would have greater weight than an individual living in New York, with 11,000,000.

Let me illustrate how these two methods would operate. Suppose Congress should have wanted to make the House 436 instead of 435 in 1910. Which State would have gotten the four hundred and thirty-sixth district? According to major fractions, that State would have gotten the four hundred and thirty-sixth district which had the highest absolute number of unrepresented people. That is to say, people in excess of the districts already apportioned in the various States. Under equal proportions, the four hundred and thirty-sixth district would go to that State in which the unrepresented portion bears the highest ratio to the total population of the State.

So, for instance, if Representatives are to be apportioned only for every 250,000, a State with a population of 370,000, or one Representative and a remainder of 120,000, compared with a State of 4,122,000, entitling it to 16 Representatives and 122,000 remainder, which State should get the additional Representative—the State with 120,000 excess, or the State with 122,000 excess?

The proponents of the major fractions method say the State with 122,000 excess, because they say that representation in Congress should be based on the absolute number; whereas the equal proportions proponents say the State with the 120,000 excess should get the extra Representative, because 120,000 is a higher percentage of a population of 370,000 than is 122,000 of a population of 4,122,000.

Under major fractions, the traditional method, as against equal proportions, the untried method, it always happens, and always must happen, that any State that has a major fraction—that is to say, 50 per cent or more of the population which each district is supposed to have—gets the Representative. A State having less than one-half never gets the Representative. A State having more than one-half always gets it. Under equal proportions the excess might be less than one-half the size of the average district and still get the additional Representative.

Now, having explained the difference in the two methods, you will readily understand why it is that the smaller States favor the method of equal proportions and the larger States favor major fractions. In the small State each individual has a greater weight when compared with the population of his State than he does in the larger State. Representative THURSTON living in Iowa and Representative BRIGHAM living in Vermont have a greater weight under equal proportions than I have living in New York State with a population of 10,000,000. I am only one of 10,000,000, while Representative THURSTON, say, is one of 350,000. The practical result in the use of the two methods is illustrated by the chart that I now present to you. It will be seen from this table that if you use the method of equal proportions, on the estimated population of 1920, the smaller States would secure three seats in the House, which by the method of major fractions would have gone to the larger States. The three small States which would have gained are Vermont, Rhode Island, and New Mexico, and the three large States that would have lost are North Carolina, Virginia, and New York.

Mr. BEEDY. For the information of the House, the gentleman stated his State loses by both methods, but less by the method of equal proportions.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; that is true. Of course, we can not say with certainty what the results will be until the 1930 census has been taken. It is true that under the method of major fractions New York is likely to lose one seat, and possibly two under equal proportions.

Mr. BEEDY. Is it not true, under the statistics already submitted by the Census Bureau respecting the census of 1930, that by major fractions my State loses one and New York State loses two? In other words, that method favors the small State and is adverse to the large State?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. We should not be unduly frightened by these estimates for 1930. No one knows what the population will be in 1930. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that the estimates of 1930 are based on the estimates of 1920, which were faulty, it is claimed. We do not know what it will actually be in 1930, but in certain cases the big States like New York will lose two, and under the other method it would lose one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. May I have an additional five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks leave to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

Mr. KETCHAM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman—I shall not object, but I want to take this minute to announce that, after this, all further extensions will be objected to which are calculated to filibuster against the bill. Of course, the gentleman from New York is not in this filibustering class. He favors the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS. You can object right now. If that is to be the policy, we will object right now.

Mr. KETCHAM. If the gentleman will permit, I want to make just a brief statement.

Mr. EDWARDS. I object to the statement, Mr. Chairman; it is out of order.

Mr. KETCHAM. Then I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I will take five minutes to explain what is meant by these two methods. Under the major-fraction method every individual in the United States, as I said, whether he lives in Nevada, or in Vermont, or in New Hampshire, or New York, has the same weight. No more importance is attached to an inhabitant of New York than to an inhabitant of Nevada or Vermont or New Hampshire under the major-fraction method. That will not be contradicted by anyone who knows the facts about these two methods. But under the method of equal proportions an individual living in Vermont or New Hampshire or Nevada has more weight than a man living in New York, because the man living in Nevada or Vermont or New Hampshire has a higher ratio than you, Mr. BLACK of New York, living in New York.

You are one of eleven million, while an inhabitant of Nevada is one of a hundred thousand. Therefore if a man lives in Nevada he will have more representation than if he lived in New York, and that was never intended by the fathers of this Republic. The framers of the Constitution definitely intended that every individual, regardless of where he lived, should have the same weight in representation in this Congress.

The difference between the two methods is simple. One provides for an apportionment for membership in this House on the basis of population absolutely and the other on the basis of a ratio between the individual in that State to the whole population of the State.

In 1930, on the estimated population given out by the Census Bureau, a shift would have taken place as between the smaller and the larger States.

The contests, therefore, as to methods is one involving a shift of approximately three seats in the House as between the smaller and the larger States.

My reading of the debates from 1790 down to the present time has led me to the conclusion that major fractions is the method intended by the makers of the Constitution. I say this not because I come from a larger State, because my State is going to lose under any reapportionment. It will probably lose one under major fractions, and maybe two under equal proportions. No one can tell this until the absolute figures are secured.

I believe the Constitution intended that we should apportion seats in the House so that each State will receive representation in the Congress as nearly as possible according to the population of these respective States. If we adhere to this principle, then major fractions is the method that carries out most effectively that principle. I do not believe that it was ever intended to assign seats in the House on the basis of the ratio which the individual bears to the total population of his State.

However, the question of method is secondary. The question of definitely assuring reapportionment in 1930 is paramount. I think you will find that a number of these gentlemen who are advocating the method of equal proportions will not vote for the bill, whereas I am sure that there are others like myself in the House who would vote for equal proportions if that would save the bill. But I think the method of major fractions is the fairer of the two and the one that conforms to the principle laid down in the Constitution.

But there is another reason for preferring the method of major fractions in this bill. Since we are assigning a ministerial function to the Secretary of Commerce, we ought to be careful not to assign to him the application of a method which has never hitherto been used. For ministerial purposes the method of major fractions should be used, that being the better known and the one that has been tried. When it comes to the merits of the question, that can be decided by the Congress in 1930, which will have the power to reapportion.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. HUDSON. Have we never apportioned on the equal proportion basis?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Never. No one will contradict that. Major fractions were used in 1840 and in 1910 and recommended in 1920.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact that Daniel Webster was a member of a committee to investigate the question of major fractions, and that he made an exhaustive report showing that the use of major fractions was the most fair?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. He did; but he did not actually develop the method of major fractions. The method he suggested came to be known as the Vinton method, which broke down in certain situations. That is what led to the method of major fractions, developed in its present form by Prof. Walter F. Willcox, of Cornell University.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman give us an illustration?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; I will give you an illustration. We have now a membership of 435. Suppose we fixed it at 436. Who would get the four hundred and thirty-sixth Member? Who would get the additional Member?

Mr. EDWARDS. The State of New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think you will agree with me that that State ought to get the four hundred and thirty-sixth Member which has the largest block of unrepresented votes. A State that has 110,000 ought to get the seat rather than the State having 100,000. But under the method of equal proportions the State having 100,000 might get the additional vote instead of the State having 110,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to proceed for another five minutes, because this method is going to be discussed and I shall not talk upon it again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for another five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Allow me to proceed for two minutes and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEEDY. But the gentleman has unintentionally misled the House. If the Hoch amendment were adopted the gentleman's statement would be correct, namely, that it would be the largest unrepresented block of American voters, but now it is the people in the State.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I do not know what the Hoch amendment is. I shall be glad to talk about it later, but let me come back to my illustration. I say that if you want a House of 436 you naturally and fairly should give the four hundred and thirty-sixth Member to the State that has the largest excess, but you would not necessarily do that under equal proportions; you would give it to the State whose excess is the highest ratio to the whole population of that State. For 100,000 in a State of 300,000 is a higher ratio than 110,000 in a State of 11,000,000. Is not that so? It is clear, therefore, that under equal proportions the next seat would be assigned to the State, not that has the largest fraction but has the largest ratio of excess, and that is manifestly unfair.

Mr. PEERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. Did not the majority of the expert mathematicians who appeared before the committee favor the method of equal proportions as being the best method?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. It is true that there are some mathematicians in the United States who favor the method of equal proportions.

Mr. PEERY. Did not the majority of the expert mathematicians who appeared before the committee favor the method of equal proportions?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think it is a fair statement to say that many of the mathematical scholars, who for one reason or another have advocated the equal proportions method on the merits of the method, would favor the method of major fractions in the assignment of the ministerial function. Congress itself has used the major-fraction method. We are sitting in this House to-day by virtue of the use of this method. Is it not logical, therefore, in a bill which directs the Secretary of Commerce to submit to us a table of reapportionment that he be directed to use the method which we have used?

Mr. PEERY. Were not two of those expert mathematicians from Yale University?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. From Harvard. As I have said, I am not here arguing the relative merits of the two methods, but I do say that in the assignment of a ministerial function we should assign a function which everybody knows, a method which has been used in the past, and a method which has never been found wanting. Now, the method of equal proportions is an untried method, and its proponents will admit it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Suppose the designation of a method were stricken out of this substitute and the substitute left as committing Congress, so far as this House can commit it, to a membership of 435, what would the gentleman say about that?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that if we asked the Secretary of Commerce to give us figures on reapportionment, he would say, "Under what method do you want me to allocate these 435 Members?"

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Secretary of Commerce could allocate them under both methods and then leave it to the Congress.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. There are a half dozen methods. Therefore, I say to the gentleman from Virginia that as we want to make sure of reapportionment in 1930, it is wise to tell the Secretary of Commerce explicitly what to do; we give him a definite formula, and that formula includes a definite method, without any discretion left to the Secretary of Commerce.

A document which throws a great deal of light on this intricate and important question is one prepared and submitted to the Members of Congress by Prof. Walter F. Willcox, of Cornell University. Professor Willcox was chief statistician for the Bureau of the Census, in charge of the division of methods and results, at the time of the taking of the census of 1900, and as such prepared the apportionment tables used by Congress at that time. In 1910, while teaching at Cornell University, he submitted tables embodying his improvements in the major-fraction method, which were accepted by the Census Committee and by Congress.

The letter was addressed originally to the chairman of the Census Committee and follows herewith:

Hon. E. HART FENN,

Chairman Committee on the Census,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FENN: As you know, I prepared the tables on which the apportionments of 1900 and 1910 were based and have appeared before your committee more than once while it was considering the forerunners of the bill just reported. I am interested especially in the method of apportionment and have urged your committee to prescribe in its bill the method last used by Congress rather than a novel and untried one.

While attending the hearings of 1927 and 1928 and listening last May from the gallery to the debate in the House of Representatives I formed the impression that some committee members and Members of the House are still puzzled by the complicated mathematical questions and arguments about apportionment. I am writing this letter to you, therefore, in a last-minute effort to make the different methods somewhat clearer, and am venturing to mail a copy to each Member of Congress. I do not, of course, touch on the main question of the desirable size of the House, but deal almost entirely with questions of method.

Your committee has had to choose between the method used in 1911, which then gave complete satisfaction to Congress and the country, and a novel, untried method. In the present bill, merely providing for a future apportionment by the Secretary of Commerce under specified conditions, it seems to me wise to prescribe the method used in the most recent congressional apportionment; every student of the subject with whom I have talked recently shares that opinion. If there be a better method, as some claim, let it be considered by your committee, and perhaps by Congress, when the figures of the next census are published and the ways in which the alternative methods deal with the specific situation can be compared. I do not think they can be compared intelligently until that evidence is available.

The essential differences, not merely between these two methods, but between four methods which perhaps deserve attention, may be brought out by an example. In the following table the population of each State in 1920 has been divided by 245,000, assuming for a moment that this round number had been chosen as the average population of a congressional district. The results of the division are stated for convenience as whole numbers and decimal fractions. The differences between the methods turn essentially upon differences in the meaning given to these fractions.

Table showing results of dividing the population of each State in 1920 by 245,000

State	Population in 1920	Result of division
New York	10,380,589	42.37
Pennsylvania	8,720,017	35.59
Illinois	6,485,280	26.47
Ohio	5,759,394	23.51
Texas	4,663,228	19.03
Massachusetts	3,852,356	15.72
Michigan	3,668,412	14.97
California	3,426,031	13.98
Missouri	3,404,055	13.89
New Jersey	3,155,900	12.88
Indiana	2,930,390	11.96
Georgia	2,895,832	11.82
Wisconsin	2,631,305	10.74
North Carolina	2,559,123	10.45
Kentucky	2,416,630	9.86
Iowa	2,404,021	9.81
Minnesota	2,385,656	9.74
Alabama	2,348,174	9.58
Tennessee	2,337,885	9.54
Virginia	2,309,187	9.43
Oklahoma	2,028,283	8.28
Louisiana	1,798,509	7.34
Mississippi	1,790,618	7.31
Kansas	1,769,257	7.22
Arkansas	1,752,204	7.15
South Carolina	1,683,724	6.87
West Virginia	1,463,701	5.97
Maryland	1,449,661	5.92
Connecticut	1,380,631	5.64
Washington	1,354,596	5.53
Nebraska	1,296,372	5.29
Florida	968,470	3.95
Colorado	939,161	3.83
Oregon	783,389	3.20
Maine	768,014	3.13
North Dakota	643,953	2.63
South Dakota	631,239	2.58
Rhode Island	604,397	2.47
Montana	541,511	2.21
Utah	448,388	1.83
New Hampshire	443,083	1.81
Idaho	430,442	1.76
New Mexico	353,428	1.44
Vermont	352,428	1.44
Arizona	309,495	1.26
Delaware	223,003	.91
Wyoming	193,487	.79
Nevada	75,820	.31
Sum of the whole numbers		404.00
Sum of the whole numbers and decimals		429.41

1. When Congress first attacked the problem in 1790 it decided after long debate involving not merely House and Senate but also all four members of the Cabinet and President Washington himself that fractional remainders, no matter how large, should be disregarded. That method, the method of rejected fractions, was regularly used until and including 1830. By it the preceding table would provide for apportioning a House of 404 Members.

2. In the lengthy debates over apportionment a century ago the question was referred to a special committee of the Senate, of which Daniel Webster was chairman. The report of that committee argued that a fraction larger than one-half entitled a State under the Constitution to an additional Representative. This view was rejected at the time but it prevailed in 1840 and has dominated congressional action ever since. The Vinton method introduced in 1850 and followed for half a century was thought at first to be merely another way of applying Webster's new principle. When this was shown to be an error Congress returned, in 1910, to the method of 1840.

In the preceding table, ignoring the last three States, there are 27 fractions larger than one-half, and by adding that number to the 404 Representatives apportioned for whole numbers the table under this Webster method or major-fraction method would provide for a House of 431 Members.

3. The advocates of the novel method of equal proportions hold in substance, although they do not state it in this way, that a fraction larger than the geometric mean between any two consecutive numbers entities a State to an additional Representative.

The geometric mean is found by multiplying the two numbers of Representatives under consideration together and finding the square root of the product. I do not need to state the intricate arguments by which this conclusion is defended; for present purposes we may consider only the results. The preceding table shows in the cases of Rhode Island, New Mexico, and Vermont minor fractions which are larger than the geometric means between one and two or two and three, and accordingly by this method the preceding table would provide for apportioning a House of 434 Members.

4. Another novel method whereby an additional Representative is allotted for every fraction, no matter how small, completes the list. The preceding table by this method would give a House of 449 Members.

My contribution to the analysis has been to show how any one of these four methods can be employed to yield a House of any desired size. Thus, if your committee wished to apportion 435 Members under the population figures of 1920 by any one of these four methods the divisors yielding that result would be:

Method	Divisor	Result (Members)
1	230,000	435
2	242,000	435
3	244,523	435
4	256,700	435

So far as their results are concerned, these methods differ from one another mainly in the distribution of Members between the large and the small States. Out of 435 Members the five States each having a population of over 4,000,000 by method No. 1 receive 155 Members and by method No. 4 only 143. On the other hand, the 14 States each having a population of between 300,000 and 1,000,000 by method No. 1 receive 28 Members and by method No. 4 receive 39 Members. The results of the other two methods lie between these two extremes.

May I add a paragraph of a more general sort? In the debate of last May objections of two kinds were raised to the bill. On the one hand, it was said to be a meaningless gesture, because no Congress could bind its successor; on the other hand, it was said to hand over to an administrative officer a congressional duty most important and delicate. These objections might be said to neutralize each other, for both can not be true; in my opinion neither is.

Under the Constitution Congress is expected to adjust after each census the distribution of Representatives among the States to the population shifts of the preceding decade. It has discretionary power also to change the number of Representatives. These two functions are now entangled; the object of the present bill is to disentangle them. It provides that if or when Congress can not agree to change the number of Representatives, then and only then the existing number shall be reapportioned among the States by a member of the Cabinet. In doing it he is to act under instructions from Congress so specific as to deprive him of all discretion and make his act purely ministerial.

I trust that the importance of the present question will be held to justify me in appealing in this way through you to Congress and the public on behalf of the pending bill.

Yours respectfully,

WALTER F. WILLCOX.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY,
Ithaca, N. Y., January 7, 1929.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the substitute, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Census can not be charged with derelict of duty, as four bills have been favorably reported since the census of 1920. It is needless to call to the attention of the House why none of the former bills have been enacted into law.

The present membership of this committee has struggled with the existing situation but did not arrive at a solution that was satisfactory to the full membership.

Since I became a member of this committee no effort has been made to reapportion under the census of 1920, as it is generally conceded that the enumeration was improperly made, largely on account of the lack of sufficient funds and the time of the year in which the census was taken.

It is generally known that at the time the census was taken there had been an abnormal shift of population, growing out of the exigencies of the World War. I know personally that a correct enumeration of the farm population of my section was not made.

The Committee on the Census reported out a bill authorizing a correct census to be made in the spring of 1930, and this bill is now pending before the Senate. While my State will not be affected by the passage of the present bill, it can not be charged that my vote is cast for selfish reasons.

I have listened with much interest to the argument on both sides of this question, and I think it is very unfortunate that the vote of any Member should be questioned in arriving at an honest conclusion. While I do not believe the Constitution is mandatory that we should have a reapportionment every 10 years, I stand ready to vote for a reapportionment bill after the proper census is taken in 1930.

If I am not mistaken, this is the first time an attempt has been made to reapportion the House in advance of the taking of the census, and I am not going to cast my vote for a precedent of this kind. [Applause.]

While I have confidence in many of the departments of this Government, I think the Congress has gone far afield in surrendering its constitutional rights and prerogatives, and the time has come for us to call a halt.

I believe that we should wait until after the Census Bureau makes its report to the Congress and then pass a reapportionment bill specifically allotting to each State the number of Representatives, as shown by the enumeration. It is not a question that should be settled along political lines. I am frank to state that I am not afraid to vote for a larger membership, as I believe a large House is more democratic.

While the method of major fractions was used in taking the census in 1920, Doctor Hill, of the Census Bureau, recommended the method of equal proportions, which he contended was more favorable to the smaller States. I feel safe in saying there is not a member of the committee who could satisfactorily explain these formulas.

My prediction is that if this bill passes it will be a long time before a successful effort is made to change its provisions. It could not become operative before 1932 and two sessions of the Congress will be convened between the time the census is actually taken and before the bill becomes operative; therefore, the States that were estimated to gain one or more Representatives have nothing to gain by abdicating our rights.

I would like to warn the Members as to the serious consequences that may follow the passage of this bill. We are magnifying its importance by thinking that the average voter is clamoring for its passage. The guide that we should follow in legislation of this kind should be our own conscience. Personally I would rather have no reapportionment than to establish in this House what I consider a most dangerous precedent. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER, Mr. BEGG, and Mr. HOCH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee and I rise in support of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending motion is to strike out the last word.

Mr. LOZIER. Then I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment in the second degree and can not be done. The Chair will recognize some one in opposition to the pro forma amendment, preferably a member of the committee and preferably one on the Republican side; otherwise the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I can not qualify under one of your requirements. I am a Republican, but I am not on the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, and until the members of the committee have had an opportunity to be recognized the Chair thinks preference should be given to the members of the committee.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to some provisions of the pending substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, on June 4, 1928, when a bill similar to this one was being considered in the House I expressed in detail my conviction that the membership of the House should be increased if we are to have representative government in the true sense of the term. I think I demonstrated beyond a doubt that the House is not now too large or unwieldy and that the magnitude of our governmental activities made inevitable an increase from time to time in the membership of this House, which, after all, is the one branch of our Congress that must be relied on to interpret, speak, and work the will of the masses. I have given additional thought to this subject since I made the remarks to which I have referred, and I am more than ever persuaded that the views I then expressed on reapportionment are bottomed on reason, common sense, and sound public policy. I am convinced the pending bill is vicious and should not be enacted into law. I favor the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], with a modification that will be suggested.

There are at least four distinct formulas for apportioning representation among the several States according to population. The first is what is known as the rejected fraction formula. This plan was advocated by Thomas Jefferson, and President Washington vetoed the first census bill because it recognized the policy or principle of major fractions. The rejected fraction formula was used in all apportionments under every census down to and including the census of 1830. Then we have what is known as the minimum range formula, which has never been used. In 1843 the major fraction formula was used. Between 1850 and 1900, both dates inclusive, what was known as the Vinton method prevailed, and in 1910 the major fraction formula was again used, but some of the calculations were arbitrarily made and some major fractions ignored. Another formula is what is known as the equal proportions. It has never been used at any time in our national history.

Statisticians and economists are not agreed as to which is the better, most just, and most scientific. It is generally conceded that the minimum range formula is most favorable to the small States, the major fraction plan more favorable to the large States, while the equal proportions formula reduces to the lowest minimum these objectionable features of the other two plans. In other words, it is claimed by its proponents that the equal proportions formula is fair to the small States without being unfair to the large States.

Now, the pending bill seeks to perpetuate the major fraction formula for all time.

I insist, gentlemen, it is folly for this House or the Congress to commit itself definitely, positively, and permanently to the major-fraction formula, or any other formula. The economists and the statisticians in the United States are not agreed as to which of these four plans is best and fairest to all States. The great majority of them favor the equal-proportions formula as the most scientific and just method of apportioning representation, but after listening to the learned statisticians and economists for several years I am rather of the opinion that the equal-proportion formula is the most scientific and equitable plan.

We ought not to commit ourselves to any definite formula or plan in view of the great diversity of opinion as to merit of the several systems. May I call your attention to the fact that from 1850 to 1900, both dates inclusive, we were following what is known as the Vinton method? It was used for many years before its weaknesses were discovered. When Congress attempted in 1870 to apply this method what is known as the Alabama paradox developed. We found that if the House was to consist of 299 Members, Alabama would be given 8 Representatives; but if you add 1 to the total membership of the House, making the total membership 300, Alabama would have 1 less, or only 7 Representatives. This ridiculous situation demonstrated the unreliability of the Vinton method, and, in fact, the folly of adopting for all time any particular formula. But sound judgment and common sense dictate that Congress be in a position to use any plan that reason suggests when Congress faces this problem after each decennial census.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LOZIER. Not just now.

Then again, in 1900, we had what was known as the Maine paradox and the Colorado paradox. When Congress attempted to apply the Vinton method in 1900, it found that with a membership of 383 Maine would have 4 Representatives, with 384 Members Maine would have 4, with 385 Members of the House Maine would have 4, but with 386 Members Maine would only have 3. Then if you jumped to 387 or 388 Maine would have 4, but if you increased the membership to 389 Maine's quota would drop down again to 3, and with 390 Maine would still have only 3, and then if you brought the membership up to 391 Maine would be entitled to 4.

In 1900 the Vinton method when applied to Colorado worked just as paradoxically, with a House membership of 356 or 358 Colorado would have been entitled to 3 Representatives, while with a membership of 357 Colorado's quota would be reduced to 2.

So when you write into the permanent law of the land the major-fraction formula, or any other hard-and-fast plan, you are making it possible, yes probable for injustice and abuses to be perpetrated in apportionments. All of these formulas are so elastic and uncertain in their operation that no definite or absolutely accurate or satisfactory result can under all circumstances be expected.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. LOZIER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know anything about these paradoxes, but would the gentleman vote for the bill if we struck out the provision providing that the method shall be by the major fraction formula?

Mr. LOZIER. Oh, no. This is not an apportionment bill. It is merely an alibi framed by the Republican majority to excuse its failure to pass an apportionment bill in 1920 or 1921. In the limited time allowed for debate I can not state the many reasons which influence me to withhold my approval from this bill. I have heretofore at very great length set forth the reasons which justify me in opposing this measure and in an extension of remarks I may restate these reasons and make some other observations in relation to the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Gentlemen, quite a number of States now have fewer Representatives than in former years, as the following statement will illustrate:

STATES THAT HAVE FEWER REPRESENTATIVES NOW THAN FORMERLY

Connecticut, under the 1790, 1800, and 1810 apportionments, had 7 Representatives; and under the 1820 and 1830 apportionments, it had 6. It now has 5.

Delaware, under the 1810 apportionment, had 2 Representatives. It now has 1.

Kentucky, under the 1820 apportionment, had 12 Representatives, and under the 1830 apportionment it had 13 Representatives. It now has 11, and under the pending bill will be reduced to 9.

Maine had 7 Representatives under the 1810 and 1820 apportionments, 8 under the 1830 apportionment, 7 under 1840 apportionment, 6 under 1850 apportionment, 5 under 1860 and 1870 apportionments. It now has 4, and the pending bill will deprive it of 1 of these.

Maryland, under the 1800, 1810, and 1820 apportionments, had 9 Representatives, and 8 Representatives under the 1830 apportionment. It now has 6.

Massachusetts had 17 Representatives under the 1800 apportionment. It now has 16, and under the pending bill will lose 1 of these.

New Hampshire had 3 Representatives when our Constitution was adopted. It had 6 under the apportionments of 1810 and 1820. It now has 2.

North Carolina had 12 Representatives under the 1800 apportionment and 13 Representatives under the apportionments of 1810, 1820, and 1830. It now has 10.

South Carolina had 8 Representatives under the 1800 apportionment and 9 Representatives under the apportionments of 1810, 1820, and 1830. It now has 7.

Tennessee had 13 Representatives under the 1830 apportionment, 11 under the 1840 apportionment, and only 10 now.

Vermont had 4 Representatives in 1800, 6 in 1810, 5 in 1820, 5 in 1830, 4 in 1840, 3 from 1850 to 1880, and it now has 2, what it had in 1790.

Virginia has now the same number of Representatives it had when our Constitution was adopted, 10. In 1790 it had 19, in 1800 it had 22, in 1810 it had 23, in 1820 it had 22, in 1830 it had 21, in 1840 it had 15, in 1850 it had 13, and in 1860 it had 11.

While the fact that a State may get a decreased representation under a reapportionment is no argument against an apportionment that is otherwise just; still, from a historical standpoint, the following statement is interesting and instructive:

STATES THAT HAVE LOST REPRESENTATIVES

Alabama lost 1 in 1860.
Connecticut lost 1 in 1820 and 2 in 1840.
Georgia lost 1 in 1790, 1 in 1840, and 1 in 1860.
Kentucky lost 3 in 1840 and 1 in 1860.
Maryland lost 1 in 1830, 2 in 1840, and 1 in 1860.
Delaware lost 1 in 1820.
Maine lost 1 in 1840, 1 in 1850, 1 in 1860, and 1 in 1880.
Massachusetts lost 4 in 1810, 1 in 1830, 2 in 1840, and 1 in 1860.
New Hampshire lost 1 in 1830, 1 in 1840, 1 in 1850, and 1 in 1880.
New Jersey lost 1 in 1840.
New York lost 6 in 1840, 1 in 1850, and 2 in 1860.
North Carolina lost 4 in 1840, 1 in 1850, and 1 in 1860.
Ohio lost 2 in 1860.
Pennsylvania lost 4 in 1840 and 1 in 1860.
South Carolina lost 2 in 1840, 1 in 1850, and 2 in 1860.
Tennessee lost 2 in 1840 and 2 in 1860.
Vermont lost 1 in 1820, 1 in 1840, 1 in 1850, and 1 in 1880.
Virginia lost 1 in 1820, 1 in 1830, 6 in 1840, 2 in 1850, 2 in 1860, and 2 in 1870.

I want to say I am opposed to a formula which limits the size of this House to a membership of 435. What charm or what magic is there in the number 435? Why is that number sacred? Why should 435 be selected as the exact membership of the House?

In 1789 we had one Congressman for every 30,000 population, and this provision was written into the Constitution of the United States, that the membership of the House should be at least one for every 30,000 population. As the population increased and our Government grew in territorial extent, wealth, population, and business the number of Representatives was increased and properly so. This was contemplated and provided for by our constitutional fathers. They did not put the American people in a strait-jacket as this bill seeks to do. They knew that with an expanding nation a larger Congress would be necessary from time to time.

I have prepared a table showing the basis on which apportionments were made since 1789, the membership of the House and population for each decade, and the plan used to apportion representation. It conclusively demonstrates that the House is not too large and that if we are to have popular or representative government it will be necessary to further increase the size of the House from time to time.

Basis of apportioning representation, 1789–1910

	One Representative for each—	Membership	Population
1789 (constitutional provision)	30,000	65
1790 (rejected fractions)	33,000	105	3,929,214
1800 (rejected fractions)	33,000	141	5,308,483
1810 (rejected fractions)	35,000	181	7,239,881
1820 (rejected fractions)	40,000	213	9,638,453
1830 (rejected fractions)	47,700	240	12,866,020
1840 (major fractions)	70,680	233	17,069,453
1850 (Vinton method)	93,423	234	23,191,876
1860 (Vinton method)	127,381	243	31,443,321
1870 (Vinton method)	131,425	293	38,558,371
1880 (Vinton method)	151,911	325	50,155,783
1890 (Vinton method)	173,901	356	62,947,714
1900 (Vinton method)	194,182	386	75,994,575
1910 (major fractions)	211,877	433	91,972,266
1920			105,710,620
If apportionment had been made by major fractions formula, for a membership of 435	241,663
If apportioned by rejected fractions formula	230,000
If apportioned by Vinton method	241,864
If apportioned by equal proportions formula	244,523
1930	(1)	(1)	(1)

[1] According to estimate of Bureau of Census Jan. 19, 1927, p. 41 of hearings, population was estimated at 123,288,000, which, under major fractions formula would b 1 Representative for each 283,420 population for a House of 435, and according to estimate, p. 11 of report, the population is fixed at 122,537,000, which would make a basis of 281,694.

I direct your attention to the following table showing members of parliament in certain foreign countries, in relation to population, area, and estimated wealth, compared with the same figures for the United States:

Country	Membership of—		Population	Area (square miles)	Estimated national wealth	Ratio represented by each member of lower house in relation to total
	Higher house	Lower house				Population	Area	National wealth
Great Britain and Northern Ireland	730	515	42,919,710	89,041	$120,000,000,000	69,788	145	$195,121,951
Canada	96	245	9,364,200	3,729,665	22,195,000,000	38,221	15,214	90,519,837
France	314	580	39,209,518	212,659	60,000,000,000	67,603	367	103,448,276
Germany	68	493	62,539,098	181,257	40,000,000,000	126,854	368	81,135,903
Italy	387	560	42,115,606	119,624	35,000,000,000	75,206	214	62,500,000
Japan	409	464	61,081,954	260,707	22,500,000,000	131,642	562	48,491,379
United States	96	435	122,537,000	3,627,557	355,000,000,000	281,649	8,339	816,091,954

The foregoing data in reference to our present national wealth and the probable population of the United States in 1930 are taken from official sources.

I call attention to the fact that we have a smaller representation in the House than any other similar representative body in the world. Great Britain has a membership of 515 in the House of Commons and 730 in the upper house.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman know that the members of the House of Commons are sprawled all over the hall, and in the galleries—that they have not sufficient space?

Mr. LOZIER. That is beside the question. Great Britain has 42,000,000 people, and the House of Commons has 515 members. Her national wealth is only about one hundred and twenty billions; the national wealth of the United States is $355,000,000,000, and we have only 435 Representatives. The membership of the Chamber of Deputies in France is 580. The German Reichstag has a membership of 493. Italy's popular Assembly has a membership of 560, and the United States only 435. Considering our national wealth, population, area, and stupendous resources a House of 500 or even 600 would not be too large or inefficient.

I have prepared the following statement, which conclusively demonstrates that when area, population, and national wealth are considered, the American people have fewer Representatives in Congress than any other first-class power; and there is more national wealth and probably more business transacted in the United States than in all of these other six nations combined. The statement follows:

(a) Great Britain and Northern Ireland, with a population of 42 million and a national wealth of 120 billion, have 1,245 lawmakers.

(b) France, with a population of 39 million and a national wealth of 60 billion, has 894 lawmakers.

(c) Germany, with 62 million population and 40 billion national wealth, has 561 lawmakers.

(d) Italy, with 42 million population and 35 billion national wealth, has 947 lawmakers.

(e) Japan, with 61 million population and 22½ billion national wealth, has 873 lawmakers.

(f) While the United States, with 123 million population and 355 billion national wealth, has only 531 lawmakers.

There is nothing in the argument that the House is too large now. We know that this House does function. It functions more perfectly than any legislative body in the world. It functions more efficiently than the Senate with only 96 Members. As a matter of fact the House can and does work its will quickly whenever a majority makes up its mind what it wants to do.

The reactionary forces in the United States would like to see the membership in the House reduced one-half or even more because they realize the fewer the Members the easier it is to control legislation. They do not want popular government in the true sense of the term. They are always looking forward to the time when bureaucratic government will supplant representative government, and when Congress will be composed of only a few Members, who would supinely register the will of the President, bureau chiefs, and special privilege classes. They would make Congress a close corporation controlled by the rich, high born, special privilege, and influential classes.

On the contrary, I would have Congress a great popular forum with a membership sufficiently large to give every great vocational group ample representation, to the end that outstanding national problems could be debated and deliberately considered, and wise national policies formulated by men fresh from the districts they represent and well informed as to the interests of their constituents.

The fewer Members of Congress the greater the power of committees to strangle and pigeonhole legislation. With a relatively small House of Representatives the power of a few blocs or groups to control legislation is increased. Practically all benign, progressive, and constructive legislation in the last 50 years has originated in the House of Representatives, and has been sponsored in most instances by newly elected Representatives coming fresh from the people and reflecting the popular will long before the Senate with its small membership awakened to a realization that there were any such public problems.

Every just government must reflect the public will and execute the public mandate. The smaller the legislative body the less responsive it is to public sentiment, less inclined to reflect the will of the masses, and more disposed to yield to pressure and influence from those whose chief purpose is to exploit the people and plunder the government. A comparatively small House of Representatives is more liable to come under venal influences and more eager to legislate for the benefit of a few favored classes and to the detriment of the great army of so-called common people.

The multiplication of departments, bureaus, and commissions has tremendously increased the work of Representatives in Congress.

Every mail brings to me communications from my constituents requesting information or my assistance in matters in which they are interested and which are pending in the various departments, bureaus, and commissions. A custom has grown up under which Members of Congress are expected and required to perform these services, and I am glad to serve my constituents in this or any other right way. You will realize the amount of time a Congressman must give to matters of this kind when I tell you that all of my time when I am not on the floor of the House is employed in rendering my constituents this character of service. In view of this situation, I insist that no Member of the House can represent more than 250,000 people in an efficient and satisfactory manner, and a congressional district should not be so large or contain so many people that a Congressman is unable to familiarize himself as to the needs of his constituents. An increase in the House membership is absolutely inevitable if the masses are to have adequate representation and if the different vocational groups are to have an opportunity of expressing their will through their Representatives.

We know that the special, sordid, and sinister interests of this country when they want to work their purpose and defeat just legislation do not come to the House of Representatives. Where do they go? They "hotfoot" it over to another branch of the Congress of the United States, because they know they can more easily control legislation at the other end of the Capitol. They realize that in order to defeat legislation they only have to control—not necessarily by improper motives—49 Senators, while if they attempted to control the House they would have to control at least 218 Representatives. When you reduce the size of the House you reduce the size of the committees, and you make it easy for the selfish, sordid, and sinister interests of the Nation to control legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I rise to ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. In the following way: By striking out in line 13 on page 2, "by the method of equal proportion," and substituting "by such method as Congress may determine." I do not care which method it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman offers a substitute for the section instead of to the whole bill?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner suggested, and make it a substitute for the first section instead of the bill itself. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to add to the gentleman's amendment, "by the equalization fee." [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Any method that will make it more equal. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. CELLER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is in favor of this bill?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I am in favor of my substitute.

Mr. CELLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think there might be another deadlock if we leave the method to another Congress?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. The gentleman from Mississippi has stated, and I have said, that we are in favor of a reapportionment by Congress after the Census of 1930 is completed, but we are in favor of Congress doing it.

Mr. CELLER. That is just the difficulty. Everybody seems to be in favor of reapportionment, but nobody wants to do anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the first committee amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, I listened to my distinguished colleague Mr. TREADWAY in his argument in favor of this, the Fenn bill, and it brought to my mind the fact that if this bill passes, with the State of Massachusetts politically situated as it is, there is a strong probability that there will be a Republican legislature at the time of reapportionment of these congressional districts. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are two Democratic Congressmen from the city of Boston and always will be—Boston being a great Democratic city—and that I am the only Democrat in Congress from Massachusetts who comes from outside of the city of Boston, my home being in Lynn, so you can readily see that when the question of redistricting comes up before the Republican Legislature of Massachusetts it is almost a certainty that with one congressional district seat taken from Massachusetts, as this bill provides, the aim of that Republican legislature will be to eliminate the present Member of Congress from the seventh congressional district, and I refer to Mr. CONNERY, of Lynn. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the House that I am for the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] And I am going to support this bill. In speaking of Massachusetts, I might also add that while the Legislature of Massachusetts is Republican, and while the people of Massachusetts always elect a Republican legislature, nevertheless the State of Massachusetts showed a remarkable discernment of the character of a wonderful man and chose to cast its electoral vote in the last election for that great Democratic candidate for President, Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Merely to suggest a method by which the gentleman could make more sure of representing the seventh district of Massachusetts, and that is to get over into the party which he says will control the legislature.

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, let me say to the gentleman that gratuitously the Republicans of the seventh district of Massachusetts did me the honor of giving me the Republican nomination in that district at the last election, and I was elected on both the Democratic and Republican tickets. [Laughter and applause.] Incidentally I might also add that the Republicans voted on stickers and gave me 5,000 stickers in my district without any solicitation upon my part. I am grateful for and appreciate the honor which they paid me.

I believe that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States should be enforced. I do not believe it is mandatory upon Congress to reapportion every 10 years, but it is mandatory under the Constitution that an enumeration must be taken every 10 years. Nevertheless, I believe it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that we should have this reapportionment every 10 years in order that we might have real representation of the people according to population.

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will yield, is it the intention to have it before or after the enumeration is made?

Mr. CONNERY. It is after the enumeration is made, and, of course, this should have been done after the 1920 census.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Under this bill will not the reapportionment take place after?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I wish to say in conclusion that I am for the Constitution. I believe in it. I want to see it strictly enforced, and I am going to vote for this bill even if it means my elimination from Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on the first committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, beginning in line 3, after the word "That," strike out "as soon as practical after the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census," and insert in lieu thereof "on the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress and of each fifth Congress thereafter."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOCH. I have a perfecting amendment which I desire to offer. Would it be in order after the committee amendment and before the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, in line 1, strike out the words "such census" and insert in lieu thereof "the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to oppose the adoption of the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I propose to say only a few words in reference to this proposition. It seems to me that whatever might be the position of gentlemen upon the pending bill in reference to the present apportionment of the House, certainly it is not the part of wisdom to bind succeeding Congresses which should desire to act upon this every 10 years thereafter indefinitely. Now, four Congresses failed to perform in reference to the census taken in 1920, and it seems to me certainly we ought to leave to succeeding Congresses the right to legislate upon this question under their constitutional warrant, and for that reason for one I propose to vote against the committee amendments.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will yield, is there anything in this bill to prevent the succeeding Congresses from doing that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; nor nothing to prevent the next Congress from repealing this act. I think it is one of the main arguments against this bill. It is merely a gesture; it is no affirmative legislation in a constitutional sense. That is my view, but the point I insist upon, it seems to me the part of wisdom, to leave the question of apportionment to a Congress whose duty it shall be to deal with that matter hereafter, and I hope the committee amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I voted for the last apportionment bill and will vote for the pending bill. This Congress will be derelict in its constitutional duty if it fails to enact such legislation. [Applause.]

While, under the estimates of the Department of Commerce, the State of Wisconsin will not lose or gain a Member, we can not foresee what the next census will reveal. There may be a different set-up after the actual census is taken than that set-up which has been submitted to the Congress by the department. The enactment of an apportionment bill is a matter of principle, and it makes no difference whether any State loses or gains in membership.

Newspapers throughout the State of Wisconsin, of all political varieties, have editorially condemned Congress, and I believe rightfully so, for not passing apportionment legislation. I think it is the duty of this Congress to serve notice on the next Congress that the constitutional provision shall be obeyed, or else there will be a reapportionment as provided in this bill. [Applause.]

I say to my friends who talk much about the sacred provisions of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution that there are other provisions of the Constitution just as sacred, and those gentlemen who continually talk about enforcing the provisions of the Constitution, particularly the eighteenth amendment, should be on the floor of the House advocating the passage of this bill and not opposing it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOCH: Page 2, line 5, after the word "made," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 down to and including the word "numbers," and insert the following: "in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I regret to ask for any extension of time, but my own view is that ample time ought to be allowed to all Members who wish to discuss substantive propositions on a bill of this importance.

May I say just a personal word to express my own attitude? Many of us have had personal embarrassment in connection with this proposition. I have always voted for apportionment bills in this House, in face of the fact that my State would apparently be one of those to lose, because I believe we have the duty to perform under the Constitution. I have opposed an increase in membership. I shall vote for this bill, although I do not like all its provisions and would prefer to vote for a direct apportionment bill. But I have not the time to discuss those general views.

As the House is aware, I have offered an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to exclude aliens from the count in determining the representation in Congress, and thereby also determine the vote in the Electoral College. I have been importuned by many of the Members to offer that proposition to this bill. Firmly as I believe in the soundness of the proposition, I have not been able to bring myself to offer that amendment to this bill, because in my own view it requires an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and I can not subject myself to the charge of insincerity in the support of this bill by offering an amendment which in my own view is unconstitutional. I may, however, if I have the time, discuss the amendment very briefly.

I now submit that the language of this bill which I have proposed to strike out is contrary to the Constitution, and I invite your careful attention to the consideration of this question which has not been raised thus far in this debate. All I ask is to strike out certain words and insert "in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States," leaving in the provision as to the method of major fractions.

Now, listen to the language of this bill. I begin to read on line 2, page 2:

And the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives made in the following manner: By apportioning 1 Representative to each State (as required by the Constitution) and by apportioning the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers, as shown by such census, by the method known as the method of major fractions.

Now, I submit that that is not in accordance with the Constitution of the United States; that nowhere in the Constitution is there a provision calling for the apportionment of one Member to each State before you start the reapportionment.

What does the Constitution provide? It provides that the representation shall be proportionate to the number.

Then it says in another place no State shall have less than one Member of Congress, but that is an entirely different proposition from saying that you shall first apportion one Representative to every State and then shall subsequently apportion according to their numbers. To illustrate that, suppose it were provided in this bill that we should take half of the proposed Representatives and apportion them equally among all the States regardless of population, and then should apportion the remainder according to numbers. Obviously, that would be unconstitutional.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the alternative which the gentleman presents?

Mr. HOCH. The language is—in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

For instance, let me put it this way: Suppose after we have apportioned all of the Representatives according to the numbers of the respective States we then find that no State has less than one Representative. I submit that we have fulfilled all of the constitutional requirements, and there would be no necessity of apportioning one to every State. In other words, you have taken 48 Members of the 435 and apportioned them, not on the basis of the Constitution, which is according to numbers, but you have apportioned them equally, 48 of them, among all of the States of the Union, and you only provide that the remainder, namely, 435 less 48, shall be apportioned according to the Constitution.

I am familiar with the fact that the last apportionment made followed this system; but because somebody in the Census Office followed this system does not make it constitutional, and I yield to any man who will show me any place in the Constitution where it says that it shall be done, to quote this bill—by apportioning one Representative to each State (as required by the Constitution) and by apportioning the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman understands that if one Member is given to each State it does not affect the total given to any State?

Mr. HOCH. No; I do not understand any such thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A State has 1 Member—for instance, Arizona—and another State has 21 Members. When 1 Member is assigned to each State, that Member is not guaranteed his one place; the 1 takes his place in the 21, and such a scheme is necessary in any computation if you are going to do anything along the line of computation according to population.

Mr. HOCH. Not at all; and I believe it can be demonstrated mathematically and that just as far as possible all of the Members must be apportioned according to numbers if the Constitution is followed. Now, it might be true that by the time you got down to the last State you would find you had apportioned, we will say, all but one Member. Suppose we had apportioned 434 according to numbers and we found there was one State that did not have any Member and yet we found there was some other State which had a larger remainder unrepresented than this one State; then the Constitution would require that instead of giving that last Member to that State, so that the State would have two, we would give that Member to the State which had none, and that is as the Constitution requires. When you take 48 Members and apportion them regardless of numbers, it can not be that it would come out the same as if you apportioned them according to numbers.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think the gentleman from Kansas is correct; but I think this is true, and I think the gentleman will agree with me, that that method really favors the small States.

Mr. HOCH. I am not discussing the question as to which State is favored, and I am not interested in that. I am merely proposing a method here which I think meets with constitutional sanction, and I submit to the friends of this bill that all I have done is to say that the apportionment shall be made in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman would seem to think that we would willy-nilly give one Member to New York State and that he would hold his place as a sort of bonus, which is not the proposition at all.

Mr. HOCH. No; not that. Let me read the provision to the gentleman. It provides that the apportionment shall be in the following manner: Apportion one Representative to each State, and then—apportion the remainder of the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers.

In other words, you do not apportion 435 according to numbers but apportion 435 less 48; that is, 387, according to numbers.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I understand the gentleman's position, which seems to me to be reasonable, it is that under this arrangement each State would get two Congressmen.

Mr. HOCH. Not necessarily. I must hasten because I have only 10 minutes. I am sorry I can not yield further, but my time is too limited.

Suppose we have given one to every State, and we then find under the apportionment of the balance that at least one goes to every State. What would be the result if this happened, and it might easily happen? We would then have a State having two Members instead of having only one Member, according to population. That is very plain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEEDY and Mr. CRAMTON rose.

Mr. BEEDY. Now that the committee has been generous, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. It appears to me that technically the gentleman is absolutely correct, but this question comes to my mind. If we write in the amendment that is proposed by the gentleman from Kansas, who would then determine what is the constitutional method?

Mr. HOCH. I take it, in the last analysis, perhaps, the court will have to do that, and if we write this committee language in the bill I would undertake to make a guess as to what the courts would say as to whether this is constitutional.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am quite in sympathy with the gentleman's view. I think he is correct. As I understand his view, it is this, applying it, that a State with a population of 250,000, under the language of this bill, would be given two Representatives.

Mr. HOCH. It might easily happen. I do not say that in all cases it would happen, but clearly it might happen, mathematically, and if it did happen it would violate the Constitution.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not see how it could help happening.

Mr. STOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STOBBS. I agree that the gentleman's contention is sound. It seems to me it is absolutely sound, but I am wondering, to clear up the ambiguity suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], if the gentleman's amendment should not read:

The 435 Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers: Provided, That each State shall have at least one Representative.

Then you have the exact language of the Constitution taken from the 14th amendment and from the provision in the original Constitution.

Mr. HOCH. If we were going to do that I think we should incorporate all the language of the fourteenth amendment that applies to this proposition.

Mr. STOBBS. No; because you are simply apportioning among the States with respect to their respective numbers.

Mr. HOCH. But there is the rest of it with respect to counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

Mr. STOBBS. That is in the bill.

Mr. HOCH. I can not yield further for the moment.

I realize the temper of the House, but let me add this further reason, and I wish I had time to discuss the merits of the alien proposition.

I have this further purpose, and I will frankly state it. If we should be able to secure ratification of an amendment of the Constitution excluding aliens from the count, then the law, as I read it, would be adaptable to that situation—"according to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States."

So if we should adopt the amendment it would be all right, but if we incorporate the full language of the fourteenth amendment and then there should be an amendment of the Constitution, we would have the anomalous situation of the Constitution providing for the apportionment one way and the statute providing for the apportionment in another way, whereas if you simply say it shall be done in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, certainly, nobody can object to that, and that provides for any eventuality in connection with the matter. Of course, this statute would fall if the Constitution were changed.

Mr. STOBBS. If the gentleman will yield just a minute, the difficulty is that while you are conferring a ministerial power upon the Secretary of Commerce in this bill yet the minute you put in the words "in accordance with the Constitution of the United States," you are leaving to him the construction of the Constitution of the United States, whereas it seems to me you ought to specify, when you are conferring a ministerial power, exactly what you want that man to do and specify the provisions of the Constitution under which he shall act.

Mr. HOCH. And I suggest that if you specify, you ought to be very careful to specify a constitutional method.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Has the gentleman taken figures of any census or of any method to see whether you actually come to any different conclusion?

Mr. HOCH. I worked out a simple illustration or two which was enough to satisfy me. But I think it can be determined plainly as a matter of logic.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think the gentleman will find that even if you take your method you will come to no different conclusion from that which is provided for in this bill. Even if you do not assign 48 Members, but simply apportion all the Members according to population, you will come to the same result.

Mr. HOCH. Does the gentleman know of any provision in the Constitution that provides that 48 Members shall be apportioned regardless of numbers?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. No.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. On the very face of the language you are going to strike out under your amendment, are we not confronted with the anomalous situation that the statute itself seems to concede that just part of the proposal is required by the Constitution, and is there not the inference that the balance set out is not required by the Constitution and is possibly outside of constitutional requirements?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I simply rise to take some exception to the observations of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] concerning the exclusion of aliens in the count for the purpose of reapportionment. I ask the gentleman from Kansas if he is aware—as I am informed—that in his own State of Kansas an alien who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen shall have the right to vote? I understand that in several other States—the States of Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Texas—by their constitutions aliens vote if they have declared their intention to become citizens.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I will.

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman from New York is about nine years, if I recollect right, behind the times. As far as our State of Kansas is concerned, that was repealed in 1920, and I apologize for the State prior to 1920.

Mr. CELLER. I was then misinformed about Kansas. However that may be, there are some States, nevertheless, where they allow aliens to vote as declarants. You have, then, in some States the anomalous situation of a man who has a right to vote but is not counted in for the purpose of apportionment. And regardless of that, when it comes to taxation, surely, when it comes to the draft act, you do not discriminate against the aliens and say that they shall not be included.

Article I of the Constitution provides that Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States according to population. Thus, as far as taxes are concerned, income taxes for example, all must pay, alien and citizen alike. There is no discrimination when the country's bills are to be paid. Why should there be discrimination when representation in Congress is concerned? We fought a war in part because we, as colonists, were taxed without representation. Shall the aliens now cry, "Taxation without representation"? There are 7,000,000 aliens amongst us. They are generally law-abiding and useful and productive. Why slap them in the face, make them sullen and resentful?

Amendment 14, section 2, of the Constitution provides:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

You note that the amendment speaks of "persons." Maybe the gentleman from Kansas says the aliens are not persons and therefore need not be counted. Are aliens persons? Let the gentleman from Kansas answer.

Of course, all this discussion on this bill is malapropos. It would take a constitutional amendment to exclude aliens. Yet one can not help dilate upon the injustice of the proposal. In the selective draft act thousands and thousands of aliens were taken from the bosom of their families, placed in training, and catapulted abroad. Under treaty we have no right to treat them thus. We rode roughshod over the complaints of foreign governments that treaties were being trampled upon, which treaties guaranteed the rights of nationals of the complaining governments who were resident here. But most of the drafted aliens willingly entered our Army. Many of them made the supreme sacrifice. Go into any town, hamlet, or city. Examine their gold-star honor rolls. You will find many of the names gloriously written there were possessed by aliens.

Why place another bar sinister upon the alien? You have adopted restrictive legislation; some even want to register them. Why put more burdens on them? Leave them alone. I think it is wrong from every standpoint to exclude the aliens in this count.

I would remind gentlemen who are in favor of such propositions that something like 14 members of the Cabinets of Presidents during the course of our history at one time or another were aliens. I will put in the RECORD such names as Alexander Hamilton, Albert Gallatin, Carl Schurz, and our own present Secretary of Labor, Mr. Davis, who at one time were aliens. If you are going to exclude and hunt and hound aliens this way, do you not discourage them? Do you not make them lose heart? Do you not dampen an ardor to aspire, even, to Cabinet office?

It is interesting to note here and now the members of the Presidents' Cabinets who were born on foreign soil:

Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury from September 11, 1789, to January 31, 1795. Born on the island of Nevis, January 11, 1757.

Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury from May 14, 1801, to February 9, 1814. Born in Geneva, Switzerland, January 25, 1761.

George Washington Campbell, Secretary of the Treasury from February 9, 1814, to September 26, 1814. Born in the shire of Sutherland, Scotland, in 1768.

Alexander James Dallas, Secretary of the Treasury from October 14, 1814, to October 21, 1816. Born on the island of Jamaica, June 21, 1759.

William Jones Duane, Secretary of the Treasury from June 1, 1833, to September 23, 1833. Born in Clanrood, Ireland, in 1780.

James McHenry, Secretary of War from February 6, 1796, to May 31, 1800. Born in county Antrim, Ireland, November 16, 1753.

Henry Dilwood Gilpin, Attorney General from January 11, 1840, to March 3, 1841. Born in Lancaster, England, April 14, 1801.

Jacob Dolson Cox, Secretary of the Interior from March 9, 1869, to October 31, 1870. Born in Montreal, Canada, October 27, 1828.

Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior from March 12, 1877, to March 7, 1881. Born near Cologne, Prussia, March 2, 1829.

Franklin Knight Lane, Secretary of the Interior from March 5, 1913, to February 29, 1920. Born near Charlottestown, Prince Edward Island, Canada, July 15, 1864.

James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture from March 5, 1897, to March 5, 1913. Born in Ayrshire, Scotland, August 16, 1835.

Oscar Solomon Straus, Secretary of Commerce and Labor from December 17, 1906, to March 4, 1909. Born in Ottenberg, Bavaria, December 23, 1850.

William Bauchop Wilson, Secretary of Labor from March 5, 1913, to March 5, 1921. Born in Blantyre, Scotland, April 2, 1862.

John James Davis, Secretary of Labor from March 5, 1921, to date. Born in Tredegar, Wales, October 27, 1873.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOCH. Since the gentleman has referred to Kansas, is the gentleman aware that in New York by the State constitution they exclude aliens in the apportionment of representatives to the State legislature?

Mr. CELLER. I am well aware of the fact. I am not proud of that. It is wrong. But that wrong will soon be righted. There is great agitation in New York now to do away with the State census and to rely upon the Federal census. Such exclusion will not long remain upon New York statute books. Incidentally it was placed in the constitution for fear that the city would have greater power than the country. It is as inequitable as it is barbarous.

Now, I want to remind the gentlemen also that in the very beginning we were not so fearful about the alien. Everyone in the country at the time of the adoption of the Constitution became a charter member of this great United States. They did not worry about the situation then.

Let me read a brief passage from Americans by Choice, by John Palmer Gavit:

OUR "CHARTER MEMBERS"

As in the case of other new organizations, we had at the beginning what might be called "charter members." We were not fussy about it. There was no prejudice then against the newcomer—we "needed him in our business!" The Constitution of the United States in its inception took in as a matter of course everybody then resident here who by any color of law could be construed to be entitled to membership. Even the provision requiring native birth for the Presidency limited it only to one natural born, "or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution." Martin Van Buren was actually the first President born an American citizen. The seven who preceded him all were born subjects of the British Crown.

I favor a reapportionment of Representatives. Everyone here seems to favor a reapportionment.

Mark Twain said everyone talks about the weather but nobody wants to do anything about it. So the opponents of this bill also want reapportionment but will do nothing about it. Their pious declarations are meaningless.

The Constitution means something or it does not. It contains a solemn command that a census be taken each decade and reapportionment shall be based upon such census. Congress has been remiss in its duty since the 1920 census was announced. Unsuccessful efforts to reapportion have been made in the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses. There has been no apportionment since 1911. Due to vast changes and shifting in population, we are fast developing a "rotten borough" system. There are many inequalities. Some Representatives represent 200,000 people, others close to a million. The more we delay the worse the situation becomes and the less grows the likelihood of legislation with each succeeding Congress. The delegation of each State that loses one or more Representatives will always vote against a reapportionment. One remedy would be to increase the size of the membership of this House above 435. Then no State would lose a Representative. That would be wrong, since the House is already unwieldy because of the number of Representatives. The number should not be increased.

This bill provides that if Congress fails to reapportion in 1930–31, then automatically the House is reapportioned in accordance with the tabulation transmitted by the Secretary of Commerce in his ministerial capacity as provided for in this bill; the tabulations transmitted to Congress are on the basis of the 1930 census, with the House membership remaining at 435.

An analysis of the bill will show that Congress always reserves to itself the right to make the reapportionment at any time it sees fit to do so. It is only in the event that Congress fails to do this that the provision for the automatic reapportionment goes into effect, and then only remains in effect until action is taken by Congress.

This is the only way to break the present deadlock. New York may lose one Representative by the 1930 census. What of it? The Constitution is more important than the loss of one Representative for New York. The Constitution must be obeyed. It is very strange that those who are loudest in complaining about violations of the eighteenth amendment are the most active in opposing this bill and in nullifying the other part of the Constitution, which is just as important as the eighteenth amendment, to wit, the first article and the fourteenth amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think the contention of the gentleman from Kansas is absolutely sound in that the phraseology of the present bill is not in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution, but I am not so sure that the amendment suggested by him is going to take us out of the difficulty. By his amendment he prescribes that the Secretary of Commerce shall apportion in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. The difficulty of that position is that we may be conferring by that language upon the Secretary of Commerce something more than purely a ministerial function, and the minute we do that we are adding an unconstitutional provision to this bill. There is one other objection to the amendment, and it is this: This matter has not been carefully worked out as far as it is going to affect the other provisions of this bill, and it is uncertain just how much of the phraseology ought to be inserted here from the particular clauses of the Constitution.

Mr. HOCH. I leave in the last part of the section which provides for the method of major fractions.

Mr. STOBBS. That is all right.

Mr. HOCH. Unless the argument of the proponents of this bill is wrong, and this is something more than a ministerial duty, and I agree with those who say that it is only a ministerial duty, there is no question at all about the Secretary following the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. The only uncertainty is as to the method, and when I have left in the method, there is nothing for the Secretary of Commerce to do except certify the numbers as he finds them under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which are admitted by all, and have been exercised time and again before, according to the system of major fractions.

Mr. STOBBS. Why not specify under what provisions of the Constitution he wants the Secretary of Commerce to perform?

Mr. HOCH. I have stated to the gentleman that it would have been proper to use the first sentence of the second section of the fourteenth amendment, but the difficulty about that, from my viewpoint, believing in the exclusion of aliens, is that if we could get an amendment to the Constitution to exclude aliens, then we would have the statute reading differently from the Constitution, whereas if we say "according to the Constitution of the United States," then if the Constitution should be changed and aliens should be excluded, this statute would still be there for all time and be adaptable.

Mr. STOBBS. But the gentleman forgets that you can change a statute just as well as you can amend the Constitution of the United States. You may be running into a situation of asking the Secretary of Commerce to construe the Constitution of the United States, an act judicial rather and ministerial, and thus make your whole bill bad.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOBBS. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would not the object of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] and that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS] be both met by striking out all of line 6 and all of line 7 except the last two words, "the four," change the period to a comma after "fractions," in line 11, and add these words:

Subject to the provision, however, that one Representative shall be assigned to each State.

In other words, you simply apportion the 435 Members among the States according to the census, subject to the provision that there shall be one Representative to each State.

Mr. STOBBS. I think that is sound, though I think you ought to use the phraseology of the Constitution by saying "Provided, That there shall be at least one Representative from each State."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, while I do not expect to vote for this bill as it stands, nor shall I vote for it even if the idea which is in the mind of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] is put into the bill, because that will not meet my objections to the measure, nevertheless I think the question which has been raised here by the gentleman from Kansas deserves the very serious consideration of its proponents and supporters. It seems pretty clear to my mind that under the provisions of this bill there are only 387 Members who will be apportioned on the major fraction basis and that there is no requirement that the Secretary of Commerce in sending his report to the Congress shall in those States that have more than one Member take the first one into consideration in making the calculation. In other words, there are 48 Members distributed here who will be wholly independent of the calculation and there will be only 387 calculated for under the terms of the language as it stands in the bill.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. I agree with the gentleman, but as a practical effect do not we have that case under the constitutional provision? There are 48 States; at least a portion of the 48 States that will not be chosen on the basis of major fractions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, this thing is complicated to my mind, and it is impossible for me to follow through in my own mind just what this result is going to be, but when we use the word "remainder" in connection with the major fraction idea, necessarily it does exclude one for each State before you begin the calculation.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Of course, the gentleman understands that in 1910, the last reapportionment, it was actually worked in this way, and that we are now proposing a method which actually was used in 1910.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In that case the Congress itself worked the proposition out and named the number in the bill itself that each State was to have, and that is what it ought to do now. [Applause.]

But my friend from New York stands for a proposition to delegate this to the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. There is an argument as to the delegation of power there. I say the power we now give is the power we exercised in 1910. We apportioned 48 Representatives first and then took the 387 and allocated them according to population. We are not doing any different with this bill than we did in 1910 and then in 1920.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, absolutely. We knew what the population was then. We worked it out, and worked it out ourselves, in accordance with the statistics; but this does not propose to do that. It is to turn it over to an executive officer. I think the gentleman from Kansas deserves the thanks of the House for calling attention to the situation which manifestly will be created by the language of the bill if unchanged. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Apropos of the suggestion as to the 1910 apportionment, is it not true that Congress, with the statistics before it, did exercise the power arbitrarily as between some of the States when there was controversy as to which State had the major fraction? Now, this bill delegates to the Secretary of Commerce the same arbitrary power that Congress exercised in 1910.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know that I ought to do so, but I will ask for about three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know that one who occupies the position I do upon this question ought to be trespassing too much in the matter of amendments; but I think the expression in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas will leave the situation very hazy, very uncertain, and I think the matter could be reached better, if anyone cares to do this, by striking out, beginning in line 5, page 2, all after the word "made" down to the end of the section, in line 11, and inserting "by apportioning this number among the several States—each State to have at least one Member—according to their respective numbers as shown by such census by the method known as the method of major fractions."

I offer that suggestion——

